He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 40, International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, of Denver, Colo., praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of Local Union No. 31, Commercial Telegraphers' Union, of Denver, Colo., remonstrating against any extension in the time of the present nine-hour law for railroad telegraphers, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BURNHAM presented petitions of the Rockingham County Christian Conference, and of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Epping, all in the State of New Hampshire, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the Department of New Hampshire, United Spanish War Veterans, praying for the enactment of legislation to authorize the Secretary of War to issue discarded arms to camps of the United Spanish War Veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FLINT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9205) to make the provisions of an act of Congress approved February 28, 1891 (26 Stats., 796), applicable to the Territory of New Mexico, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WETMORE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 906) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Rochester, in the State of New Hampshire, reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BOURNE, from the Committee on Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5530) to establish a fish-hatching and fish-culture station at Strawberry Island, Point Judith Pond, Rhode Island, reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4797) for the care and preservation of The Hermitage, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 6) directing the selection of a site for the erection of a bronze statue in Washington, D. C., in honor of John Witherspoon, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WHYTE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3405) to amend an act to authorize the Baltimore and Washington Transit Company, of Maryland, to enter the District of Columbia, approved June 8, 1896, reported it without amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14772) prescribing what shall constitute a legal cord of wood in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on the Philippines, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5262) to repeal an act approved April 30, 1906, entitled "An act to regulate shipping in trade between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes," and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4703) to provide for the leasing of allotted Indian lands for mining purposes, reported it without amendment.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. JOSEPH RIVER, MICHIGAN.

Mr. PILES. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 17227) to authorize the city of St. Joseph, Mich., to construct a bridge across the St. Joseph River at or near its mouth. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] to the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARE OF INSANE IN ALASKA.

Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on Territories I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4712) to provide for the care of persons adjudged insane in the Territory of Alaska, and I submit a report thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] to the bill.

Mr. FULTON. I ask that the bill may be given present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CARTER, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the care of persons adjudged insane in the district of Alaska."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PENROSE introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5800) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth S. Taylor;

A bill (S. 5801) granting an increase of pension to William H. Hotham; and

A bill (S. 5802) granting a pension to Annie Wilt.

Mr. WETMORE intrduced a bill (S. 5803) granting an increase of pension to Benoni Lewis, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McLAURIN introduced a bill (S. 5822) for the relief of the heirs of Mrs. Elizabeth Hynes, deceased, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DICK introduced a bill (S. 5823) for the erection of a memorial structure at Fort Recovery, Ohio, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. CLAPP introduced a bill (S. 5824) for the relief of John T. McKeon, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. RAYNER introduced a bill (S. 5825) for the relief of St.

Augustine's Roman Catholic Church, of Williamsport, Md., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5826) granting a pension to Thomas Hyland; and

A bill (S. 5827) granting a pension to George Dobler (with accompanying papers).

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas introduced a bill (S. 5828) for the relief of the heirs of Augustus H. Johnson, sr., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 to enable the Public Printer to print the original of each and every roll of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. FORAKER submitted an amendment to appropriate $2,500 for compensation of chief of division of printing, and $2,000 for one chief of division, office of Secretary Department of Commerce and Labor, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO OMNIBUS-CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. PENROSE submitted six amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15372, known as the "omnibus-claims bill," which were referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HALE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15372, known as the "omnibus-claims bill," which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

GRAZING UPON PUBLIC LANDS.

On motion of Mr. WARREN, it was Ordered, That 2,000 extra copies of the bill (S. 5431) providing for the control of grazing upon the public lands in the arid States and Territories of the United States, and for other purposes, be printed for the use of the Senate.

LANDS IN MONTANA AND IDAHO.

Mr. CARTER. I submit a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to report to the Senate the number of acres of land examined and classified in the State of Montana under and in conformity with the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the examination and classification of certain mineral lands in the States of Montana and Idaho," approved February 26, 1895, the acreage of such classifications approved, and the acreage remaining unapproved by the Secretary of the Interior, and also the number of protests or contests filed in the Interior Department against such classifications subsequent to the period prescribed in the respective published notices provided by said act and the area of land involved in such protests or contests.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to make an inquiry. I was not paying attention at the time the reading of the resolution was begun. I should like to inquire just the purpose of it.

Mr. CARTER. The purpose of the resolution is made obvious by its phraseology.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the resolution be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. HEYBURN. I understand from hearing read that part which I had not heard before that a report is called for only as to lands in Montana. I ask the Senator if he would have any objection to including the lands in Idaho, inasmuch as they were practically a part of the same transaction?

Mr. CARTER. I shall be glad to accept an amendment to the resolution such as is proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move to strike out the words "State of Montana" and insert the words "States of Montana and Idaho."

Mr. CARTER. I desire to add the word "separately," so that each State will be set forth separately.

Mr. HEYBURN. I accept that modification.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the words "State of Montana" and insert the words "States of Montana and Idaho separately."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

SCHOOLS AT ARMY POSTS.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I have had some correspondence with the Secretary of War with reference to educational facilities at the various military posts. I have here a copy of my letter to the Secretary of War and his reply and a statement which has been compiled with great care by the Department, showing the number of children at these posts and the facilities now provided for the children of noncommissioned officers and enlisted men. I move that it be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS AT LANDER, WYO.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4064) to provide for a term of United States circuit and district courts at Lander, Wyo.

The amendment was, in line 10, after the word "place," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That until a public building is provided on the site now owned by the Government in said town of Lander a place shall be furnished for holding the said courts, at an expense to the Government of the United States not to exceed $300 annually.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 17055. An act to validate certain acts of the thirty-seventh legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Territories.

H. R. 17220. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Fayette Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River, Pennsylvania, from a point in the borough of Brownsville, Fayette County, to a point in the borough of West Brownsville, Washington County," approved April 23, 1906, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKING LAWS.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is desirous of speaking upon the banking bill, and he wishes to go on at this time. If there is no objection, I would be glad to have that bill laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3023) to amend the national banking laws.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the American people in the final analysis are a conservative people, but at times they lose their heads and plunge into speculation, live beyond a reasonable standard, and expand even legitimate business far beyond conservative limits. Whenever this is done trouble ensues, just as it has in our recent unfortunate money panic.

There is nothing inherently weak in American business methods. The present trouble, as I see it, is the breaking down of our credit system and the disarrangement and embarrassment of our financial fabric. Restore confidence and credit and let the people live within their income, and a reaction will set in as sure as the sun will rise to-morrow morning. The extent to which the reaction will come depends upon what injury has been done the business interests of our country as a result of our credit and financial embarrassment.

No one questions the fact that the American people have been under a business tension too great for safety. Our railroads were overworked; our manufacturing institutions were unable to supply demands made upon them; the cost of production kept mounting higher and higher; the wages of the laborer increased, and the expenditures of the people increased in a greater proportion than all else. Speculation was rife and men wanted to make a fortune in a day. These are some of the causes that brought about the present conditions.

For one I am thankful that the recent money panic, seeing that it was certain to come, occurred at a time when crops were good and the business institutions of our country, with a few rotten exceptions, were on a solid foundation.

Mr. President, it is our duty as Senators to take notice of these ever-recurring money disturbances, learn their cause, and, if possible, pass such legislation as will prevent them in the future. Can this be done? I certainly think so; at least, I believe the causes of these panics can be reduced to a minimum.

The first thing is to correct the evils existing in our present rigid currency system. Have not conditions in the monetary world in the last few months convinced every Senator that our currency system and method of national finance are lacking in essential features when an emergency arises? Of all the requirements made upon a government, such as the protection of the lives and liberties of the people, the protection of their property and business interests, there is no one higher than the duty to provide for a circulating medium, or currency, which shall possess two positive elements: First, absolute security; second, a capacity for expansion or contraction as may be demanded by the financial, commercial, and industrial needs of the people. Safety means money that has an unquestioned value the world over; and no money which does not meet this qualification will satisfy the American people.

In my judgment the provisions of the Aldrich bill, if enacted into law, will not only furnish an absolutely safe emergency currency, but will also provide for its expansion when a necessity exists, and the penalty rate of interest will compel its retirement as soon as the necessity is removed. I believe in an emergency currency, but not in an inflated currency.

As long as business is moving along in the usual manner we pay no attention to the machinery, for the usual manner is good. The usual thing with our people is a prosperity greater than that which falls to the lot of any other people on earth. It is natural to ascribe to the laws in force a prosperity existing while they are in force, forgetful of the fact that a country rich as ours is in natural endowments, broad as ours is in an area that affords room for all, settled as ours is by the most ingenious, the most alert, the most energetic, and the most progressive people on earth, that such a country will prosper without help from legislation and often in spite of restraint by legislation. As long as the machine is moving we are satisfied. We stop to mend it only when it breaks down, and then often we merely patch it up.

The panic last fall gave a demonstration of the need of amendment of our banking laws. Our money supply is all right in quality—every dollar of it is worth its face in gold. It is sufficient, too, in quantity under ordinary conditions; few claim that the supply is now too small. The country was never more prosperous than it had been for a number of years before the end of last summer. Our financial skies were of that limpid blue which suggested to the thoughtless who beheld them nothing beyond the perfect beauty of a perfect day. The financially weatherwise, however, looked up and recognized the portents of a coming storm. The coming of the storm at such a time caused surprise, but the only surprise should have been at its long delay. Nearly all panics are due to the same cause—men run wild by prosperity. Money flowed like water. Nearly every man was making more than he had ever made before in his life, and so was more able and more willing to pay high prices for anything he desired. In spite of a large increase of production, prices also increased, for the people were able to buy, and demand increased as rapidly as supply. Just such conditions always encourage men to take risks. Debt loses its terror. Success seems so certain that the necessity of providing against failure is little considered, failure seeming only a possibility and a possibility so remote. An era of prosperity is crowned by a cap of wild speculation, and the cap somehow permeates the mass and eats out the foundation and the whole structure crumbles. Men bought stocks that made their dividends, in some instances, no more than 2 per cent. They did not buy for the dividend, but because the stock was going up and they expected to sell to some one who would buy at a still higher price. Men bought these stocks and paid twice as much for them as they should have paid; banks loaned more money on them than they should have loaned. This helped to bring on the sudden collapse.

The panic is referred to as a "depositors' panic." It might also be called a "bankers' panic." Bankers can run on a bank more fatally than individual depositors can, though it does not take such a long line of them to withdraw a given sum of money. Bankers, as well as depositors, saw what was coming and tried to take care of themselves. A few banks failed because they had not been managed with proper care. The great majority of the banks of this country were pushed to the verge of failure because of the doubt and suspicion created, and forced to resort to the issuing of clearing-house certificates, unlawful in itself, but absolutely necessary to save the business interests of our country.

The panic of 1907 came when the country had the largest per capita of circulation it has ever had in its history. It also had the largest demand for money it had ever known. A larger volume of currency, issued without regard to the emergency, would have done no good. It would have been taken in the wild era of speculation that preceded the panic; and the runs that put most of the banks of the large cities on a clearing-house certificate basis would have been just as wild and just as persistent as they actually were.

What we need is not a larger volume of currency, but a currency that will come at the call of need and retire when it has done its work. To secure such a currency several plans have been proposed. Of these, I think the bill under consideration goes most directly to the point and gives better promise than any other at present proposed of accomplishing the desired end.

We need not consider the currency question at all, except as it is affected by an extraordinarily large demand for money. Provision must be made for putting out an extra supply when there is an extra demand.

Who is to know whether there is an extra demand for money? Naturally the one who encounters this demand—the banker who is called on to meet it. But should a bank be permitted to put out circulating notes whenever it sees fit? Certainly not. The United States Government, through its proper officials, should decide this question. I do not think one bank, or one thousand banks, should have power to increase or decrease the currency at will. This is a matter for the Government to decide, and it should decide it after looking at it from the standpoint, not of one bank, or of one thousand banks, but from the standpoint of the nation at large. Of course the nation at large is interested in seeing that the banks do not fail; for if the banks should fail the entire nation would suffer. The failure of one bank is liable to hurt ten times as many people as own its stock or have deposits in it. But the proper Government official should decide whether conditions justify an issue of emergency currency, and the bill reported by the Senate Committee on Finance leaves that decision to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury. I think it is much more proper that the Secretary of the Treasury should decide this question than that it should be left to the board of directors of a bank redemption agency—a body of private citizens representing not the Government, nor any part of it; not even all of one class, but only the bankers of a small portion of the country.

There has been a world of criticism of Government officials as to the distribution of Government deposits with banks of different sections. Secretary Cortelyou has been savagely attacked for his use of public funds to stop the recent panic. I wish to digress from the discussion of this bill long enough to say that I think his action in that emergency was wise, fair, and patriotic; and that, but for what he did, not only New York, but every State and city of this land would to-day be vastly poorer than it is. Taking a sectional view of the matter, I believed he saved a dollar for the West and for the South as well as for the North and for the East for every dime with which he fought the panic in New York. And I do not base my approval on the idea that Government deposits were equitably apportioned between the different sections of the country. It was no time to talk about such matters. The whole country was endangered by a financial crisis beginning at New York. New York was the place to rush relief, and as a western man I am thankful that Secretary Cortelyou acted so promptly and averted the awful consequences that would have befallen this nation from the Atlantic to the Pacific. No State would have escaped; no home in this broad land but what would have suffered, had he failed in his duty.

But this is a digression. The bill I am discussing proposes to apportion the relief equitably, if it is needed in different sections and there is not enough to go round. I think, however, the bill would be greatly improved if the limit were $1,000,000,000 instead of $500,000,000.

It is proposed that banks desiring emergency currency may get it with the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury by depositing with the Treasurer, or any assistant treasurer, of the United States, municipal or county bonds, or certain classes of railroad bonds; and that the bank may take out a circulation equal to 90 per cent of the market value of the State, county, or municipal bonds, and 75 per cent of the market value of any railroad bonds so used.

Many objections to this plan are urged—objections which do not strike me with much force. It is said the plan is a makeshift. So be it. A makeshift currency is precisely what we want. We wish it to come, stay as long as it is needed, and then go away as quickly and as quietly as possible. If that isn't a makeshift, what is?

It is said that the plan is devised in the interest of the eastern bondholders. Those who make this charge presume that the bondholders are eastern. What if the bondholders would gain by it? Would the people lose? Who would lose, and how would anybody lose? Would no one but the bondholder gain? Would not any State in the Union, any city, or any county, whose bonds would come under the provisions of this bill, gain when it offered its bonds for sale? The State, city, or municipality issuing the bonds would be able to borrow at a lower rate of interest after the passage of this bill than before. The benefit is not offered to New York alone, nor to the East alone. Utah, or any Western or Southern State, would enjoy it to fully as great an extent. If the bondholders would profit by the enhanced value of bonds already issued, their gain would be temporary and at nobody's expense. The permanent gain, which would be also at nobody's expense, would be distributed among the people of any State, county, or city that found it advisable to borrow money. But, as a matter of fact, there is more talk than anything else about this gain in the enhanced price of bonds. Whatever gain there might be would ultimately be divided among the people of borrowing communities, but there would be little increase in the value of bonds. These bonds would not be convertible into their face value in money through the issue of notes, as are United States bonds. They would not be convertible into money at all except in case of emergency; then they would be convertible only into 90 per cent of their face value, and that in a money that would be taxed 6 per cent. As a protection against emergency, these bonds would be a good investment, but no one would buy a thousand-dollar bond with the idea that he would get $40 a year on it and convert it into $900 of currency on which he would have to pay $54 a year tax.

The bank needing extra circulation would be put in a position to get as much of it as the provisions of the law would permit, and if that were not enough other neighboring banks would take out all allowed them and use it in the common defense. The banks at any threatened point would have an emergency currency limited only by the exactions of the law.

But it is said the Government should issue this money directly and not delegate this power to the banks. It would delegate to the banks no new power. It has already intrusted national banks with the power of issuing money. The change would be no innovation. It would be only a matter of detail. It would only enlarge the classes of bonds on which money could be issued. If the Government issued the money, how would it get it out? Through the daily payment of its obligations? That would be shelling the woods; it would not be shooting at the mark. The money would go into the general circulation where it was not needed; it would not go where it would be needed. To get the money to the place of need it would be necessary to lend it to the bank needing it. Well, what would be the difference between lending the money at 6 per cent interest to the bank, secured by such bonds as this bill proposes, and permitting the bank upon giving the same security to issue the bills itself and pay on them a tax of 6 per cent? Mr. President, it is contended that the Government might lose. Certainly, if State, county, or city bonds should, between the setting and the rising of the sun, lose more than one-tenth of their value, or railroad first-mortgage bonds lose more than one-fourth of theirs in the same time, the Government would then be threatened with loss. It would only be threatened, for it could not lose until all the resources of the bank had become exhausted. No one ever heard of such change in State, county, or municipal bonds as would wipe out one-tenth of their value before they could be sold; so the idea may be dismissed, not as improbable, not as impossible, but as inconceivable. If the inconceivable should become the real, what then? A tax of four-fifths of 1 per cent on the deposits held in the national banks in 1907 would have raised a fund more than sufficient to pay all the losses to depositors occasioned by failure of national banks since the national banking system has been in force. A tax of 2 cents on the $100 deposits would pay the average year's losses—a postage stamp put on a letter containing a hundred-dollar check.

If we stop here, we will leave the subject with an exaggerated idea of the risk, for the object of this bill is to decrease risk of loss by failure of banks, and if it only feebly accomplishes its purpose it would cut this risk in half and reduce the denomination of the stamp representing the loss on a hundred dollars from 2 cents to 1 cent.

There would be no possibility of loss on these bonds except by a change which would suddenly wipe out the margin of 10 or 25 per cent, as the case might be, for the Aldrich bill empowers the Treasury to require other securities, or a strengthening of the securities on deposit, in case a shrinkage of values should render this necessary.

Mr. President, I think a great defect in our banking laws now in force is found in their requirements as to the reserve to be held by national banks outside of reserve cities. These banks are required to keep a reserve equal to 15 per cent of their deposits, but are permitted to keep three-fifths of this on deposit in banks of reserve or central reserve cities. This leaves only two-fifths of the 15 per cent—only 6 per cent of the deposits—required in the vaults of the bank whose deposits the reserve is designed to protect. The Aldrich bill, as it was originally drawn, required these banks to hold in their own vaults at least two-thirds of this, or 10 per cent of their deposits instead of 6 per cent. This would have been an improvement in the law as it now stands, but it was stricken out. I offered on February 24 a proposed amendment to the bill, as follows:

That on and after January 1, 1909, in addition to the 15 per cent reserve required by law to be held by the national banking associations, all such associations shall be required to have on hand an additional 5 per cent of the aggregate amount of its deposits in all respects in lawful money of the United States, or in bonds mentioned in this act.

This would, so far as the safety of deposits is concerned, increase the reserve requirements to 20 per cent, of which the banks would be required to hold eleven-twentieths in their own vaults. The money, however, would not be idle, for the banks could, if they desired, keep one-fourth of their entire reserve in interest-bearing bonds. These bonds, while drawing interest for the banks, would be at once convertible into cash if occasion should demand, holding the entire reserve in cash. The Secretary of the Treasury, under the present provisions of the Aldrich bill, would keep posted and keep banks advised as to the value of the bonds. The bills that are to be issued on the deposit of bonds provided in this act will be prepared beforehand and deposited at the subtreasuries throughout the country ready to be sent to any bank depositing the required bonds. The bank could, by telegraph, inform the Treasury officials of the character of the bonds on which it desired to take out circulation, and the Comptroller of the Treasury, by telegraph to the subtreasury nearest this bank, could authorize the sending of the bills. A reserve held in bonds of this class could be converted into cash in thirty-six hours, for there is scarcely a bank in the United States that can not be reached from the nearest subtreasury in that time. The 5 per cent of deposits held in deposits of this kind would then be available as money in thirty-six hours. The 6 per cent, or any part of the 15 per cent held in the vaults of the bank, would be available immediately. I think that, without some such plan for strengthening the reserve in emergency, the requirements of the law as it stands to-day are far too low.

If 15 per cent is needed for reserve, surely 6 per cent will not answer. The 9 per cent deposited in the banks of large cities would be available in a day or two when there was no use for the money. Reserves, however, are not kept just to keep the money looking new. They are held as provision against emergencies, and that part of them that is not in the vaults of the bank is apt to be unavailable at the very time it is needed. It proved unavailable in the recent panic. The country bank that had three-fifths of its reserve in New York could not get it when it needed it. For all practical purposes it had a reserve of only 6 per cent of its deposits, and with that small amount had to face a panic. But for this fact I doubt whether the panic would have been so widespread, and whole sections of the country would not have been compelled to resort to clearing-house certificates.

I have no sympathy with the bitter attacks that have been directed against the bankers of New York City because of their failure to pay back their reserves when they were demanded; I have no sympathy with an attack on any man for failing to do what he can not do, providing his actions in placing himself in that position were within the limits of the law and morally right. The New York banks found it impossible to pay back this money on demand. If they had paid all their depositors while a dollar lasted, the majority of the depositors would have called after the last dollar was gone. A financial cyclone would have swept the country, compared to which that which did strike it would have been only a breeze. The banks had to protect their depositors against each other. In order to pay all, they had to delay payment to those who were clamorous.

The country bankers had no more claims than any other depositors. Generally they received interest on money they kept on deposit in New York. They sent it there to get interest on it. They knew that New York banks were not paying them interest on money to look at it in their vaults. They knew these banks would be compelled to use the money in order to pay interest on daily balances. Of course, ordinarily the country banks could get it back on demand and borrow additional amounts in case of need. But it is unjust to blame men for failing to do the impossible in time of panic because it would be possible in ordinary times.

The amendment I propose would strengthen the reserves of country banks by adding one-third to the legal requirements and nearly doubling the amount required by law to be kept in their vaults. At the same time it would not add to their idle capital, for they could keep this added third of the reserve invested in interest-paying bonds.

The bill before the Senate proposes amendment; it does not propose revolution. In my opinion it is amendment and not revolution that our banking laws need. Men who, generally speaking, entertain diametrically opposite views on finance are often found standing on the common ground of opposition to our national banking system. To those who insist that the Government should abandon the banking field I say that the Government is not in the banking field; but as the prosperity of the nation is so vitally affected by our banking methods the Government should regulate them, and it does well, since it can do so without loss or risk of loss, in throwing its strength behind our national-bank circulation. If I am told that a national-bank note is nothing but a promise to pay, I say in reply that the Government by indorsing this promise has given it, in the public mind, the force of a payment.

It has been urged that the Government, instead of issuing bonds on which the banks buying them could issue notes, should itself have issued the notes, thereby saving the interest for which the bonds called. To discuss this properly, we must remember the circumstances under which the bonded indebtedness of this country was originally incurred. The nation was engaged in a war, the most destructive of values of any the world has ever known. This war, with its necessary issues of paper money, had driven coin almost out of circulation. With the issue of greenbacks nine-tenths of the coin went out of circulation, leaving only $25,000,000 in circulation in 1863. At the same time $312,481,418 in greenbacks and $257,912,620 in miscellaneous currency, consisting of notes of the bank of the United States, State bank notes, demand notes, and fractional currency were all the circulation. The total circulation was $595,394,038, of which only $25,000,000 was coin, and even in this small amount the coin was not circulating with the paper. It was the money of the Pacific coast, then less accessible to the Atlantic coast, where paper money was circulating, than China is now. The public debt was increased between 1862 and 1863 to the extent of more than $600,000,000; from 1863 to 1864, nearly $600,000,000 more; and in another year, nearly a billion. During these three years the public debt increased between twenty-one and twenty-two hundred million. What would the money of the United States have been worth then, if the suggestion of printing money, instead of borrowing it, had been followed? Even in the amount it was issued, it was greatly depreciated. If it had been quadrupled, it would have been worthless.

If currency instead of bonds had been issued then, the Government could not have bought half as much with a dollar as it received for the bonds, even if the money it received had been precisely like that it would have issued; for by selling bonds it kept the total down to one-fourth of what it would have been if it had issued the money instead of borrowing it.

Under the circumstances the Government permitted the banks taking the bonds to issue circulation on depositing the bonds with the Treasurer equal to three-fourths of the face value of the bonds so issued. The banks at that time did furnish a part of the credit that was behind this form of currency, and the Government secured better interest rates on account of the privilege it gave of issuing notes and on account of its promise to pay in coin.

But why not issue money instead of bonds now? In time of peace bonds are not apt to be issued except to provide money for the payment of other bonds that mature. For this purpose money could not be issued because the bonds call for payment in coin, and the men who hold them could not be expected to exchange an interest-bearing promise to pay for another promise to pay bearing no interest. But the fact that the banks now can issue notes equal in volume to the value of the bonds deposited gives our Government, when it borrows, money at a lower rate of interest than is charged any other government on earth. It pays less than 2 per cent, and this not only benefits the people in the cheapness of money to the Government, which is the collective people, but it also gives them cheaper money as individuals. Of this Mr. Charles H. Treat, Treasurer of the United States, says:

> It is a matter of record that when the Government was paying 7.3 per cent interest for its loans, individual accommodation from banks and money lenders was generally on a minimum basis of 8 per cent and upward; and it is an indisputable fact that as rapidly as the Government placed its loans at a lower rate of interest so did the interest charges decline correspondingly on all commercial and real estate transactions. Thus it must be admitted, although it is not often recognized, that the national bank has been of incalculable benefit to all kinds of borrowers in reducing the rate of interest on loans and also in saving a heavy annual interest charge to the people. In 1864 the annual interest charge of the Government amounted to $53,685,421.09, while to-day it is but $24,590,944.10.

I wish to state that the Treasurer has called my attention to the fact that the annual interest charge of the Government for the year 1864 was $78,853,487, instead of the amount stated above. He could have continued his comparison for the two years following and the gain would have shown vastly greater, for the annual interest charge for the year 1865 was $137,742,617, and for the year 1866, $146,068,196. The interest-bearing debt of the Government in the year 1864 was $1,359,930,764 and for the year 1866, $2,332,331,918. Contemplate the saving to the Government on this vast sum with a reduction of interest rate of even 2 per cent. It would amount to $46,646,638, or nearly twice the amount of our present annual interest paid. In further support of my claim that the national-bank system has reduced the interest on our national indebtedness, I call your attention to the fact that Germany's 3 per cent consols are selling to-day at 83, or 17 per cent below par.

Is Mr. Treat correct in his opinion that the low rate of interest paid by the Government causes a lower rate to be charged individuals than would be charged if the Government paid more? Much weight must be given to the mere opinion expressed by a man of Mr. Treat's ability. He is speaking on a subject to which he has given years of thought. But the weight that Mr. Treat's words have, merely as coming from an authority on the subject discussed, can be reenforced by reasons that the average man can understand.

By reason of their right to issue notes to the amount of the bonds they buy, the national banks can lend money to the Government at a very low rate of interest. More than this, the ability to issue notes enables them to lend to individuals at a much lower rate than they would otherwise charge. They can afford to lend money to individuals at a low rate, and what men in business can afford to do they do, where a number of them are competing with each other. If a borrower must get his money from one bank or do without, the bank can make him pay as much as it thinks he can afford to pay. If, however, there are a number of banks from which he can borrow, he can make the bank lend him money as cheaply as its officials think it can afford to lend it.

When the Government paid 7.3 per cent interest, Mr. Treat says individuals paid a minimum of 8 per cent. They probably paid then an average of 10 per cent. Now, taking the country as a whole, they probably pay about 4 per cent. If this system has cut interest charges down from 7 to 2 per cent for the Government, what has it done for the country? Not counting bonds and not counting any loans except such as were made by banks, the banks of this country have loaned out now nearly $11,000,000,000. Ten per cent of this would be eleven hundred millions, 5 per cent would be five hundred and fifty millions, and the saving by the difference in rate would be five hundred and fifty millions. This is nearly twenty times as much as the interest the Government pays annually. If the interest rate is only one-tenth cheaper than it would have been but for the influence of the Government rate, it represents an annual saving twice as great as the interest payments on bonds.

Mr. President, I think our present currency system properly amended will prove much better than an asset currency. There is too great a possibility of expansion in the asset-currency plan and too great a possibility of fluctuation in the supply. We need to take the proper precautions to avoid panics if we can; and if we can not avoid them, we should take steps to combat them successfully.

What limit would the law set to an asset currency issued by the banks? A limit that is not fixed by law is not fixed at all. If it is left to the judgment of men, it is left under varying control. An asset currency might be expanded before the vital need of expansion came; and if it were so expanded, it would only add weight to make the final crash more destructive. The demand for money has for years been growing faster than the supply, though the supply has been growing rapidly. An asset currency would have met this demand as it increased day by day. The recent panic was caused by a panic in all lines that banished caution and invited recklessness in its stead. If the expansion had been greater, the panic would have been more severe.

We have now a currency of various forms kept at equality by interchangeability for gold. This interchangeability is virtually a guaranty by the Government and could not be otherwise guaranteed. Not one bank, nor all the banks, could make this guaranty good. The American people are accustomed to the idea that the Government guarantees the equality of value of all moneys in circulation. How would they look on a currency issued by the banks without Government guaranty? Their opinion of this money would fix its value. If they were not willing to take it they could present it for redemption and its issue would add nothing to the volume of circulation. It would only add to the load that gold has to carry. If the money were circulated at a point inconvenient for redemption, it would circulate at a discount, and the public would hoard gold and such forms of money as were kept at par with gold. Men who receive this money in small quantities would not send it to redemption agencies themselves, but they would pay their bills with it and deposit it in banks. Men would cease to use gold and cease to deposit it in banks. If the people should prove doubtful of this money, it would increase the demand for gold by being presented for redemption and would decrease the supply of gold for redemption purposes by the tendency to hoard it whenever received instead of keeping it in circulation.

Now, we have all forms of currency passing everywhere with equal value, paper being preferred to gold because it is more convenient to carry. I think an experiment with a form of currency differing radically from the forms to which the people are accustomed would prove risky.

Mr. President, I do not favor a guaranty of bank deposits by the Government, because I do not think it necessary, and I do not believe that the Government—the whole people—should go security for individual interests. We should avoid such a policy on grounds of principle. If the Government should undertake to guarantee one business, it would be called on to guarantee another. The precedent would be set and the scramble for political favors and political advantage would be begun. Such a policy would put all banks on terms of equality, so far as the public is concerned, regardless of how they were managed. The deposits in a bank are now an expression of confidence in its management. The bank which has won the confidence of the public by capable and honest management has the right to the advantage it has so honorably gained. It is useless to try to sneer away this idea. Of course, if all banks were taxed to raise a fund to guarantee deposits, the best-managed banks, which would derive no benefit, would have to pay as well as the poorly managed banks, in whose interest such a plan would operate. I will admit that if this plan were made one of voluntary insurance instead of taxation, all would probably go into it. The best-managed banks would be placed at a disadvantage if their depositors were not insured while those of other banks were. This plan would place a premium on mismanagement and be an injustice to men who have won confidence by lives of integrity.

Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to an article presented at the annual banquet of the Cincinnati Bankers' Club February 8, 1908, by Andrew Jay Frame on the subject of insuring bank deposits. It is not long, and I will read it for the information of the Senate:

HISTORY CONDEMNS BANK-DEPOSIT INSURANCE.

Two years ago I wrote an article declaring that the suggestion to insure bank deposits was "purely theoretical, impractical, revolutionary, and fatal to conservatism."

I reiterate and emphasize the truth of that assertion, notwithstanding good men are espousing the cause in all sincerity. The theory certainly looks ethically fine, but so do many other fallacies. Many patent rights look tempting, but parting with cash to prove their practicability, in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred, is the penalty paid to find out they won't work. Does not history furnish a beacon light to guide us in solving this momentous problem? Let us see. Permit me to quote, as briefly as possible to cover the points, from John J. Knox's History of Banking, as to the

which was enacted by the New York legislature in 1829. One member proposed a fund "to be raised from an annual payment of all the banks according to capital, to be applied to the payment of the debts of such banks as shall fail, to go on accumulating until it shall amount to $500,000 or $1,000,000. When diminished by payments, it was to be brought up by further contributions, etc." His plan called for bank commissioners, under a carefully prepared banking law, to regulate payment of capital, limit loans, etc., to insure conservative banking. Later, a committee was appointed to draft a bill in conformity to the plans. The report, in summing up, said: "The committee flatter themselves that they have hit on a measure that will possess the invaluable recommendation of creating a complete and infallible security to creditors, and will impart a solidity and currency to the bank paper of the State not equaled by any in the world."

After a fight for its passage, with eloquent perorations, which could be likened to those of the present day, as to the ethical beauties of the plan, the objectors recording dissenting views, all of which shows history repeating itself, the bill became a law.

The distinctive features of the law were that all new banks and old ones rechartered should pay to the State comptroller and treasurer one-half of 1 per cent on capital stock annually until a fund of 3 per cent was accumulated.

Three bank commissioners were provided to supervise and examine each bank once in four months and, in addition, make special examinations if deemed necessary. They were not allowed to be personally interested in any bank. Other rigid regulations were of a character to insure conservative management and limit failures. What was the result?

Knox says: "The stocks of the new banks were sought for with much eagerness, both by investors at home and from other States. The latter were induced to purchase because of the popularity and supposed safety of the safety-fund system and the former by the hope that the demand from abroad would force the stock to a premium, which they could realize by selling out soon. Contests for the control of the institutions had the effect of increasing the number of subscriptions, and the commissioners speak of the number of applications for new acts of incorporation as far exceeding any prudent calculations of prudent investment."

"The stock of the safety-fund banks was distributed by agents selected from the neighborhood of the institutions and was in many instances divided among the political friends or favorites of the agents."

With all this juggling as to who should have the pie, and the claims of perfection, Knox says the bank notes, even, were subject to a serious discount at times, and distrust also occurred.

By 1832, on account of the large increase of currency and the establishment of new banks, the expansion helped "a general overtrading in the country, somewhat encouraged by the facilities afforded by those banks."

In 1834–35 a financial crisis, on account of overtrading and excessive bank issues, was weathered.

In 1837 specie payments were suspended and the "free banking law" was also passed, which indicates clearly the safety-fund law was not satisfactory.

Knox says, because of the guaranty fund, "a fictitious credit seems to have been given to the chartered institutions, which was used by them in recklessly contracting debts for the emolument of their managers." These facts suggest grave danger to us.

The safety-fund banks survived till 1841, when ten out of the whole ninety then existing failed, and with their fall the doom of the infallible safety-fund law was at hand, because the fund was seriously inadequate to pay the debts of the failed banks. It was claimed the fund would have paid the notes outstanding, which were not secured, but would not pay the deposits.

In 1842 the law as to insuring the deposits was repealed.

In 1845 the Comptroller reported that the losses chargeable to the safety fund—

Aggregated	$2,519,170
Paid on account of losses	1,502,170
Still to be provided for	1,017,000

The assessments continued to be made to make up this deficiency, entailing losses to holders of claims ranging from 20 per cent to 25 per cent, caused by delay in making final payments. The last of the losses were not wiped out till 1866.

With the beacon light of such historical facts to guide us, as against plausible, well-meaning theories, can our statesmen plunge this country into another and wider sea of troubles by adopting again an unsuccessful experiment discarded by the great State of New York?

Again, I wonder if the bankers of the country have given a second thought as to what it means for each bank to take from its assets 1 per cent of its deposits, as the Oklahoma law or the Davidson bill in Congress requires, as a guaranty fund and as an indorsement of every other bank's liabilities, big and little, in New York or Arizona, whether conservatively or recklessly managed. Let us diagnose the case a little further.

If we apply the Oklahoma or the Davidson bill to all the banks in Wisconsin, both national and State, the banks in Milwaukee alone will have to deposit into the insurance fund—

About	$600,000
The country banks	1,900,000
All the banks in the State about	2,500,000

If this fund is in cash, does the bank paying it in lose the income from it, and if in securities, will they get over 3 per cent interest on it? Two million five hundred thousand dollars would not go far toward liquidating $16,000,000 of liabilities of the First National Bank of Milwaukee in 1905, which as certain as fate would have suspended because of deception in its management which even the watchful eye of the examiners had not prevented, were it not for the fact that manly men pledged their fortunes to prevent it. If that bank had suspended, the banks of Wisconsin would have had a shake-up that no State bank insurance could allay. The 1841 experience in New York would have been repeated in Wisconsin, under conditions clearly violating the rigid national-bank act, under which the deceptions were practiced.

In 1896 the National Bank of Illinois, in Chicago, failed for a sum approximating $22,000,000; in 1905 the Chicago National Bank for over $20,000,000, both under deceptive acts, in spite of rigid supervision.

A State deposit fund from all the banks in the whole State of Illinois on those dates would have paid but a fraction of the liabilities of those banks.

The failure of the Fidelity National Bank of Cincinnati in 1887, under the deceptive violation of the bank act, would have proved a like fate for Ohio.

I could cite similar parallels in the great cities of Montana, California, Colorado, Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Virginia, Tennessee, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and last but not least, New York City, where, under failures in the last three months aggregating over $125,000,000, the world received a jar that history will not fail to record. Is there rhyme or reason in compelling the country banks to stand for losses under pyramid banking and high finance in the great cities?

If insurance failed in 1841 to keep banks from destruction, why will it succeed in these latter days? "He who will not profit by the experience of the past gets knowledge when trouble overtakes him."

The Davidson bill in Congress, if passed, will take from the national banks 1 per cent of their total deposits, or about $60,000,000. This means approximately 7 per cent of the total capital of the banks. What is to be done with it—keep it in cash or invest it in 2 per cent United States or high-class State, county, or municipal bonds? If invested in bonds, and large failures occur under panic conditions, how will they be turned quickly into cash to pay off the depositors?

If deposited in banks, can favoritism be avoided, and would not the call for cash to liquidate large failures withdraw from reserves and aggravate troubles? If 1 per cent of all the deposits in the banks of the United States were held in cash to-day, it would require every dollar of it to liquidate the deposits in suspended banks. New York City alone would require $94,000,000.

It is a fine theory, but will it work?

If each banker would figure out what a hole 1 per cent of deposits will make in his bank's capital; how much his bank will experience in loss of income on the transaction; how much he will be helping to back up the high financiers under failures such as I have enumerated; the sober, thoughtful banker will think twice before he leaps. Further, to my mind, the statesman who would compel any bank to help pay the losses of any other bank in his own or any other State would put upon the statute books a law that could be fairly characterized as legalized robbery. Its constitutionality can seriously be doubted.

Such a law is not to be compared to fire insurance, because that is purely voluntary on the part of both. The insurance company knows to a mathematical certainty the probable losses by fire under the varied but normal conditions, eliminating as far as possible the moral hazard which is always considered. Even in this the great fires of Chicago, Boston, Baltimore, and Frisco—which might be likened to panics compared to the subject under discussion—upset the average-loss theory, and many bankrupt companies resulted.

In case of deposit insurance, the moral hazard, the incompetent hazard, and the high-financier hazard have not, nor can they, be eliminated wholly, as has been proved, although the banks were under careful supervision and control under the safety-fund system as well as under ours of the present day.

These extraordinary risks undoubtedly have prevented expert insurance men from entering the whole field as proposed. The Kansas legislature lately showed its good sense in leaving the matter to be settled between the insurance companies and the banks in their individual capacities.

The New York bank commissioners said, "Because of the popularity and supposed safety of the system, the number of applications for new acts of incorporation far exceeded any prudent calculation of profitable investment." Is human nature any different to-day than then? Will not insured banks multiply so fast as to disorganize the whole business? Will not promoters induce gullible people (and the woods are full of them) to put up necessary capital, because there was "millions of it?" And competition itself, regardless of the present pirates—who, like the poor, are always with us—would vastly increase the fierce competition for business by selling exchange for nothing, bribing customers in a hundred ways in order to increase their business, forcing every bank to pay 3 per cent or upward on open accounts, certificates of deposits etc., or lose their deposits, because the insurance clause would appear to make the promoted as safe as the conservative bank.

The promoter's bank would pay higher rates for deposits, because it would also loan at higher rates on shady collaterals, whereas the conservative banker would turn down such loans absolutely. Thus the conservative banker would lose his business and at the same time be compelled to indorse his competitor's recklessness.

Again, with loans at the ordinary average rates for many years, it is impossible for commercial banks to pay 3 per cent on total deposits and live. National banks do not now average 2 per cent paid on total deposits. If they paid 3 per cent all dividends would be wiped out, for this difference would mean a loss of 1 per cent to 1½ per cent on a total of over six thousand million dollars of deposits.

This small margin approximates their average annual net profits.

Under the insurance plan the innocent depositor would not use any discretion as to the integrity and ability of the bankers with whom he deposited his money until he realized to his sorrow his error when a panic struck the country and his losses would be compounded in consequence.

All history proves that rigid laws regulating human conduct do not bring perfection. Banks under good laws sometimes fail, because their managers can not be called to account until they have done something radically wrong. Indorse the promoter and he will be optimistically swimming beyond conservative depths continually. Theoretically you can weed such promoters out, but practically you can do so only after serious damage is done.

Listen to another bit of history, which might be termed "insuring deposits," to wit:

THE AUSTRALIAN BRANCH BANKING SYSTEM.

The American Encyclopedia for 1893 says that "out of 28 banks, with 1,700 branches, 13 of them, with 800 or 900 branches, failed in six months ending May, 1893, for the stupendous sum of £90,000,000." When we consider that the banking power of Australia was then but one-sixth that of the United States we can begin to realize the colossal calamities that indorsing one for another, as is done under the branch banking system, leads to at times.

These facts disprove the absurd theory that insurance will prevent panics.

High ideals are certainly commendable, but perfection is impossible. "Man that is born of woman is of few days and full of trouble." As far as safety to depositors is concerned, the national banking system is the highest ideal as compared with that of any progressive nation on earth. To raise this standard still higher all should take to heart the eminently sound suggestion of Comptroller Ridgely in a late report to Congress, wherein he says: "I am convinced by experience that with careful and efficient work on the part of the examiner, aided by intelligent and thorough letters of criticism based on the examiner's reports, any board of bank directors of fair intelligence with an honest desire to obey the law can, by cooperating with the examiner and the Comptroller, make the failure of the bank practically, if not absolutely, impossible."

Apply the national currency act to the State, savings, and private banks, and also to trust companies, applying regulations consistent with differences of conditions and methods of operating, and losses will be eliminated as far as it is practicable for human ingenuity to accomplish it, and without doing violence to the conservative banker by compelling him to indorse for the nonconservative under a compulsory law. Such a law in effect is pure socialism, and every thoughtful statesman should be careful not to start this great country down grade under that régime, which generally results in anarchy.

I have no doubt the advocates of the plan have done so with the intent to subserve the highest interests of the general welfare, but I am firmly convinced that the plan is impracticable, outrageously unjust in its operation, and would work a general revolution in city and country alike. Conservatives would flee for safety and the reckless would soon land us on the shoals of financial distress. After mature deliberation, with historical failure to enlighten our pathway, can we afford to try the experiment? I think not.

Waukesha, Wis., February, 1908.

ANDREW J. FRAME.

Mr. President, let me pause to say that I expect to live to see the day that Oklahoma will regret that she ever passed a law providing for the guaranteeing of bank deposits. The Senator from Oklahoma may belittle the past history of this class of legislation and fall back on the statements made by him in his able address of February 25 last, in which he says:

To-day we have the most perfect banking system in the world in the national banks of this country, I think. Their losses to their creditors during the last nine years have averaged only about $1 in seventy thousand a year. There were losses of eighty-five thousand per annum only, out of nearly six hundred million of deposits; and shall we go back and point to 1830, the days of our great grandfathers, and have it said that we shall not avail ourselves of modern knowledge and modern appliances? We have improved since that day, and we can improve still more. * * *

But everybody familiar with the banking business knows that the primary condition of a deposit is the belief of the depositor that the bank is safe. * * * A man would not deposit where he had doubt; and if a bank were in the hands of a reckless, extravagant man, the common people can be relied on to find that out, and no such man can attract deposits against a man more honorable and more worthy of trust.

If, under our present system, the depositors in our national banks were subject to frequent and heavy losses, then could I see some excuse for supporting a provision guaranteeing deposits; but it does seem to me that the reasons above given are good reasons for not changing our present banking system, and particularly so in regard to banks themselves being responsible to the people for their daily deposits. Why should a depositor ask in what hands the bank may be, whether in the hands of a reckless, extravagant man, or a conservative and saving man; why should he inquire if the bank is safe, if his deposits are guaranteed and the guaranty is good?

Mr. President, if I read history aright, especially that part of it with reference to our finances, our great grandfathers were conservative, cautious, and a saving class of men. The modern speculator was unknown, the frenzied financier was unborn, the plunging banker was unheard of, and with all this conservatism, this caution, this saving, and economical life, and without these modern financial wreckers, history tells us that insuring of liabilities of a bank by a State proved an utter failure.

Mr. President, we are considering a question that is first in importance among the questions that affect the American people. We are acting for a nation that is first among the nations of the earth. We should put aside partisanship, sectionalism, and pride of opinion, for it is one question that can not be intelligently considered from a party, a sectional, or a personal standpoint. Whatever the individual may add to the money wealth of the nation and of the world, his addition must be measured in money and he must prosper or suffer in proportion as our financial system is good or bad.

Mr. President, I think the adoption of this measure will put financial storms further apart and will provide means for shortening their duration and decreasing the number of the wrecks which they will leave behind. I do not think that any legislation that we could devise would abolish them or even make them as infrequent as they are in Europe. Panics are the result of optimism stretched to the last limit, and they are liable to occur as long as Americans are a hopeful people. And there is no such hopeful nation on earth. Why should there be? What other nation has so much to inspire hope? Can we dissociate hope from wealth and energy and vigor? How could we expect Americans to lack in confidence? Look at this land of ours stretching from ocean to ocean, with an area almost as great as that of all Europe. A century ago it was a wilderness hunted over by savage tribes. To-day it is the world's model for all that is strong and vigorous in civilization. The American people made this change in three generations, greater than any other land had ever experienced in all the ages. Can we expect a people who have done all this to lack confidence? Can we wonder that sometimes they are overconfident? After a period of confidence the shock of failure must follow and depression must result. But in periods of depression Americans only take a firmer hold on the splendid opportunities that are theirs and go again into the fight surer of victory because of the caution they have learned.

In spite of panics that have come more frequently here than elsewhere, and in spite of a style of living which would dazzle the peoples of other nations with its extravagance, America is the richest nation on earth. It would be little to boast of if this superiority were valued only in dollars and cents. But superiority in dollars and cents could never have been attained except by superiority in vim and energy and life, for it was attained in spite of the neglect of the economics that others have been compelled to practice.

And so in the midst of this period of pause and reflection, Mr. President, we can look forward to the future without doubt or fear and prepare to resume our onward rush for the primacy that destiny has written shall be ours.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15219) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

Mr. CLAPP. Calling attention to page 5, I suggest, in line 11, that the word "of" be stricken out and the word "in" inserted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota proposes an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 11, before the word "intoxicating," strike out the word "of" and insert the word "in," so as to read:

To take action to suppress the traffic in intoxicating liquors among Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. In line 20 of the same page I suggest that the word "seven" be stricken out and the word "eight" inserted, and that the word "fifteen" be stricken out and the word "thirty" inserted, to correspond with an amendment already made to the amount.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to change the total in lines 20 and 21 so as to read:

In all, $1,830,000.

The amendment was agreed to

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 14, line 8, after the word "month," to insert "subject only to such examination as to qualifications as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe," so as to make the further proviso read:

Provided further, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may employ additional farmers at any Indian school at not exceeding $60 per month, subject only to such examination as to qualifications as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, said farmers to be in addition to the school farmers now employed.

The amendment was agreed to

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 3, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "ninety," and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That hereafter the expense of procuring the official bond of any agent, superintendent, or other disbursing officer of the Indian Service may be paid by the United States from this appropriation.

So as to make the clause read:

For contingencies of the Indian Service, including traveling and incidental expenses of Indian agents and of their offices, and of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; also traveling and incidental expenses of special agents, at $3 per day when actually employed on duty in the field, exclusive of transportation and sleeping-car fare, in lieu of all other expenses now authorized by law, and expenses of going to and going from the seat of government, and while remaining there under orders and direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for a period not to exceed twenty days; for pay of employees not otherwise provided for, and for pay of special agents, at $2,000 per annum each, $90,000: Provided, That hereafter the expense of procuring the official bond of any agent, superintendent, or other disbursing officer of the Indian Service may be paid by the United States from this appropriation.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Phoenix School," on page 16, after line 10, to insert:

For improvement of power and heating plant, to be immediately available, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 15, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Indian school at Phoenix, Ariz., from $127,400 to $136,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 10, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend not to exceed $50,000 to purchase for the use of the Indians in California now residing on reservations which do not contain land suitable for cultivation and for Indians who are not now upon reservations in said State suitable tracts or parcels of land, water, and water rights in said State of California, and have constructed the necessary ditches, flumes, and reservoirs for the purpose of irrigating said lands and the irrigation of any lands now occupied by Indians in said State, and to construct suitable buildings upon said lands and to fence the tracts so purchased, and to fence, survey, and mark the boundaries of such Indian reservations in the State of California as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper. And there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Sherman Institute," on page 18, after line 20, to insert:

That $1,000 of the unexpended balance of $8,000 appropriated by the acts of June 21, 1906 (34 Stats., p. 333), and March 1, 1907 (34 Stats., p. 1022), for the purpose of removing obstructions both within and without the reservation from the bed of the stream which flows through the Round Valley Reservation, Mendocino County, Cal., and drains into Eel River, be, and the same is hereby, reappropriated and made available for use during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 7, to insert:

That with the consent of the allottee the timber on any allotment made to the Indians of the Hoopa Valley extension in California may be sold under rules and conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That in case of minors said consent shall be given by the father or mother or agent in charge in the order named, and for persons under other legal disabilities the agent's consent shall be taken in lieu of the consent of the allottees or heirs.

Mr. HEYBURN. This strikes me as being a most unusual provision, and I should like to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill whether there has heretofore been in an Indian bill such a provision as would permit the agent to take the place of the legal guardian of the minors or persons incompetent to make a contract and dispose of their real property? It seems to me that unless there is some special precedent for a provision of that kind in the bill it needs some explanation. I refer to the language:

Provided, That in case of minors said consent shall be given by the father or mother or agent in charge in the order named, and for persons under other legal disabilities the agent's consent shall be taken in lieu of the consent of the allottees or heirs.

This consent is rather a broad one:

That with the consent of the allottee the timber on any allotment made to the Indians of the Hoopa Valley extension in California may be sold under rules and conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

This reservation is in one of the best-timbered sections of California. I do not know as to the extent or character of the timber within the boundaries of the reservation, but I have some personal knowledge of the character of the timber generally in that section of the State. It is very probable that much of the value of the allotment would be in the timber, and if a minor is to have the timber upon his property disposed of without any other proceedings than obtaining the consent of the minor's parents or of the agent, or if persons who are not in a position to make a contract may be bound by the action or consent of the agent, it seems to me that the rights of these children, who may not be in a position for a great many years to assert their rights, are liable to be very seriously infringed upon.

Mr. CLAPP. Of the condition of this particular reservation, of course, I know nothing, except so far as I am advised by the Department. I am advised by the Department that this land consists of valuable timber land, but that the Indians have been unable to make any disposition of it, and they can not make any use of the land until the timber is cleared from it. Now, assuming that that is correct, in regard to the authority, I may say that back of all this lies the authority of the Secretary of the Interior. This provides that this shall be done under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. Primarily, of course, the father or mother would be the one to give the consent for the minor, but where the father or mother is not living or for any other reason can not act for the minor, then the next step, of course, would be probate proceedings, which are very expensive; and it was thought by the Department, inasmuch as the whole matter rests in the hands of the Department primarily, that the expense of probate might be saved by authorizing the agent to act in that capacity for the minor or other person under disability.

On page 18 of the report the Senator will find a communication from the Department on this question. The item was inserted at the request of the Department and in the form approved by the Department. It is, of course, for the Senate to decide whether they want to adopt the amendment or not.

Mr. HEYBURN. The communication to which the Senator from Minnesota refers, from the Secretary of the Interior, on page 18 of the report, in which it is suggested that a provision such as that under consideration might be incorporated into the bill is rather a startling proposition. He says, under date of December 9:

The Indians allotted lands on what is known as the Hoopa Valley extension in California were given very valuable timber land, and, as a matter of fact, they have been unable to make any good use of these lands because of the heavy timber growing thereon. They can not sell the timber, and until the land is cleared it is not of much use to them as a home.

Now, why allotments should have been made to Indians upon this class of land, when the very purpose of making an allotment to an Indian is to provide him with a home, I am unable to see.

This is one of the heaviest timbered sections in California. It is adjoining one of the largest lumbering districts in California. But there is a great deal of land that was within the area of which the allotments were selected that was not heavily timbered. Instead of preserving the timber of the United States consistent with the policy that we have heard so much about of the forest reserves and the Department having control of them, here we find a proposition indirectly to force into the market the timber from these lands that it may be cut and sold.

There is no restriction in the paragraph of the bill under consideration as to the character or extent of the cutting of this timber. Presumably there is no limit intended to be prescribed. It may all be cut. It is to be cut off the lands belonging to the allottees of this tribe, who, of course, with the usual percentage of children in all communities, are very many of them yet very young children. The Government recognized not only the rights of the adults of the tribe, but also made provision through the process of allotment for the small children unable to protect themselves, and yet we find, by the provisions of this paragraph, that the parent or guardian, or, forsooth, the Indian agent, may dispose of the thing of value that was allotted to these Indians.

In reading this amendment it struck me as being utterly inconsistent not only with the protection and preservation of the rights of these infant children, but inconsistent with the much-spoken-of policy of preserving the forests in that section of the country. I care nothing about the last feature of it, and I do not propose to enter or be led into a discussion of the forestry policy, but it occurred to me that it is our duty here to see to it that the rights of these Indian children are not lost sight of in this legislation, because if we permit this to be done it will be done. The proposition to do it comes somewhere from the depths of some plan to do it; and we will have the lands of these little children denuded of the timber and leave a barren waste of slashings and stumps and useless land for them when they find themselves a few years hence out from under the protecting care and support of their fathers, or their mothers, or their relatives, or the Indian agent, or the Government of the United States.

It seems to me that that land should be protected with all of its values and every element of its values for these children until they arrive at age of discretion and responsibility. I think this paragraph should be stricken out. I therefore move that the paragraph on page 19, from line 8 down to the end of the paragraph on line 15, be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that the motion is unnecessary, as the question is upon agreeing to the amendment, and a negative vote strikes out the paragraph.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, I am so pleased to hear the Senator from Idaho speak in favor of preserving our forests that I am willing to consent to almost any motion to strike out. I am glad that he has called my attention to this provision. This amendment was incorporated in the bill by the committee, having been sent in by the Secretary of the Interior, and had not been called to my attention.

There may be a great deal of merit in what the Senator says in reference to disposing of the timber upon this particular piece of land, and, as far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing that the provision should be omitted from the bill. I believe that if the timber upon the land is of the character mentioned by the Senator from Idaho and as would be indicated by the letter from the Secretary of the Interior, it should not be cut off. If this amendment should be made in the bill, I would suggest a proviso that no timber should be cut from this particular land unless it had received the approval of the Forester, who has charge of our national forest reserves. That is the doctrine I am in favor of, and not to permit timber to be cut from this or any other land unless Mr. Pinchot and his assistants, who have given this subject so much thought and attention, think it would be proper that the particular timber should be cut.

I repeat, I am delighted to know that the Senator from Idaho is in accord with the forest-reserve policy as carried out by Mr. Pinchot.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I can usually sit unmoved in the rhetorical storm that sometimes pervades this Chamber, but I confess when the Senator from Idaho takes the floor to plead in the cause of forestry it does appeal to me and awakens a responsive echo. I for one am perfectly willing that the amendment should be disagreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I have conferred with the governor of California, who is thoroughly familiar with this locality and who has honored us by his presence on the floor at this time, and he expresses himself in accord with the views of our friend from Idaho. Therefore, with my colleague and other friends I join most heartily in asking that the amendment be not agreed to, so that we may preserve these gigantic redwood forests to future generations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, inserting the paragraph from line 8 to line 15, on page 19.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 15, to insert:

That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction of a wagon road on the Hoopa Valley Indian Reservation, in the State of California, including necessary surveys, transportation, purchase of materials and tools, and for the subsistence of Indians furnishing voluntary labor, including forage for their animals, the labor for said construction to be performed as far as practicable by the Indians for the reservation without compensation.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, there is no forestry policy involved in the last phrase in this paragraph, which provides that the Indians shall do this work for the Government of the United States without compensation. That is a most unusual provision, and it does not appeal to my judgment or to my sense of right. Why should the Indian work for the Government of the United States without compensation any more than a member of this body or any other man?

Mr. CLAPP. They are not working for the United States, but the United States is voluntarily contributing $10,000 to the construction of a road over a reservation in consideration of the Indians being willing to do a part of the work without compensation. The Indians are simply improving their own reservation.

I suggest to the Senator from Idaho that, having won a signal triumph in that realm wherein he is supreme in the advocacy of forestry, it would be a mistake to undertake to cover too many subjects in this bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, no one could possibly appreciate more than I do advice from the distinguished Senator from Minnesota. It had not as yet occurred to me to appeal to him in regard to this matter; but, if so, he has saved me the trouble of doing it.

I did not rise to make a frivolous objection to the bill, and I shall reserve to myself in a modest way the right to make any other suggestions or criticism which may occur to me to be in the interest of good legislation. While I may possibly tax the patience of the Senator in charge of the bill, I will have to ask for that indulgence which must be accorded to members of this body to participate in any legislation that is before the body.

I have several provisions to suggest in regard to the bill. I am perhaps as closely identified with and as much interested in legislation affecting the Indians of the United States as any Senator on this floor. We have in our State of Idaho five reservations and seven tribes of Indians, and I have been called upon on many occasions in the last twenty-five years to interest myself in the affairs of those people, who can not speak for themselves. As a part of the duty that falls upon me here as a Senator, representing in part the State of Idaho, I expect to follow the bill through closely and critically for the purpose of doing as much as I can to perfect it in the interest of those people.

Mr. President, the Indians are not working for themselves under the provisions of this paragraph; they are working for the Government of the United States. The Government of the United States is undertaking to administer the affairs of this tribe of Indians. It is a self-selected duty on the part of the Government of the United States. The Indians are not consulted as to whether or not the Government of the United States shall build this road. The United States comes forward with a proposition to build a road through this reservation, not, I undertake to say, because the Indians desire to travel over it in the pursuit of their pleasure or their duties, but because those who represent the Government of the United States think that the administration of the affairs of the Indian Department might be better carried on if this road were in existence.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HEYBURN. In a moment.

Mr. President, I know one may through a certain sense of sophistical reasoning say that the Indians are the beneficiaries of this provision; but it is a work undertaken by the United States Government, to be paid for out of the Treasury of the United States. The white men who superintend the work and who participate in it, and the people who sell supplies for the purpose of supporting and carrying on this work will be paid for it, and yet the bill provides that the Indians who are to participate in the construction of this road or contribute to the carrying out of this plan shall not be compensated. I know of no good reason why they should not be compensated. I believe, if you want to make responsible, self-respecting American citizens of these people, you ought to place them as nearly as possible upon a plane of right and justice with other people.

I am not making this objection to this measure merely for the sake of talking, but because I think it proposes to do an injustice to the Indians.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, I simply desire to say in answer to the Senator from Idaho that the Indians themselves have consented to this provision, and that when the Commissioner of Indian Affairs visited the various reservations in the State of California he paid particular attention to this reservation. He found this reservation in a place where the Indians could not make a living, by reason of the fact that they did not have the means of communicating with the outside world. He had a conference with the board of supervisors of the county, and the members of the board of supervisors promised that if this part of the road should be constructed the county would construct the balance. The Indians themselves are willing to do a part of the work, and the reason why they are willing to do a part of the work and to have the road constructed is because they will be able to raise garden truck and produce and take it over this particular road to market and make for themselves a livelihood. This is the reason why this particular provision is in the bill and the words used to which the Senator has called our attention.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I wish to move an amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will pardon me, I wish to call attention to the fact that the Indians themselves limit the amount of free labor that they will contribute and the bill does not; and that is what called my attention to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3023) to amend the national banking laws.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TELLER. I move to strike out, on page 19, line 25, of the amendment, after the word "reservation," the words "without compensation."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, line 25, strike out the last two words "without compensation."

Mr. TELLER. If the Indians are willing to work without compensation they can still do so, but I do not want to require them by law to work without compensation. I think it is the duty of the Government to employ Indians wherever they can be employed; first, because they need the pay, and, second, what is still more important, to get them accustomed to doing work. I do not believe that under any conditions we ought to ask the Indians to do any work without compensation. I am willing the bill should contain the appropriation that they may have the road, but I think the United States is big enough and rich enough to do this work without asking the Indians to do it for nothing.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, I have no objection that the words "without compensation" shall be stricken out except for the reason that I would be glad to establish the fact as to what good Indians we have in California, and to show that they are willing to work and to do this work without being compelled to do so.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I call the attention of those who are trying to doctor this provision to line 22, where we find the words "furnishing voluntary labor."

Mr. TELLER. I did not notice those words.

Mr. TILLMAN. If you strike out the words "without compensation," at the end of the paragraph, you will have to come back and strike out these words.

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator propose to amend my amendment by striking out those words also?

Mr. TILLMAN. I merely call the Senator's attention to the fact that the words in line 22 provide for voluntary labor, and "voluntary labor" and "without compensation" appear to me to be practically synonymous. If you are going to take them out in one place they should be taken out in the other.

Mr. TELLER. My attention had not been called to those words. I should like also to strike out the word "voluntary" in line 22.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then would you not have to strike out the words "including forage for their animals" in line 23?

Mr. CLAPP. I believe the Senator is mistaken as to that. With the word "voluntary" stricken out, it would then read:

> Including necessary surveys, transportation, purchase of materials and tools, and for the subsistence of Indians furnishing labor, including forage for their animals.

If they did not furnish the labor the appropriation would be used to furnish forage.

Mr. TILLMAN. But I understand you are going to feed their animals because they are going to work for nothing.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, no.

Mr. TELLER. "Labor" does not mean that they shall work for nothing.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course not. I think to strike out the word "voluntary," in line 22, will correct the whole thing. I move to strike out the word "voluntary."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the committee, to strike out the words "without compensation" in line 25.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the word "voluntary" is to go out of the amendment, then it seems to me the words "and for the subsistence of Indians furnishing voluntary labor, including forage for their animals," should be stricken out, because the amendment contemplates that where an Indian furnishes volunteer labor then the Government should pay for his subsistence and for the subsistence of his animals; but if he is paid for his work, then the Government is not obliged to furnish subsistence for the animals or for himself. He ought in that case to be obliged to furnish his own subsistence.

Mr. CLAPP. That would be true, but these Indians, back of all this discussion, have asked for a privilege here, and the Senator from California simply voices what is patent to those who heard the Commissioner, that they will only be too glad to do the work. If we leave in a provision whereby the appropriation can be used for forage for them, I think it is a wise thing to do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think that is true, if the Indians furnish their labor voluntarily without compensation.

Mr. CLAPP. They will, undoubtedly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But if they are compensated for their labor, why should they not provide their own subsistence?

Mr. CLAPP. They would do so in that case.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In other words, as I understand the provision, if the word "voluntary" is stricken out it would require the Government not only to pay the Indians for the work, but in addition to that to furnish subsistence to the Indians.

Mr. CLAPP. Not if that was taken into the account in the employment of the Indians. The Department, or the Commissioner acting for the Department, can then make such an arrangement with the Indians as the Indians may agree to. If they are willing, as they have expressed themselves, and ask for this privilege to furnish the work in consideration of the Government building the road, then the appropriation will be broad enough to allow the Commissioner to enter into an arrangement with them.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to ask the Senator from Minnesota if it is not a fact that owing to the great distance this road will have to be run through the reservation it will take most of the Indians a considerable distance from their homes, and, necessarily, it would be proper at least for the Government to furnish subsistence and pay them accordingly.

Mr. CLAPP. Undoubtedly.

Mr. McCUMBER. They could not always bring their subsistence with them to the place of work. They might be even two or three or four days from their home.

Mr. CLAPP. I think, if the Senator from Utah will pardon me, this latitude ought to be allowed the Commissioner in making the arrangements with these Indians.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not intend by my amendment to prevent the Indians from doing this work voluntarily if they choose, but I do think we ought to pay them even if they are willing to work without compensation. However, if the Department wants to secure their work without pay, they certainly should give them their subsistence. I am confident the Department could not get their work, either for compensation or otherwise, unless they did furnish subsistence. As was suggested by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], they will not be at home when they build this line of road, but they will be some distance from their camp or residence, and they ought to be supplied with food. They would have to be supplied, even though they were working by the day, I have no doubt.

I think if you strike out the words "without compensation" and the word "voluntary," the Government can furnish them subsistence if they are working for pay, or the Government can furnish it if they are working for nothing, if they choose to do so, and the matter will be complete.

Mr. McCUMBER. I presume that the amount of this appropriation has been based upon the fact that the labor would be without cost. The amount of the appropriation, I assume, was intended to be sufficient to complete the work without payment for the labor. Now, if we change the labor and make it paid labor instead of voluntary labor, it seems to me we ought to increase the appropriation to an equivalent amount.

Mr. CLAPP. I made that suggestion to the Senator from California, but he is thoroughly satisfied, as I am, that notwithstanding we strike out the words "without compensation," the Indians will still want to carry out their original proposition. He feels that it is sufficient, and in view of that opinion I did not ask to raise the amount.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment, to strike out the word "voluntary" in line 22.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 20, to insert:

There is hereby appropriated the sum of $10,000 for the Indians of the Yuma Reservation, to be expended for their benefit in such manner and for such purposes as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, said sum to be reimbursable out of the proceeds derived from the sale of their lands; there is also appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the further sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to reserve and set apart lands for town-site purposes in the Yuma Indian Reservation, Cal., and the Colorado River Indian Reservation in California and Arizona, and to survey, plat, and sell the tracts so set apart in such manner as he may prescribe, the net proceeds to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians of the reservations, respectively, to be reimbursed out of the funds arising from the sale of the lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, under the head of "Iowa,' 'on page 24, after line 5, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend out of the trust fund of $38,603.93, now on deposit in the United States Treasury to the credit of the Sac and Fox Indians of Iowa, a sum not exceeding $24,000 in the purchase, in his discretion, of certain tracts of land adjoining or surrounded by the present reservation of said Indians in Tama County, Iowa, in accordance with the petition of the council of said band, dated March 28, 1906.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 15, to insert:

And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to use and expend out of said trust fund a further sum not exceeding $5,000, or so much thereof as he may deem necessary, to assist the said Sac and Fox Indians of Iowa in clearing and reducing to cultivation the tracts now owned by them and those that may be purchased under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Pottawatomies" (treaty), on page 27, after line 12, to insert:

For building fences, cleaning up and putting in proper repair the old Pottawatomie Indian cemetery in Mission Township, Shawnee County, State of Kansas, the sum of $600, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 17, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to establish public roads not to exceed 60 feet in width on section lines on the Pottawatomie Reservation, in Kansas, wherever in his judgment such roads will be a benefit to the residents on such reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Sacs and Foxes of the Missouri (treaty)," on page 28, after line 2, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay per capita to the Iowa tribe of Indians in the States of Kansas and Oklahoma, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, the balance of the Iowa trust fund in the United States Treasury: Provided, That the Oklahoma branch of Iowas shall receive such an amount of this trust fund as will equalize for them the payment made to the Kansas branch under the act approved May 27, 1902 (32 Stat. L., p. 267).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Michigan," on page 28, after line 21, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to make a complete roll of the Ottawa and Chippewa Indians of the State of Michigan entitled to participate in the funds arising from the judgment of the Court of Claims, in case No. 27537, decided by the Court of Claims March 4, 1907, and of any other funds to their credit in the hands of the Treasurer of the United States, and said roll, when completed and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be final and conclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Minnesota," on page 29, after line 9, to insert:

For pay of Indian agent at White Earth Agency, Minn., $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 19, to insert:

In all, $3,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 19, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay to D. C. Lightbourn, of Ada, Minn., the sum of $1,244.45, and to George D. Hamilton, of Detroit, Minn., the sum of $830, out of any money standing to the credit of all the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota out of the fund known as "Chippewas in Minnesota Fund," in payment of bills incurred in advertising, and the said sums are hereby appropriated for said purpose: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall first examine said accounts and approve the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Chippewas of Minnesota, reimbursable (treaty)," on page 32, after line 3, to insert:

That section 3 of the act approved February 20, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 50), modifying and amending the agreement with the Indians of the Red Lake Reservation in Minnesota, is hereby so far modified as to permit the payment of the annual installments provided for in said section during the month of April each year, instead of October.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Montana," on page 32, line 18, after the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "eight," so as to read:

At the Flathead Agency, Mont., $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 3, to insert:

For the rebuilding of the flour, saw, and shingle mill at the Flathead Indian Reservation subagency, Mont., at Ronan, $10,000, the same to be immediately available from any balance now in the Treasury, to be reimbursed from the proceeds of sales of surplus land after allotment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 15, to insert:

That for the purchase of machinery, tools, implements, and animals for the Indians on the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, to enable said Indians to engage in the raising of sugar beets and other crops, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, under such conditions as said Secretary may prescribe for the repayment by said Indians to the United States of the sum so expended.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to know how this money is to be reimbursed. I hardly understand how we can make the Indians pay it back unless we take it out of some fund they have got.

Mr. CLAPP. It is not exactly to be taken out of a fund; but, like much of this irrigation money, it is to be reimbursable out of the proceeds of the land. I do not recall the exact details at this moment.

Mr. TELLER. This amendment provides for the purchase of machinery, tools, implements, animals, etc., to enable these Indians to engage in the raising of sugar beets and other crops. I do not want to object to the amendment; I am anxious that these Indians should have these facilities; but this is an appropriation of $25,000, and in the latter part of the clause it is provided:

The same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, under such conditions as said Secretary may prescribe for the repayment by said Indians to the United States of the sum so expended.

I should like to have an explanation of those last words.

Mr. CLAPP. I think if the Senator will take the explanation offered by the Indian Office he will find it satisfactory. It seems that this is a part of a plan which has been initiated for some time. On page 26 of the report of the committee on this bill it will be seen that the Secretary says:

An item in the Indian appropriation act of March 1, 1907 (34 Stat. L., 1015–1034), authorizes the Indians of the Fort Belknap Reservation to lease their lands, both allotted and tribal, not to exceed 20,000 acres, for the culture of sugar beets and other crops in rotation, upon such terms, regulations, and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, for a term not exceeding ten years.

Under this authority the Indian Office has agreed with three responsible persons on the terms of a lease to them of 10,000 acres.

From which, of course, the Indians will get the rental.

By these terms the Indians are to plow and put under cultivation 5,000 acres of almost virgin land, which has to be worked over carefully the first year to be in shape to put beets in the next year.

They are to receive no pay for their labor until the land has been prepared, and no rental until the first crop has been harvested.

To enable the Indians to do this plowing and other work, it is proposed to advance the sum of money named, to be reimbursed out of the rental of this land. The amendment seems to me perfectly proper, although I care nothing about it.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I know something about matters at this agency and the leasing of this land. While I do not want to interfere with the Department, I do not believe it ought ever to have leased the land in such quantities as it has done. I do not believe such a policy is calculated to encourage the Indians to do anything on the reservation, but it will perhaps encourage some white man to go on there and do some work.

Mr. President, the Indians will raise beets. In the State of Colorado the great trouble we have had with the raising of beets is to find laborers who will get down on their knees and thin the beets. That is one of the drawbacks to the raising of beets. We have found the Indian boys from New Mexico and from Arizona, who have been brought into our section of the country through the agency of the Department, have been in the habit of doing that work, and doing it very satisfactorily. I believe in one beet field last summer almost all of the Indian boys were from those two Territories, and they were paid over $30,000 for their work. That work was entirely satisfactory to the people raising beets. The employers are all white men, who pay these Indians some fixed compensation—I do not know how much a day. The Department, however, sends a man with them to see that they are properly treated, and it has now a very capable young man there, who has looked after the Indians and seen that they were properly paid, and that they did not waste their money, etc. They have generally gone back with a sum which would support them in comfort, or decently, at least, in their own section of the country for the next year. I want to encourage the Indians to raise beets, if possible; but I think it would have been better—I am not going to attack this amendment especially—but I think it would have been better if the Department had encouraged each Indian to raise a little field of beets instead of leasing the land out in 10,000-acre tracts to a lot of white men, who will get what they can out of the Indian and what they can out of the soil without much reference to whether the Indian is improved or benefited by the transaction.

I should say that if this reimbursement should be made at all, it should be out of funds which belong to the Indians. I do not know what kind of an arrangement could be made, but it might be that the Indians would get a little less money under it. This, however, may be a grievous burden on them.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator from Colorado will pardon me, I hardly think the money should come out of any fund that stands to the credit of these Indians. As each Indian has an advance made to him, and as each Indian in time gets the benefit of this rental—I rather agree with the Senator on the main proposition—the amount advanced to each one will be taken out, and it seems to me perfectly equitable and just.

Mr. TELLER. How will it be taken out? Will it be taken out of the rental?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Perhaps if that can be done it may be made a claim against the Indians.

Mr. President, the Indian does not hold his interest, whether it be in personal or in real property, as do those who belong to the Anglo-Saxon race. The Indian holds his property in common. Go into an Indian camp and you will find that no family in that camp will be destitute of food, provided there is plenty of food in the camp. Under such circumstances there is no danger that any Indian family will suffer. The Indian takes care of his own.

I have recently seen cases where Indians having money coming from the sale of land have practically put it into a pot for the benefit of every other Indian, because such has been their habit. Under the old rules of the tribes if an Indian went out and killed game and came back with it, every other Indian in the camp got part of it. If the Government of the United States were to advance money to some Indians who need the help to enable them to go to work and do something, I do not think that the other Indians would complain. They would not feel that they were not getting their share, provided they had an opportunity to get their share if they were willing to work as other Indians are doing.

I have a good deal of reluctance in interfering with anything the committee have done because I am not a member of the committee, and I know the committee have given a good deal of attention to this bill. Therefore I will not object to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the subhead "Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes (treaty)," on page 35, after line 17, to insert:

For the employment of "line riders" along the south and east boundary of the Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, $1,500 is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 21, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend not to exceed $30,000 for the purpose of settling Chief Rocky Boy's band of Chippewa Indians, now residing in Montana, upon some suitable existing Indian reservation in said State, and to this end he is authorized to negotiate and conclude an agreement with any Indian tribe in said State, or, in his discretion, to purchase suitable tracts of lands, water, and water rights in said State of Montana, and to construct suitable buildings upon said lands, and to purchase for them such necessary live stock and implements of agriculture as he may deem proper. And there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill, who understands these matters, while I do not pretend to understand them, what principle is followed in reference to these gifts to certain Indians or Indian tribes? In some cases the gifts are made reimbursable and in others not reimbursable. As an illustration, Mr. President, at the bottom of page 19 there is an appropriation of $10,000 for the construction of a wagon road on the Hoopa Valley Reservation, and there is no provision for reimbursement, while on the top of the next page there is an appropriation of $10,000 to be expended for the benefit of the Indians on the Yuma Reservation, and that is made reimbursable out of the Indian fund. The item that has just been read proposes to appropriate $30,000. I suppose it is for destitute Indians, and very likely it is a wise provision; but it is an outright gift. What I should like to know is upon what principle this is done and how the Senator differentiates between the different classes.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I do not know of any definite line that could be laid down. There are in this country a number of cases—this case has only recently been brought to the attention of the committee by the Department—where in the past an Indian tribe, through one means or another, has become a sort of wandering band of Indians. There is no land that can be called theirs, and they have got to be taken care of in some way. We make in this same bill, I think, an appropriation for some Indians similarly situated in California, and on page 28 of the report is a very voluminous statement as to this particular band of Montana Indians.

Then there are other instances where Indians may have funds that are being accumulated from the sale of land or from the sale of timber—in my own State they are accumulating a large fund—and the appropriations made for those Indians, as a rule, are reimbursable, because under the treaty advances made were to be reimbursable.

Then there is an occasional gift, such as the one the Senator refers to on page 19. The Indians mentioned there have a reservation, but they are unable to get roads; and to encourage them in the development of their beet industry the Department recommended the appropriation, and the committee felt that it would be proper to give them $10,000. It could not be made reimbursable, because there is no income or source of income from which it may be reimbursed. The same statement applies to this wandering band known as "Chief Rocky Boy's band."

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, Mr. President, I assume that in these cases where there is an outright donation of money there is destitution, and there is no fund from which the appropriation could be reimbursed?

Mr. CLAPP. There is no fund from which it could be reimbursed.

Mr. GALLINGER. And this is simply a matter of taking care of destitute wards of the nation?

Mr. CLAPP. There is no fund or property from which this $30,000 could come. They are rather a wandering band, and we want to locate them up there and get them homes.

Mr. TELLER. How many of them are there?

Mr. CLAPP. I think the statement to the committee was that they number 150. Possibly the Senator from Montana knows.

Mr. GALLINGER. The explanation is entirely satisfactory to me. I simply wanted to know upon what principle the committee proceeded and why there was this apparent difference on these various items in the bill.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I think the inquiry is very pertinent and the answer very proper. Not only in that section of the country but in several other sections of the country we have Indians who have become landless and poverty-stricken, and who are not sufficiently civilized to know how to make a living. I think, in a great many instances, if we could find some man who would devote his time and attention to them and put some heart into the work, they might be brought into a condition where they could probably in a short time take care of themselves; but we have been in the habit of sending forth agents who went out simply because they could get a salary, who were satisfied when they had earned their salary, and quit at that.

I believe that this great nation of ours can afford to make liberal contributions toward the support of the Indians. Perhaps it may be truthfully said that there is no nation that has ever dealt more liberally with many of the natives of the country than we have; but, after all, this is not always a kindness. We have furnished them plenty of money; we have made donations for the last twenty-five or thirty years which, if they had been wisely directed and carefully disposed of, would have done a great deal of good. A large portion of these appropriations, however, has been injurious and unprofitable either to the Indians or to ourselves.

We have reached a point now where, in some instances, we have given these Indians a status they have never had before, and we are going to be called upon to do more in this line than we have done for a great many years. We have got to do it. We can not leave in a community of white people two or three hundred Indians who have no property and who have no employment. You can not leave them to starve. The American people will not agree to that. There is a sentiment requiring that we should look after the Indians when it becomes absolutely necessary, even though it is their fault that they are not what they ought to be. In nine cases out of ten it is not the fault of the Indian. It is the fault of the management he has had; it is the fault of the system we have adopted. More than twenty-five years ago, on this floor, I declared that the system we had adopted in the allotment of lands would bring the Indians ultimately and within a generation into a condition such as they have reached now and make them landless vagabonds.

The Indian did not want land in severalty. He wanted land in common. He was in sympathy with the system which, so far as we know from our knowledge of that race, had been in force from the beginning, and he was not in sympathy with the system with reference to land adopted primarily by the white race.

The holding of land in severalty is an artificial condition. It is not the natural condition of any people, and never has been in the history of the world. Our ancestors in Great Britain—at least the ancestors of those who claim to be descended from the British people—lived a thousand years before they were willing to accept the modern system of individual ownership of land. The Romans were the first people who adopted that system. In the years of high civilization in northern Africa and Asia, when Babylon was in the glory of her wonderful civilization, land was held in common. We may look down upon and despise their civilization, but knowledge gained from recent discoveries in connection with the history of those people indicates that it was a civilization in many respects equal to ours. While they did not have, perhaps, the knowledge that we have of electricity and some other things, they had a high culture.

The people who created the glory of Greece were a people who held their land in common, and it was only when the malign influence of Rome came to be felt in Greece that the doctrine of absolute private ownership came to be recognized, and men who did not own land were excluded from the privileges which landowners enjoyed.

We adopted that system for ourselves, and later we forced it upon the Indians, and now not one Indian out of fifty who once had land has that land to-day; and not one Indian in fifty, if left to himself, would have land more than a short time after he got his patent.

We forced the holding of land in severalty upon them. We have made trouble and distress among the Indians because of our attempt to compel them to adopt a system that they did not believe in. Many of them felt that it was a crime to divide up the land. On and off for the last forty years I have had intelligent Indians say to me: "We do not want any land in severalty; the earth is our mother; we will not divide it." To them it was a crime to do so; and there are hundreds of Indians now who would be glad to change the system, to get rid of the land which they now hold in severalty, and go where they could hold land in common, as did their ancestors.

I venture to say to-day of the Indian population that, if you will give them to understand that they may be transferred to a section of country where it is possible for them to live as comfortably as they can where they are now, 75 per cent of them will accept the proposition that they abandon the land owned by them now and go and live on a common heritage and common land.

Mr. President, the people who devised the allotment of land had the best intentions in the world. I know people who thought if they could simply give to an Indian 160 acres of land, he would be civilized by that process. The highest degree of civilization of the Indians to-day is in the State of New York, and there they hold their land in common. While I was Secretary of the Interior the Indians from New York, possessing to-day a higher civilization than any other Indians in the country, sent a messenger to me to induce the Government of the United States to interpose when the State of New York attempted by its legislation to divide up their lands and compel them to take them in severalty. It is inherent in the Indian to desire to hold land in common. As I said a little while ago, they hold everything in common, and when the Indian nation was uncorrupted there was not such a thing as an Indian beggar.

Mr. President, I know something of the Indian race. I was born on the edge of a reservation in the State of New York. I taught school on the edge of a reservation. I went West almost fifty years ago. I have been in touch with the Indians. I aver here now that there never was a tribe which consented willingly to the division of its land. I will venture to say that the reports will show that Indian tribe after tribe succumbed to the pressure of the United States and divided their land only after protest, only after they expressed their desire to hold their land in common.

I have said this because if the Indian becomes a vagabond, we have forced it upon him. We have compelled him to become a vagabond, or we have compelled him to do what no people ever did—jump from semibarbarism or savagery into civilization. I shall vote a liberal appropriation whenever the authorities say it is necessary for the protection and salvation of the Indian race. I do not believe anybody will complain if the Government of the United States shall put the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota or Wisconsin, who are now in a destitute condition, in a better condition. These appropriations ought not to be made simply to give them food, but to give them, if possible, an opportunity to better their condition.

Within the last two years in the western part of Colorado I have had occasion to employ Indian boys from the Indian school. I found that they were working at a dollar and a quarter a day. That was the price fixed in the community for an Indian. Every white man got a dollar and a half to a dollar and seventy-five cents a day. I put those men to work, and I went off and left them. I say here they are as good workers when they are properly treated as any white men ordinarily are. I did not watch them. I left them and came back and found them doing their work in an admirable manner. They can be made to work. As I have said, in the beet fields of Colorado they do most excellent work. They will do it everywhere if they are only properly handled.

That is the reason why I do not want them to work for nothing. I do not believe this great Government of ours should take an hour's labor from a red man without pay, but on the contrary it should pay for it as readily and quickly as it does for an hour of labor by a white man.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, my attention was called from the remarks of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], which I would have been glad to have listened to more attentively than I was permitted to. I trust the Senator did not think because of the interrogatory I propounded to the Senator from Minnesota that I am hostile to legislation in behalf of the Indians.

Mr. TELLER. I did not; and I did not believe the Senate was hostile; but I wanted to say this: I wanted to say it for the Indians. I wanted to say it because I believe a great many people have a false idea about the Indians, and the Indians are blamed for what they are not responsible for. They are blamed because they do not do what no people ever did do—civilize themselves in an instant, or very quickly. I did not say it because I wanted to rebuke anybody or because I thought there was any disposition in the Senate not to accept the suggestion of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator has that feeling. I certainly had no purpose to criticise anybody, nor have I ever manifested a purpose to object to legislation in behalf of the Indians; and we have had some legislation that might well have been objected to——

Mr. TELLER. Yes; that is a fact.

Mr. GALLINGER. And in propounding the question that I did to the Senator from Minnesota, who is always ready to answer questions propounded by those of us who know so much less about this matter than he does, I had simply in mind a desire to secure some information. That was all. The Senator kindly gave it to me, and I was quite content.

I do not think there is any feeling in the section of country to which I chance to belong against the Indians or against reasonable and just legislation for the Indians. They are the wards of the nation. They have been driven back from the East to the Far West. They have been despoiled of their lands and their possessions. I have sometimes thought that they have not civilized themselves as rapidly as they ought to have done, but that is a question which, of course, I can not decide.

But, Mr. President, my feeling has been as it is to-day, that we should be extremely liberal to those people, treated as they have been by the white man, persecuted as they have been and despoiled of their lands and their heritage; and I wanted to put myself on record now—I rarely have anything to say on this subject—as being just as good a friend to the Indian as any man who chances to live in the Far West or in any other section of our country, and no vote of mine will ever be cast that will deprive them of any of the benefactions or of the appropriations of the Government that are justly their due.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I did not desire to insinuate anything against any section of the country, either. I know that perhaps there is more prejudice against the Indian west of the Missouri River than there is east of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is right.

Mr. TELLER. That is not surprising. I have seen communities out in the nighttime to defend themselves against Indian raids, and I have had some experience in that business on various occasions in the early history of Colorado. Every early settler had the same. Probably at that time we were savage toward the Indians, and yet my own impression is that in nine cases out of ten where there was trouble of that kind the white man brought it on himself. We had a class of men, which every new country has more or less, who, regardless of justice and right, made it sometimes pretty difficult for those who believe in doing justice to all men to carry out their doctrine.

I have known many, many outrages perpetrated on the Indians. They have perpetrated some upon us. They had a long training in their early history before the settlements. They had wars with each other, and the only avenue to glory was through the battlefield. They had no other way. Chieftains rose because of their prowess in war, and when the white man invaded their country the Indians were, as a rule, kind and considerate at first. Step by step the encroachments frightened them, and then they got wild and went into war and committed atrocities which would appal a civilized man, and yet were perfectly proper according to Indian morals and ethics.

I have never subscribed to the doctrine that there is no good Indian but a dead one. I have seen the time when I wanted to kill a whole tribe, perhaps, as a matter of self-defense, but on the whole I have found many good Indians. As a rule I will take an Indian's word as quickly as I will that of a white man. That has been my experience. I have found Indians, influential Indians, high in authority, who would tell you the truth even though it was against their interest. There is virtue in all classes of people, I believe, and the Indian has his share of it, in my judgment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. While it is fresh in my mind, on page 33, line 22, after the word "appropriated," I move to insert the words "to be immediately available."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Nebraska," on page 36, after line 21, to strike out:

For interest on $804,909.17, at 5 per cent per annum, per fourth article of treaty of November 1, 1837, $40,245.45; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to expend said interest for the support, education, and civilization of said Indians, to be expended in such manner and to whatever extent that he may judge to be necessary and expedient for their welfare and best interest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 6, to strike out:

For interest on $78,340.41, at 5 per cent per annum, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the erection of houses, improvement of their allotments of land, purchase of stock, agricultural implements, seeds, and other beneficial objects, $3,917.02.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 13, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of the Winnebago tribe of Indians the sum of $883,249.58, being the balances of the unappropriated amounts due said tribe under the fourth article of the treaty of November 1, 1837, to wit, $804,909.17 (7 Stat., p. 544), and the act of July 15, 1870, $78,340.41 (16 Stat., p. 355), and said sum shall draw interest at 5 per cent per annum; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to pay per capita to the members of the tribe the said sum under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, subject to the provision of the acts of April 21, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 201), and March 2, 1907 (34 Stat. L., p. 1221).

Mr. CLAPP. After the word "Indians," in line 16, page 37, I move to insert the words "residing in the States of Nebraska and Wisconsin," to avoid any question about it.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 20, before the word "cents," to strike out "fifty-six thousand one hundred and sixty-two dollars and forty-seven" and to insert "eight hundred and fifty-one thousand and eighty-seven dollars and eleven," so as to read:

In all, $851,087.11.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Carson School," on page 39, after line 14, to insert:

That in carrying out any irrigation project which may be undertaken under the provisions of the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., p. 388), known as the "reclamation act," and which may make possible, and provide for, in connection with the reclamation of other lands, the irrigation of all or any part of the irrigable lands heretofore included in allotments made to Indians under the fourth section of the general allotment act, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized, in his discretion, to cancel any or all of such allotments, including any trust patent which may have issued therefor, and in lieu thereof to reserve for and allot to each Indian having an allotment of such irrigable land and legally entitled to the same, 10 acres of irrigable land, which shall be exempt from the payment of any charges by the allottees assessed under the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., p. 308), but such expense shall be borne by the United States: Provided, That any of the lands which may have been included in the canceled allotments and which are not needed or reserved for allotment in smaller areas, shall be restored to the public domain to be disposed of subject to the provisions of the above-mentioned reclamation act: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to expend annually for ten years not to exceed $12,064 to repay to the reclamation fund moneys expended by him therefrom in extending the Truckee-Carson irrigation project to 4,640 acres of land in Churchill County, Nev., being the part of the lands embraced with other lands in the Indian allotments which have been voluntarily relinquished in consideration of receiving reallotments of 10 acres of irrigable land, or which may be canceled under authority of this act. There is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $12,064, being the first of ten installments for the purpose of carrying the provision of this act into effect.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this is a most startling proposition; I think, perhaps, the most startling of any provision in this bill. It is legislation pure and simple, and it is general in its character and applies to all Indian reservations in the United States. It proposes, after having allotted and patented 160 acres of land to an Indian, that the Secretary shall have the authority to cancel that allotment and make the Indian take in lieu thereof 10 acres of land.

The Secretary in his letter, on pages 32 and 33 of the report, states the case; and I do not think I should forego the opportunity to read this letter, or portions of it, so that it may appear in the RECORD, inasmuch as otherwise it will not have that publicity it should have in the consideration of the proposal contained in the committee amendment. The letter is under date of November 22, 1907. It is addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and is signed by the Secretary of the Interior. It says:

By letter of July 27, 1906, the Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs reported to the Secretary of the Interior on a letter from William H. Code, United States Indian inspector and chief engineer, relative to the Truckee-Carson irrigation project as affecting and affected by the Paiute Indian allotments in Carson Sink Valley, Churchill County, Nev.

The Indian Office then said that the condition of the Paiute band of Indians, who had been allotted lands in that valley, was brought to its attention by Special Agent Casson in a letter dated October 3, 1903—

That is four years before the writing of this letter—and that since then it had been the subject of a great deal of consideration by that Office, the Department, and the Reclamation Service; that it appeared from the letter of Special Agent Casson, transmitted to the Department with Indian Office letter of April 1, 1904, that a total of 198 allotments were included in this project; and that for allotments Nos. 2 to 31, inclusive, trust patents had issued, the remainder of the allotments being included in schedules approved by the Department on February 24, 1897, and June 9, 1897, but not patented.

By my direction—

such relinquishments of the patented allotments as had been secured were accepted and the patents canceled, and all the unpatented allotments canceled and the lands restored to the public domain, except the SE. ¼ of sec. 8, the S. ½ of secs. 9 and 10, and all of secs. 15, 16, 17, 20, and 22, T. 19 N., R. 30 E., M. D. M., which lands were reserved for reallotment to the Indians in 10-acre tracts.

Mr. President, the Secretary of the Interior says he has canceled the patent of the United States issued to the Indians pursuant to the plan of the allotment, and that he has also canceled the allotments that had not been patented.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I inquire of the Senator what he understands by the term "trusts patents?"

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. I understand it is the muniment of title that an Indian gets under which he holds for twenty-five years, or during the period that he is prohibited from disposing of his land, and I understand it is the highest title that an Indian can get pursuant to the law of the United States, which compels him to yield up his tribal interest in the land and take land in severalty. I think I know the measure of such a title. I have had occasion to consider it, both in connection with public affairs and in connection with titles where personal interests were concerned.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator what significance the word "trust" has there? Does it indicate that the Interior Department is the trustee for the Indian?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; it does not indicate that it is the trustee for the Indian. It indicates that the Government of the United States is the trustee for the Indian, and the Secretary of the Interior has just such power to represent the trustee as the trustee may give him, and no more and no less. The Secretary of the Interior has no power over an allotment to an Indian except the power that may be specifically vested in him by statute.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I inquire whether there is any statute indicating the powers of the Secretary of the Interior as the representative of the trustee regarding these trust allotments?

Mr. HEYBURN. Whether there is any statute expressing it?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. If he is going to exercise any power under the ordinary rule of construction of trusts he is the party to show that he has the power. There is no presumption of power in a trustee to dispose of the property of the cestui que trust. It is something which must be shown as an affirmative right on the part of the trustee. It is never implied.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is the inquiry I wish to make of the Senator, whether or not there is any legislation upon that subject on the statute books.

Mr. HEYBURN. There is not.

Mr. President, I make that statement as applied to the question under consideration. There is no power vested in the Secretary of the Interior or any other executive or administrative officer of the Government to violate or diminish or add to the right which an Indian has by virtue of the act of Congress under which he receives his allotment of land. If the terms of the allotment are to be varied, it must be done by express authority and not by implication. And yet it is stated in this communication that the Secretary of the Interior has canceled patented lands, and not a small area—26,720 acres of land—that had been set aside for the Indians in tracts commensurate with the provisions of the statute under which allotments are made, and he has canceled them and has undertaken to substitute for 160-acre tracts 10-acre tracts. So an Indian, under this arrangement that we are asked to ratify by this amendment, would be limited to 10 acres, and, forsooth, the reason is given that the Indian land was not as the white man would have it; that they are going to reduce it to conditions that white men might desire, and compel the Indian to accept those conditions, and as a part of the arrangement to eliminate 150 acres from his allotment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether he would question the power of the United States as the trustee of the Indians to whom allotments have been made to change the extent of the allotment by substituting a less amount of irrigated land for a larger amount of unirrigated land. The Senator will understand I am simply getting at the question of power. I am not familiar with the law upon the subject.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is not a difficult question to answer. The law under which these allotments are made to the Indians is in the nature of a contract. The Indians in many instances hold their reservations pursuant to a treaty which is authorized to be made in express terms by the Constitution of the United States. Those treaties are recognized as being within the treaty-making power of our Government. Some of those reservations exist pursuant to treaty, which is a contract.

Now, when Congress makes a subsequent treaty with those Indians, whether it be in the nature of a statute or of a treaty pure and simple, that if they will surrender the surplus lands they may have a fee-simple title to 160 acres, then Congress can not change it without violating first the fundamental law—the treaty—and, second, the act of Congress, which is in the nature of a contract. Remember, too, that the Secretary does not propose to put these Indians back where they were before the allotment, when they gave up 40,000 acres, held in common, in order that they might take 10,000 acres among them in severalty, and gave the 30,000 acres of a margin to the Government of the United States to sell and put the proceeds in the Treasury or wherever Congress might direct it. I say the Secretary does not propose to put these Indians where they were before this contract, which he proposes to violate, was made, but he proposes to keep that which we have taken and to take still further from the contract or the rights of the Indians under it. That is what he proposes to do.

In order that this thought may be presented in a comprehensive way, I desire to read the rest of this letter:

> By the cancellation of these allotments approximately 26,720 acres of the best irrigable land in the Carson Sink Valley were thrown open to settlement and entry under the provisions of the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 388), known as the "reclamation act."

That is the character of the lands that were thrown open—among the best in that valley.

Now he proceeds to say:

> It therefore seems just that in surrendering these lands for disposal by the Government under the provisions of the above-named act the Indians should receive as compensation therefor tracts of land brought within an irrigation project on which they can gain a livelihood.

That is an acknowledgment of the injustice to that extent. Then he says:

> The allotments in their natural state were arid and unfit for Indian homes, and it was practically impossible for the Indian allottees to comply with the law as to settlement and cultivation.

The Indians had selected these lands for their homes. They were accustomed to those lands. Their ancestors had lived upon them from time immemorial. But the white man said the Indian's judgment was bad; that he should not have selected such lands; that they were not adequate to his wants, to the purposes of maintaining himself and those dependent upon him. The white man sat in judgment when he gave the Indian the lands, and in the exercise of a fair disposition of the rights of the Indians, gave him these as his due. When it is convenient for the white man to use them for some other purpose he confesses his error and says, "in giving the Indians these lands I gave him something he should not have, should not have been allowed to select, because they were not adequate to the purposes of the Indian and his livelihood."

Now, if the Senator will permit me to finish reading this letter I will present it in a more consecutive shape.

Mr. NEWLANDS. But will the Senator permit me to correct the impression he has already given?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator presents a very moving picture of the Indians themselves having selected lands which belonged to them and their ancestors, and which they had designed as their habitations. I wish to say that, as a matter of fact, these lands without irrigation are not worth 10 cents an acre for any purpose. It is utterly impossible for any Indian to make a habitation upon those lands. As a matter of fact, they were not occupied by the Indians, but had been abandoned by them, and in many cases it was utterly impossible to find the owner of the land. I have nothing whatever to say now regarding the legal questions which the Senator has raised.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, what a commentary the remarks of the Senator from Nevada are upon the wisdom of the law under which allotments are made! I know something of this reservation. My first acquaintance with it was when I saw a long train of Indians, with their ponies, coming across that valley with swans, tied by the neck, across their ponies. They had been out shooting them at daylight. The wild swan breeds in that valley. My attention was then attracted to those Indians. I know, and the Senator knows, that in that valley anywhere near the sinks the rye grass is as high as your head, as high as a pony's back, and that that growth of pasture grows less and less as you get back from the sink and from the water. But along the River Beowawe, where that beautiful ranch is, up that valley——

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Beowawe is about 200 miles from there.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the rule. I am speaking of the class of land. The same conditions exist for at least three or four hundred miles east of this particular valley. There is along the river a fair growth of grass, but out in the sage brush there is practically nothing. With water that country would, to use a common metaphor, bloom as the rose. It will produce anything that you plant, almost, that soil and climate can produce.

Now, under the liberal policy of the Government that shuffled those Indians up and down the country for a hundred years—removing them from the garden spots of this continent, from the great valleys of the East and the Middle West and onto these arid and desert plains—they finally were up against the range of the Rocky or the Sierra Nevada mountains, as it might be, and there the Indians were stranded, compelled to huddle around these lakes and sinks and rivers and make for themselves a livelihood, until the emigrant came along and began to drive them back from those chosen spots.

By and by the Government in its generosity said to the Indians, "Well, surrender all that you have and all that you claim and we will give you 160 acres for a home." The word "home" appealed to the Indian, just as it appeals to a white man. They thought the white man had done such wonderful things to them—such things incomprehensible to them, with all their traditions and their knowledge—he would be able to give them a home; and they thought of resting, of settling down in some place where they and those to come after them would never move again.

So they said, "Yes; we will surrender it all if the white man will give us a home like the white man has." That was the inducement held out to them. They were taken out onto these plains, so accurately described by the Senator from Nevada where he says the lands are not worth more than 10 cents an acre, and these Indians were given the homes that they had been promised and that they had dreamed of and that they once had on this fair land. They were given this which is now spoken of so lightly, because, forsooth, it supports the argument in favor of taking away from them that which we have given them by patent.

Should we stop to construe by the fine lines of reasoning the instrument by which we confirmed the title of the Indians to these allotments? I care not whether it is called a "trust title" or a "trust patent" or not, it is all the Government gave them as a pledge of its good faith—that it would give them a home.

Mr. President, having brought them down to the narrow limits of a homestead of 160 acres, let us maintain them in their right to that home, not improve them out of it, not to farm them out of it, not go and perform voluntary services on their behalf and then charge them up by taking, out of their 160 acres, 150 acres from them.

If mine were the only voice raised on behalf of these Indians who have taken their homesteads under the law by which we allot 160 acres to each of them, I would still stand here and raise my voice against it.

This amendment is of general application all over the United States. While it is dealing with the lands in Nevada, yet the Commissioner says in his letter that it is general and that it should be general. I want to consider that for a moment. Let me finish reading his letter. The Secretary said:

> By canceling these allotments and allowing the allottees 10 acres of irrigable lands in lieu thereof, they will be fairly compensated and the State of Nevada and the Government benefited.

He does not say the Indian will be benefited. He says he will be compensated for having given 150 acres of his land, but that the State of Nevada and the General Government will be benefited by it. The Secretary proceeds:

> The canals and main laterals of the Truckee-Carson irrigation project have been extended by my direction to these lands, and there awaits only Congressional action authorizing the cancellation of the unrelinquished allotments on which trust patents have issued and the necessary appropriation to reimburse the Reclamation Service for the moneys expended in the reclamation of the lands to make these Indians absolutely independent of further Government aid.

They would be. An Indian is to be cut down to 10 acres out on the plains of Nevada or on the plains of Idaho, if you please, under the Reclamation Service, with no market perhaps within a day or a week's ride of his land; not enough to pasture 3 head of cattle, or 2 for that matter, not enough on which to grow a fair-sized orchard, not enough upon which to raise an ordinary Eastern potato patch—and this Indian is to be forever limited to 10 acres of this land.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. I will yield in just a moment. I desire to finish what I was saying. This division of the reclamation land into minor units is a mistake, except that it be right at the edge of some city which constitutes a market for small fruits and truck. But the idea is to take an Indian who knows nothing about growing these things, who has no orchard yet planted, who, if he plants it, must wait from five to eight or nine years for it to be productive, and to cut him down to 10 acres, on the theory that 10 acres are enough. The doctrine of our once distinguished statesman, Horace Greeley, is not applicable to an Indian, however applicable it might be to the people who come to these shores and can make a living by trucking upon a very small area of ground.

Now, I will yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Idaho will recognize the fact that in many instances in the irrigable region 10 acres of irrigated land are worth more than a thousand acres of desert land without water.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes, Mr. President, but——

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator will admit that that is the case in many instances. Coming to this particular instance, let me state to him that the Truckee-Carson project is within 20 miles of the Southern Pacific Railroad, a part of it within 10 miles; that that project is connected with the Southern Pacific Railroad by a branch road; that the town of Fallon presents a market for the commodities raised there; that the town of Reno, having 15,000 or 18,000 people, is within 45 miles, and that this land is almost worthless without water, while with water it is very productive.

I think the Senator will admit that if an Indian has 160 acres of land without water, from which he can make nothing and upon which he can not establish a home, so far as material interests are concerned he will be benefited by getting 10 acres of land with the water rights attached. The mere cost of water for each acre being about $30, he would be much better off by reason of this transaction than if he had adhered to his original location.

Now, I say nothing regarding the question of power. That is a separate question. But I do object, as I have some knowledge of this region, to the Senator illuminating the whole subject with his imagination and his fancy. The fact is that 10 acres in that region, with water rights attached, are worth a thousand acres of desert land without water rights attached.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada can not go further in eulogizing the reclamation project than I go. We have in the State of Idaho the Minidoka reclamation project. I speak in regard to it, not from theory, but from actual knowledge, frequent observation, and some experience. The Minidoka tracts in south Idaho form one of the largest Government irrigation projects in the United States. It is further advanced than any other project in the United States. The settlement is complete upon it. They raised crops upon it last year, and I had the opportunity of knowing whereof I speak. I know it to be a fact that these very small units are a failure, because it is too far from a sufficient market to enable them to engage in raising those products that might make it profitable.

But I was speaking to the question of power and justice and right. Even though the Indian could grow wealthy in a few years with the 10 acres of land, is that any reason why, having pledged to him by the patent of the United States 160 acres, some others should come in with their judgment and say that the Indian should not have that which the Government had given him, that they would take the responsibility of constituting themselves the Indian's guardian, and take away from him 150 acres of the land which had been given to him for purposes of a home, and leave him with 10 acres under conditions that always have a certain burden with them? The project of the reclamation law under which these lands are taken provides that there shall be certain maintenance fees, certain servitudes upon the land. The party is not free to go in there and take the land as he pleases and sell it.

Then again, these Indians were forbidden to sell their lands for twenty-five years under the allotment, and if they could not sell them, can the Secretary of the Interior sell them for them, because that is what he proposes to do? He says he has canceled these patents, and that he is throwing open the 150 acres for sale under the land laws of the United States. Can he do it? No; he has no such power. Will we give him the power? If we do, we commit the most inhuman act that this body or any other legislative body ever was guilty of. We violate the pledge we made to the Indian. We take from him that which we have no authority under the law to take from him.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am interrupting the Senator only to get his idea as to what ought to be done in that case. We have this condition, as I understand it. The Indian has 160 acres of land. That land is worthless, so far as raising anything on it, without irrigation. How are we going to get it irrigated and get the pay for the irrigation unless the Government does it wholly at its own expense? Does the Senator propose to amend the old law to that extent? The Indian, of course, has no money. The Indian can not pay for that irrigation. As I understand the scheme, it is for the Indian to surrender a certain portion of his land, and the Government at its own expense, in lieu of that, will then put in the irrigation works, at no expense whatever to him; and the balance of the land will be sold to white people who will use it and irrigate and really pay for the entire irrigation, and thereby make all the land valuable, whereas at the present time it has no value whatever, if I am correctly informed.

I am not criticising the Senator's position in the slightest degree. I simply want to know under what theory and how he will proceed to make those lands valuable to the Indian as well as to any white settlers.

Mr. HEYBURN. I propose to offer this amendment: After the word "authorized," line 24, page 39, to insert the words:

To make the same agreements with such allottees as he shall make with other persons.

I do not know how familiar this question may be to all the members of the Senate, but where a Government reclamation project is proposed in a country where there are some landowners to whom title has passed by patent from the United States, the Government does not go in and say: "If you will surrender a part of your land, we will take you in this project." The Government simply recognizes the rights of that settler and that patentee, and makes an arrangement with him under which he will receive the benefits of the water when the Government brings it there convenient for its use.

We have hundreds of such instances in the Boise-Payette reclamation project, which is now in a partial state of completion in Idaho, upon which many hundreds of thousands of dollars have been expended, and where they are now about reaching the point where they build their main laterals. Within the area of that Boise-Payette project there were hundreds of settlers who had title by patent from the Government of the United States, and when the Government proposed to bring the water in for the benefit of the lands that the Government still owned and of the settler who should rest upon it they went to the people who owned the land patented to them within the project and made contracts with them by which they compensated the Government for the use of the water and kept their land. There is no embarrassment about the situation. There is no difficulty whatever. We have the same condition in every reclamation project that is now either completed or in process of completion in the State of Idaho.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. FLINT. I will ask the Senator if, as a matter of fact, the limitation is not 160 acres within the reclamation project?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; it is the same size as an Indian allotment.

Mr. FLINT. No matter what may be his ownership, he is limited, if he goes into the reclamation project, to 160 acres?

Mr. HEYBURN. That is true and not true, both. I have in mind one case where parties, probably twenty-five or thirty years ago, had obtained a patent to certain lands under the desert-land act that are now included in the Boise-Payette reclamation project. They had varying tracts which they secured title to by compliance with the law to the satisfaction of the Department and obtained their patents. Some of those tracts were very much more than 160 acres. The Government could not compel them to give up anything. The Secretary of the Interior did not claim the right, nor did he have the right, to cancel any part of the entry of those white men who held by patent. What did he do? He made a contract with them. He dealt with them, recognizing their rights of property. Now, let them do the same thing with these Indians. The Indian allotment does not exceed 160 acres for each Indian; and the amendment which I shall propose more formally provides that the Government shall deal with the Indian as it has dealt with the white man.

I think in the valley I have been discussing with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] there are private land holdings that will have to be dealt with, or have been dealt with, within the reclamation project. I ask the Senator from Nevada if such is not the case? Were there any private land holdings with which the Government had to deal by contract?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think there were, and I think there are probably contracts of that kind that will have to be dealt with. But let me say to the Senator from Idaho that the Government has this difficulty to deal with: It has been unable to find the Indians to whom these allotments were made. I do not say that it has been unable to find them in all cases, but in most cases, it is my understanding that it has been unable. The allotments were made a long time ago. The Indians have scattered. It was impossible to live upon the lands. So the Government is in difficulty with reference to lands that were embraced within the irrigation project that are capable of being put to very high development by irrigation and cultivation. It is impossible to find the wandering Indians to whom the lands have been assigned.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Secretary of the Interior says in regard to a very large tract of these lands that the relinquishment has been secured by him. Now, how could he secure it if the Indian could not be found?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I presume the Secretary of the Interior did secure relinquishment from some, but I understand they were able to find but a very small proportion. I do not pretend to be very accurate in this statement, because the matter has only come to my attention since the Senator opened its consideration.

Mr. HEYBURN. The principle is the same.

Mr. President, I would not have risen to discuss this matter had it interested only the State of Nevada, because I know the Senator from Nevada is not only alert to the interests of Nevada of every kind within the State, but that he is able to represent the rights of all parties in the State. However, I have in my mind the same conditions in the State of Idaho. There they are now proposing to inaugurate and carry out a great reclamation project that covers the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, in the southeastern portion of the State. They are also proposing to allot the lands to those Indians upon that tract. It is a large project and a large tract and a rich country. It is arid, and it will only produce crops when under water. I foresee allotments to these Indians, under such a scheme as this, of 10 acres, and I foresee that in a few years we will have that tribe of Indians, or a large percentage of them, paupers in the midst of our community, because they will not be able to maintain themselves upon 10 acres. Indians that were accustomed to run herds of 50 or 100 or 200 horses or herds of cattle all over that magnificent reserve of theirs, brought down to the limits of 10 acres of ground, humiliated, would have to part with their stock in the market for what they could get for it and make their improvements and build their house upon 10 acres of land. There is not one white man out of a hundred thousand who could maintain his family upon any 10 acres of ground under such conditions. To take men untried, untaught, and inexperienced in agriculture, in home making, and in business and put them upon 10 acres of land—I care not what conditions you surround them with—is simply to promise agricultural pauperism; not pauperism of a few families, but of thousands and thousands of these Indians; and we have thousands of them in Idaho.

I had in mind when I read this proposed amendment not the Indians of Nevada, because I saw by its terms that it was general in its character, but I had in mind our own Indians, the Nez Percé Indians, who have taken their lands in severalty; to whom their lands have been allotted, a greater portion of them, in the humid region, but some of them under arid conditions—the Bannock and Blackfeet Indians, the Indians on the Fort Hall Reservation, the Cœur d'Alène Indians, who are now being allotted their lands—I had those in my mind when I rose to speak for the Indians. I do not think we can afford to do this by an amendment of this kind, which is new legislation. If new legislation has no place in an appropriation bill, then certainly this class of new legislation should not be here, because it is new legislation which recognizes an act of the Secretary of the Interior which was without any authority—and I say it without any personal reflection upon the Secretary's motive or upon the Secretary in any way—and that was absolutely inexcusable under any construction of the law of justice or of right or of the law of the land.

Mr. President, I want these Indians to be maintained in the rights we have forced on them. As the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has said, they did not ask to take their lands in severalty. There is no instance in which these Indians have asked to do that. Their instincts are against it; their instincts are tribal; their instincts are for land in common, like one great family. We forced these conditions upon them, not, I am afraid, in a spirit of pure unselfishness, not, I am afraid, in order that we might elevate the Indian, but that there might be a margin of land open to sale and settlement for the benefit of the white man.

The 300,000 acres of land in the Cœur d'Alène Reservation—as fine land as lies under the sun—will be open for sale and settlement. I have been importuned, by letter and in every other way, ever since I have been a member of this body, "For God's sake, get these lands opened; we want to get a whack at them"—these beautiful farm lands of the Cœur d'Alène Indian Reservation. We are opening them because that policy has been adopted by the Government. I do not propose to stand here and attempt to stem the tide of the last twenty-five or thirty years in Indian legislation; but I do propose, so far as I am concerned, to see that no Indian is ever deprived of one acre of his 160 acres of his allotted land, unless he is duly compensated for it; and I propose that the Indian shall have some voice in that contract.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho how he would deal with a case of this kind: We will assume that there are 200,000 acres of land that can be included within a given irrigation project, such as the Truckee-Carson project. That land is entirely desert land and is worthless, or nearly worthless, unless water is applied. Suppose that 40,000 acres of land lie within that body of 200,000 acres which have been allotted to Indians; that the Indians are not upon the ground; that the most of them have wandered away, and that none of them have sought to make habitations upon the ground. I ask the Senator how he would deal with a case of that kind, when the development of the 40,000 acres may be absolutely essential to the feasibility of the entire project?

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, Mr. President, I would be generous enough to allow the Indians to share in the general benefits of a general system of public improvement which is at the expense of the Government of the United States. I would recognize their right to an equal participation, especially when we could not get away from it. I would give them their rights, in any event. In this case the whole sum total of the subject is that we do not want to spend any part of this money for the benefit of the Indian unless the Indian gives an equivalent value or sum for it. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, that these Indians shall reap the benefits of this splendid system which we call the irrigation project. Let them reap the benefits. I care not if they reap more benefits than the white man, or less; give them their share, whatever it may be.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then I understand the Senator to say that he would favor the improvement of these lands by the construction of canals and ditches over them at an expense of nearly $30 an acre, and that he would give the benefit of that to men who can not be found?

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, that is carrying the inquiry a good way.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is the case as it exists in Nevada.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator supposes these Indians can not be found. I presume he means some of them can not be found, or presumably can not be found; but you make good their allotments; you make good the pledge of the Government that they will have a home of 160 acres, and they will find themselves.

Mr. NEWLANDS. At all events, I understand the Senator to favor that.

Mr. HEYBURN. According to the statement of the Senator from Nevada, the Government has failed in its attempt to give them a home, and now the least it can do is to make that contract good to the extent of furnishing water, so that the Indian can convert the desert into a home, and he will find the home.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And the Senator himself would favor that without compensation from the Indians, as is required from the settlers?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. The Indians compensated the Government of the United States. When they gave up the lands and accepted the allotments, they compensated the Government. It is only keeping our contract to give them homes, and we can afford to do it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let the amendment to the amendment be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, line 24, after the word "authorized," it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by inserting "to make the same agreements with such allottees as he makes with other persons."

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire to extend the amendment by striking out, after the word "authorized," on page 39, line 24, all down to and including line 2, on page 41.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] to the amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. After the word "authorized," in line 24, page 39, it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the amendment down to and including line 2, on page 41, as follows:

in his discretion, to cancel any or all of such allotments, including any trust patent which may have issued therefor, and in lieu thereof to reserve for and allot to each Indian having an allotment of such irrigable land and legally entitled to the same, 10 acres of irrigable land, which shall be exempt from the payment of any charges by the allottees assessed under the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., 308), but such expense shall be borne by the United States: Provided, That any of the lands which may have been included in the canceled allotments and which are not needed or reserved for allotment in smaller areas, shall be restored to the public domain, to be disposed of subject to the provisions of the above-mentioned reclamation act: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to expend annually for ten years not to exceed $12,064 to repay to the reclamation fund moneys expended by him therefrom in extending the Truckee-Carson irrigation project to 4,640 acres of land in Churchill County, Nev., being the part of the lands embraced with other lands in the Indian allotments which have been voluntarily relinquished in consideration of receiving reallotments of 10 acres of irrigable land, or which may be canceled under authority of this act. There is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $12,064, being the first of ten installments for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into effect.

And in lieu thereof to insert "to make the same agreements with such allottees as he makes with other persons."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment as amended be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment as amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

That in carrying out any irrigation project which may be undertaken under the provisions of the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., 388), known as the "reclamation act," and which may make possible, and provide for, in connection with the reclamation of other lands, the irrigation of all or any part of the irrigable lands heretofore included in allotments made to Indians under the fourth section of the general allotment act, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to make the same agreements with such allottees as he makes with other persons.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I can not understand where the amendment of the Senator from Idaho came in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, line 24, after the word "authorized," in the committee amendment, it was proposed to insert "to make the same agreements with such allottees as he makes with other persons;" and to strike out all of the remainder of the amendment down to and including line 2, on page 41.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Do I understand that this amendment entirely does away with the disposition of this matter that has been made by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; that was my intention. My intention was to nullify the acts which have been partially completed with reference to the taking of these lands, and naturally to strike out the balance of the section, which merely provides for the machinery for doing it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as amended has been agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether an appropriation has been made for the Indian school at Carson City, Nev.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes, sir; on page 39.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 41, after line 2, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the board of county commissioners of Ormsby County, Nev., for damages to the public road caused by breaking of the dam belonging to the Indian school at Carson City, Nev., the sum of $70 from an unexpended balance of the appropriation "Indian school, Carson City, Nev., 1907," not required for other purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Senecas of New York (treaty)," at the top of page 43, to strike out:

For interest, in lieu of investment, on $75,000, at 5 per cent, per act of June 27, 1846, $3,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 4, to strike out:

For interest, at 5 per cent, on $43,050 transferred from the Ontario Bank to the United States Treasury, per act of June 27, 1846, $2,152.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 9, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to place on the books of the Treasury to the credit of the Seneca Indians of New York the sum of $118,050, being the value of the stocks held in trust for the Indians and taken by the United States and canceled under authority of the act of June 27, 1846 (9 Stat., p. 35), said amount to be deposited in the Treasury to draw interest at 5 per cent per annum, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to pay per capita to the members of the Seneca tribe of New York the said sum under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, subject to the provisions of the acts of April 21, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 201), and March 2, 1907 (34 Stat. L., p. 1221).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 3, after the word "all," to strike out "$11,002.50" and insert "$124,050," so as to read:

In all, $124,050.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Wahpeton School," on page 45, after lin 16, to strike out:

For the support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Wahpeton, N. Dak., and for pay of superintendent, $18,200;
For general repairs and improvements, $2,000;
In all, $20,200.

And to insert:

For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at Indian school at Wahpeton, N. Dak., $16,800;
For pay of superintendent, $1,500;
For purchase of live stock, seed, equipment of farm, and machinery, $6,000, to be immediately available;
For construction of concrete walk, driveways, grading, etc., $10,000;
For the erection of a school hospital, $20,000;
For equipment of hospital, $5,000;
For equipment of laundry, workshop, and school buildings, $5,000.
For general repairs and improvements, $2,000;
In all, $66,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 24, to insert:

For pay of Indian agent at Fort Berthold Agency, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 14, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell and convey 640 acres of the lands, together with the buildings and other appurtenances thereunto belonging, heretofore set aside as reservations for the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Agency and the Arapahoe Indian School in Oklahoma; and that he be further authorized to use all or any part of the proceeds of the sale thereof in the erection of new buildings, and in repairs and improvements, at the present Cheyenne Boarding School under the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Agency, Okla., and in the establishment of such day schools as may be required for the said Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians in Oklahoma; and that the balance of the said proceeds of sale, if there be any, may be utilized in the support and maintenance of the said Cheyenne Boarding School or the said day schools.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, while I think of it, at this particular point, the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], who is called away, asked me to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 49, after line 4, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the restrictions on the alienation of any 1 acre of the lands allotted to William Billy and Tom Jack are hereby removed.

Mr. CLAPP. That is for the purpose of allowing those Indians to convey land to a church. They do not know yet from which allotment they will desire to take it. I promised the Senator from Oklahoma that I would present the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the subhead "Sacs and Foxes of the Mississippi (treaty)," on page 50, line 21, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "one;" and in line 23, before the word "thousand,' to strike out "ten" and insert "five," so as to make the clause read:

For interest on $100,000, at 5 per cent, per second article of treaty of October 21, 1837, $5,000.

Mr. CLAPP. It is discovered that that amendment is an error, and I ask that it be rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLAPP. Now, on page 51, lines 13 and 14, the committee has proposed an amendment to change the total from fifty-one thousand to one hundred and forty-six thousand dollars. I ask that that amendment be disagreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment referred to by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLAPP. I now move that lines 13 and 14 on page 51 be stricken out, and that after line 4 on page 51 the words "In all, $51,000" be inserted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 51, after line 12, it is proposed to strike out:

In all, $51,000.

And on the same page, after line 4, to insert:

In all, $51,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, should not the total be $151,000, in view of the amendment from line 5 to line 13?

Mr. CLAPP. No.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As I understand, by the amendment, beginning on line 5, and ending at line 12, $100,000 is appropriated. Should not that be included in the total?

Mr. CLAPP. The present idea is that we should restore the House provision, but put it above the amendment of the committee, beginning in line 5.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to ask if the amendment in lines 21 and 23, on page 50, was rejected?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. Then the item in lines 13 and 14 should be placed after the word "medicine," in line 4, page 51.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; the total amount should come in there. That is what has been done.

Mr. CURTIS. That is right.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 51, after line 4, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay per capita to the Sac and Fox of the Mississippi tribe of Indians in the State of Oklahoma, the sum of $100,000, out of the trust fund now to their credit in the United States Treasury, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That said payment shall only be made upon application of a majority of the members of said tribes expressed in open council.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Five Civilized Tribes," on page 51, line 21, after the word "patents," to insert "therefor;" and in line 22, after the word "dollars," to insert "reimbursable and equitably apportioned," so as to make the clause read:

For special clerical force in the office of the United States Indian agent, Union Agency, and miscellaneous expenses in connection with entering of remittances received in account of payments of town lots and issuance of patents therefor, and conveying same, $6,000, reimbursable and equitably apportioned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 2, after the date "1906," to insert "and acts amendatory thereto;" and in line 3, after the word "dollars," to insert "reimbursable, to be charged to each lease at the time of its approval, not to exceed $2," so as to make the clause read:

For clerical work and labor connected with the leasing of Creek and Cherokee lands for mineral and other purposes, and the leasing of lands of full-blood Indians under the act of April 26, 1906, and acts amendatory thereto, $40,000, reimbursable, to be charged to each lease at the time of its approval, not to exceed $2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 8, after the word "dollars," to insert "reimbursable, in each case to be charged to the land involved," so as to make the clause read:

For clerical work and labor connected with the sale of inherited and other lands, Five Civilized Tribes, $15,000, reimbursable, in each case to be charged to the land involved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 19, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That so much as may be necessary may be used in the employment of clerical force in the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. KEAN. I ask the reason for that amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. The object of the amendment is suggested by the Department that sometimes they could use some of the force provided for in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The work down there might lessen more rapidly than they anticipated, and in that case they could transfer the force to Washington.

Mr. KEAN. I move to strike out the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 53, line 2, before the word "allotted," to strike out "of" and insert "power of attorney, contract, deed, or agreement to sell any," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to investigate or cause to be investigated any lease, power of attorney, contract, deed, or agreement to sell any allotted land which he has reason to believe has been obtained by fraud or in violation of the terms of existing agreements with any of the Five Civilized Tribes, as provided by the act approved March 3, 1905, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 20, to increase the appropriation for the maintenance, strengthening, and enlarging of the tribal schools of the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Seminole nations from $150,000 to $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 6, after the words "Secretary of the Interior," to insert:

who is hereby authorized to designate the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, or other suitable person or persons, to perform, under his direction, any duty now or hereafter required by law of the Secretary of the Interior relating to affairs in the Indian Territory, and to pay from this appropriation clerical and other expenses incident to such work.

So as to make the clause read:

For the completion of the work heretofore required by law to be done by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, $143,410, said appropriation to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, who is hereby authorized to designate the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, or other suitable person or persons, to perform, under his direction, any duty now or hereafter required by law of the Secretary of the Interior relating to affairs in the Indian Territory, and to pay from this appropriation clerical and other expenses incident to such work.

Mr. TELLER. I have a serious objection to that amendment for two reasons. In the first place, it is out of order; but my objection is not simply that it is out of order. It presents a very remarkable proposition; and I think, when Senators look at it, they will see that it is one that ought never to be adopted. I am going to raise the point of order on it. The amendment provides that the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to designate the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, or other suitable person or persons, to perform, under his direction, any duty now or hereafter required by law.

That amounts to the appointment of a Deputy Secretary of the Interior. The proposition is so absurd that it does not seem to me to need any discussion. It is absolutely out of order; and it is disgraceful, even if it were in order. The proposition that we should authorize the Secretary of the Interior to create somewhere down in the Indian Territory a subofficer with the same grade that he has is simply monstrous. The House knocked it out.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. TELLER. In a moment. The proposition went out on a point of order in the House. It is amenable to a point of order, and that is the easiest way to dispose of it, I think.

Mr. CLAPP. There is an easier way. In reply to the Senator from Colorado, I want to say that I quite agree with him that it is preposterous in this, that it is absolute surplusage. It is already the law; and, for that reason, personally I was averse to reiterating the law in this particular case. I have no objection whatever to the paragraph going out.

Mr. TELLER. I do not care how it goes out, and I will not stop to discuss whether it is the law or not. The fact that the Secretary of the Interior may do this——

Mr. CLAPP. He may do it under existing law.

Mr. TELLER. But he has never been authorized to do it by a statute of this kind. However, if it goes out, that ends the controversy; so there is no use of our discussing it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Oregon," on page 56, after line 16, to insert:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $108,750, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the Indians of the Klamath Agency for the lands conveyed to the California and Oregon Land Company, in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 21 1906 (34 Stat. L., pp. 325, 368), said sum to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Indians and expended for their benefit in such manner and for such purposes as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be effective until said Indians, through the usual channels, shall execute a release of any claims and demands of every kind against the United States for the land involved.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 57, line 15, after the word "pupils," I move to insert "including Alaskan natives."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, line 15, after the word "pupils," at the end of the line, it is proposed to insert "including Alaskan natives," so as to read:

For support and education of 600 Indian pupils, including Alaskan natives, at the Indian school, Salem, Oreg., and for pay of superintendent, $102,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "South Dakota," on page 58, line 23, to increase the appropriation for the pay of the Indian agent at the Lower Brule Agency, South Dakota, from $1,400 to $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 2, to increase the appropriation for the pay of the Indian agent at the Pine Ridge Agency, S. Dak., from $1,800 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GAMBLE. On account of the amendments just adopted, there should be an amendment changing the total in line 9, page 59, by striking out the word "eleven" and inserting "twelve," and also striking out the word "five" and inserting "four."

Mr. CLAPP. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 59, line 9, it is proposed to change the total so as to read:

In all, $12,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the subhead "Rapid City School," on page 60, after line 18, to insert:

For developing the water from the springs on school lands, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 23, to increase the total appropriation for the support and education of 250 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Rapid City, S. Dak., etc., from $59,350 to $64,350.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux of Nebraska (treaty)," on page 61, line 25, after the word "account," to insert:

that the unexpended balance for the fiscal year 1908 is hereby appropriated and made available for 1909.

So as to read:

And provided further, That the number of rations issued shall not exceed the number of Indians on each reservation, and any excess in the number of rations issued shall be disallowed in the settlement of the agent's account; that the unexpended balance for the fiscal year 1908 is hereby appropriated and made available for 1909.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Confederated bands of Utes (treaty)," on page 65, after line 6, to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to advance, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the interest which would be due on the 4 and 5 per cent trust funds of the Ute tribe of Indians for the fiscal year 1909, amounting to $50,000 and $25,000, respectively, and to place the amount on the books of the Treasury to the credit of the Ute tribe of Indians; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to use so much thereof as may be necessary to prevent certain absentee Utes from suffering: Provided, That the amount so spent for said Utes shall be charged to their individual accounts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 8, on page 67.

Mr. ANKENY. I wish to offer an amendment at this point. I send it to the desk.

Mr. KEAN. I thought committee amendments only were being considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is it a committee amendment which the Senator proposes?

Mr. CLAPP. I am willing that it shall be treated as a committee amendment. It may be offered now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It can be offered as a committee amendment, the chairman of the committee being willing that it shall be treated as a committee amendment. The Senator from Washington proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert after line 8, on page 67, the following:

For the second of five installments to the Indians residing on the Colville Reservation, for the cession by said Indians to the United States of 1,500,000 acres of land opened to settlement by an act of Congress, "To provide for the opening of a part of the Colville Reservation, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1892, being a part of the full sum set aside and held in the Treasury of the United States in payment for said land under the terms of the act approved June 21, 1906, ratifying the agreement ceding said land to the United States under date of May 9, 1891, $300,000, to be expended for the benefit of said Indians in accordance with the provisions of the said act setting aside in the Treasury the money in payment for the land ceded.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Wyoming," on page 69, after line 8, to strike out:

That all lands allotted to Indians in severalty or reserved for their use in common on the Shoshone or Wind River Reservation, in Wyoming, susceptible of irrigation, may be leased for a term not exceeding twenty years for cultivation under irrigation, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and he is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying this provision into full force and effect.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I hope the amendment will be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 69, after line 17, to insert:

That the lands allotted to Indians in severalty or reserved for their use in common on the Uintah and Uncompahgre reservations, in Utah, susceptible of irrigation may be leased for a term not exceeding twenty years for cultivation under irrigation in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and he is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying this provision into full force and effect.

Mr. TELLER and Mr. SUTHERLAND addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I move to amend by striking out the provision as reported by the committee and inserting in lieu thereof what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment reported in the bill by the committee it is proposed to insert:

That whenever it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that the allotted lands of any Indian are susceptible of irrigation and that the allottee is unable to cultivate the same or any portion thereof, such lands or such portion thereof may be leased by the Secretary of the Interior with the consent of the allottee for a period not exceeding ten years under such rules and regulations as he may establish.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the amendment as proposed by the committee provides that lands allotted to Indians on the Uintah and Uncompahgre reservations may be leased for certain purposes for a term not exceeding twenty years. It will be seen that the power conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior is without any limitation whatever. It is entirely left to his arbitrary discretion. I do not think it is wise policy to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to lease any and all allotments of Indians with or without any reason. I think whenever an Indian is unable to work upon his own land it is all right to permit the land, or so much of it as he is unable to cultivate, to be leased. But I do not believe in any policy which will permit an Indian who is able to work to sit on a fence and watch a white man work.

The very object of alloting land to the Indian is to enable him to become self-supporting, to compel him to go to work, and to put upon him the responsibility of an individual. I think the amendment does not accomplish that result. Heretofore, so far as I am aware, no such provision as this has ever been passed. The amendment which I have suggested goes further than existing law. Under existing law the Secretary of the Interior can not lease except in cases where the Indian by reason of age or incapacity can not work. This broadens that provision, and authorizes the Secretary to lease the land whenever the Indian for any reason is unable to work.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah will modify the amendment so as to exclude the reservations in Idaho. I have seen some instances of Indian landlordism and white men working for them, and I do not want any of that in our country. I do not think the amendment should be adopted either as it is reported by the committee or as proposed to be amended. I do not think any amendment should be adopted authorizing the Indians or any one for the Indians to lease their homes for a period of either ten or twenty years or any other number of years.

As has been stated, the purpose of the allotment of lands in severalty was to make them homes to live on, so that the Indians might become the heads of families with permanent residences; that they would have the incentive to build their buildings and fences, put out orchards, and improve their land. Now, if they can lease the land to a nonresident, who will perhaps raise a crop on the land and never see it, while the Indian lives on his income around the suburbs of our cities or where he may——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not desire to have the amendment apply to the Senator's State if he does not care to have it. I am perfectly willing to modify the amendment so that it shall apply only to the Uintah and Uncompahgre reservations in Utah.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would not presume to interfere by suggestion or otherwise with any legislation that is confined to the State of any Senator, but where legislation is proposed of a general character then I must necessarily look at the whole question.

I was about to say that last season I saw instances where parties outside of the State in which the reservation was located leased large tracts of Indian lands, and sent people in there who lived in covered wagons and tents to raise a crop of beets. They took the crop of beets away, and the Indians have been living on their bank account ever since, and they do not learn to raise beets or anything else. They have just learned to spend the income of a sort of baronial proprietorship, which I do not think tends to build up or elevate the Indians, or promises well for their future.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to modify the amendment by inserting, after the word "Indian," the words "of the former Uintah and Uncompahgre Indian reservations in Utah."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah, as modified, to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. CLAPP. I offer an amendment to be inserted on page 23, after line 5.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent in fee to the Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States for certain lands heretofore set apart and used for church purposes, and more particularly described as follows: The southeast quarter of section 36, township 4 south of range 34 east of Boise meridian, county of Bingham, State of Idaho, containing 160 acres, more or less, being part of the lands included within the Fort Hall Indian Reservation: Provided, That said patent shall not issue until the Indians of said reservation shall have given their consent to the grant through their business committee or council in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior shall provide.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to the fact that I think the amendment should come in after line 13. It applies to the Fort Hall Reservation.

Mr. CLAPP. Very well; change it to line 13.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I offer an amendment, to be inserted after line 22, on page 23.

The amendment was read and agreed to, as follows:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation for the survey of the Lemhi Reservation, Idaho, in the act approved June 21, 1906, is hereby made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

Mr. CLAPP. I offer an amendment, to be inserted after line 6, on page 30.

The amendment was read and agreed to, as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay to the executive committee of the White Earth band of Chippewa Indians, in Minnesota, the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in the annual celebration of said band to be held June 14, 1907, out of the funds belonging to said band.

Mr. CLAPP. I offer the amendment I send to the desk, to be inserted after line 14, on page 51.

The SECRETARY. On page 51, after line 14, it is proposed to insert:

That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300,000, for the fulfillment of certain treaty obligations to the Mexican Kickapoo Indians for differences arising out of the stipulations of article 4 of the treaty of June 28, 1862, and for all other differences growing out of any and all treaties and agreements heretofore made between said Indians and the United States. Said sum of $215,000 shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury as authorized and directed by a majority of the members of said Mexican Kickapoo tribe in council assembled. Such council shall be composed of a majority of those surviving members of said tribe, male and female, heretofore allotted in Oklahoma. The authorization above mentioned and the proceedings of said council shall be attested by a clerk of the United States district court of the Territory of Arizona. Said sum shall be immediately available, and the indorsement of the warrant issued in payment thereof shall be deemed and shall be a receipt in full for all claims of every kind whatsoever of the said Mexican Kickapoo Indians against the United States, and such authorization to the Secretary of the Treasury by said Indians as herein provided shall be considered to be and shall be an acceptance of said sum in final settlement of all claims of every kind whatsoever of the said Mexican Kickapoo Indians against the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I should like the Senator to explain the amendment somewhat. Has it been recommended by the Department?

Mr. CLAPP. No, sir. I was going to state to the Senate that the Department is opposed to this measure. The Department was opposed to it last session. Last session, if I remember correctly, we put it on the bill in the form of an amendment.

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. And it was lost in conference. A statement concerning this matter would necessarily be a very long one, and would go into the history of the tribe. They have a very large claim, as they allege. The committee has gone over it very carefully, and notwithstanding the attitude of the Department, the committee by a majority voted in favor of recommending the payment of $215,000 in final settlement of this claim.

These Indians are known as the Kickapoos, and they have been trying for some time, at least a large number of them, to get into Mexico. Arrangements have been partially made once or twice whereby they could have secured a large tract of land in Mexico had the Government not withheld what it owed them. I am speaking now, not of the $215,000, but money which was actually in the Treasury and which we have heretofore voted to them.

They were further embarrassed by the fact that notwithstanding a plain and direct authorization by Congress to seventeen of them, I think, to dispose of their allotments in Oklahoma, the permission was withheld, and it was brought again to the attention of Congress.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has given the details of this matter more study than has the chairman of the committee. It is one of those cases where perhaps, without being able to point out specifically the various steps upon which the claim is founded, I for one have no hesitation in standing here and saying that I believe we should pay these Indians this sum of money. My own view would be that we owe them much more than this, but I believe that this granted to them now while their negotiations are pending for land in Mexico which they want, surrounded by conditions much more congenial to them than the conditions of Oklahoma, will enable them to be placed in a position where they will in every way be self-sustaining. They prefer this. A great many of them have been trying for years to get away, insisting that they would not remain in the United States. As I said before, the Senator from Colorado knows all the details. I can only say to the Senate for one that I am thoroughly satisfied that we ought to make this settlement with this tribe of Indians.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I do not care to have the time of the Senate consumed unless the Senator from Colorado wishes to make a statement. I recalled the fact that this matter was before Congress last session, and I had an impression that it was voted upon adversely in the Senate. The Senator from Minnesota says it was defeated in conference. I take the Senator's word.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say to the Senator that the committee has twice reported this favorably heretofore. This is the third time. I do not want to discuss it. It would take an hour or two.

Mr. GALLINGER. If this amendment should become law, it would be a final adjustment with these Indians?

Mr. TELLER. A final adjustment.

Mr. GALLINGER. The amendment provides that they shall relinquish all claims against the Government.

Mr. TELLER. Everything. I join with the Senator from Minnesota in saying that I think they would recover if they went into court for three or four times this amount. I say that as a lawyer, having examined the case during the last four or five years.

Mr. GALLINGER. They would have rights in court if this was denied to them?

Mr. TELLER. They need something right now. It is a question of life or death. I shall be content if we can have a vote on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKETT. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

For the erection of a warehouse for the Indian Service at Omaha, Nebr., on land now owned by the Government of the United States and used in part by the Quartermaster-General of the Army and known as the "old corral," $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I move the adoption of the amendment I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 70, after line 18, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue to the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions a patent for and covering the following described lands, amounting approximately to 311 acres, now and for many years reserved and occupied by the said Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions as an Indian school, to wit: All of the south half of section 9 lying north of the Big Popoagie River; that part of the west half of the southwest quarter of section 10 west of the Big Popoagie River, and that part of section 16 north of the Big Popoagie River; all in township 1 south, range 4 east of the Wind River meridian, on the Wind River Reservation, in Wyoming: Provided, That the said patent shall not issue until the Indians of the said reservation have given their consent to the grant through their business committee or council in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior shall provide.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. On page 57, at the end of line 15, I move to insert the words:

Including Alaskan Indians.

Mr. KEAN. Those words have been put in.

Mr. CLAPP. That has already been done.

Mr. FULTON. If it has been I am very glad to know it. I asked the Senator from Minnesota a while ago.

Mr. CLAPP. I thought at the time the Senator asked me in reference to another matter.

Mr. FULTON. Of course I accept his statement now.

Mr. STONE. I propose the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 53, after line 13, it is proposed to insert:

That contracts by and between persons stricken by the Secretary of the Interior from the final rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes and attorneys employed by them to secure their restoration to the rolls be, and the same hereby are, when approved by the Secretary of the Interior, declared valid and enforceable in the event of the restoration of said persons to the rolls as against allotted lands or tribal funds of the persons so restored to the rolls.

Mr. KEAN. Let me hear the amendment read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will again be read at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. KEAN. I should think this a very dangerous amendment, and I raise the point of order against it. It is general legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment does propose general legislation and is, therefore, subject to the point of order.

Mr. STONE. The Chair holds it to be subject to the point of order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STONE. I suppose it is subject to the point of order. I wish to say, however, that it is an amendment which the chairman of the committee and others who are familiar with the facts thought ought to be incorporated in the bill. I think the Senator from New Jersey has not looked into it and makes his objection probably without a knowledge of the facts. I hope he will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. The amendment is subject to the point of order, no doubt, but the facts are that contracts have been made, and I understand several people have been placed on the roll as the result of the litigation and the work of counsel. But the Secretary has no authority at present to approve and make those contracts valid. This leaves it entirely with the Secretary of the Interior. It gives no life or force to the contracts until he does approve them. But it does give him authority, where he feels that they have been justly earned, to validate them by his approval. While it is subject to the point of order, I think it is a proper amendment.

Mr. STONE. I will say further to the Senator from New Jersey that about the close of Mr. Hitchcock's term as Secretary of the Interior a number of Indians were stricken from the roll—it was thought arbitrarily and without good reason. Suits were brought for a number of them in the courts here in the District, and the judgments were in favor of the Indians.

Mr. KEAN. I can not help but yield to the persuasive words of the Senator from Missouri, and also of my friend from Minnesota. I will withdraw the point of order. I think it is bad legislation, nevertheless.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey withdraws the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. On page 54, after line 13, I move to insert the words:

Provided, That the work shall be completed by May 1, 1909.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee amendment at that point in the bill has been stricken out.

Mr. OWEN. After the word "Interior," on page 54, line 6, I move to insert those words. I was out of the Chamber at the time the amendment was acted upon.

Mr. CLAPP. I see no objection whatever to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Oklahoma kindly restate his amendment?

Mr. OWEN. On page 54, line 6, after the words "Secretary of the Interior," insert the words "said work to be completed by May 1, 1909."

Mr. CLAPP. While the Department has not been consulted on that question, still, as it goes beyond the full term of another session, in which we can further extend the time if we find it absolutely necessary, I see no objection myself to the amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the record will show that Congress has repeatedly tried to enact legislation to compel the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes to complete their work, and I have been heartily in favor of such legislation. We provided in the appropriation act of 1904 that the work should be completed by July, 1905. I would support the Senator's amendment if he would fix the date July 1, 1909, because we appropriate money for the full year.

Mr. OWEN. I agree to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma can modify his amendment.

Mr. OWEN. I make that modification.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated as modified.

The SECRETARY. On page 54, line 6, after the words "Secretary of the Interior," insert the words "Said work to be completed before July 1, 1909."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to offer an amendment. I submitted it this morning. It is simply for printing some rolls.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 54, after the amendment just agreed to, in line 13, insert as a separate paragraph the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to, immediately upon the approval of this bill, transmit to the Public Printer either the original or a true and correct copy of the original of each and every roll of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians now in the possession and custody of either of said Departments, or of any bureau, division, or commission thereof or thereunder, prepared by United States officers, agents, or representatives during the years 1830 to 1890, inclusive; and the Public Printer is hereby directed to, immediately upon the receipt of said rolls, print 125 copies of same, 25 copies to be for the use of the Department, 50 copies for the use of the Senate, and 50 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys now in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to pay the expense of printing said rolls.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I feel obliged to make a point of order against the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the point of order?

Mr. CURTIS. It is undoubtedly general legislation and changes existing law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the proposed amendment is contrary to the rule, and the Chair sustains the point of order against it.

Mr. OWEN. On page 53, after line 13, I move to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized, if after investigation he believes such action justified, to pay Samuel Brown $7,388.94 from any fund in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Creek Nation.

I have a report from the Interior Department, recommending this legislation, which I send to the desk.

Mr. KEAN. As I understand the amendment, it provides that the payment shall be made out of the fund of the Creek Nation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the fact. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What disposition does the Senator from Oklahoma desire to have made of the communication from the Interior Department?

Mr. OWEN. I wish to have it sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

Mr. CURTIS. In view of the fact that the amendment has been agreed to, I suggest that the report be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. OWEN. I agree to that.

There being no objection, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 26, 1908.

Hon. MOSES E. CLAPP,
Chairman of Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

SIR: I have received, by your informal reference, draft of an item of legislation regarding a claim of Samuel W. Brown against the Creek Nation of Indians, and make the following report thereon.

Samuel W. Brown was treasurer of the Creek Nation during the years 1884, 1885, 1886, and 1887, and it is represented that during this period he collected $14,499.12 and paid out $29,302.40, leaving a balance due him of $14,803.28. The claim was investigated by a representative of the Department, who reported as follows:

"It was presumed that when this claim was presented we might be able to find some trace of the records of the nation during the time Mr. Brown was acting as treasurer, but after several conferences with Messrs. Mars & Mars, his attorneys, and Principal Chief Porter, I am led to the conclusion that no records can be located, and the only evidence that can be produced is now presented in the shape of affidavits from various parties who claim to have some knowledge of the facts obtained from his books before they were mislaid or destroyed.

"It therefore becomes simply a matter of faith in the statements of the officers of the Creek Nation, whose affidavits are presented, and the act of the national council asking for the appropriation of $7,388.94 as a compromise in settlement for the claim presented."

Mr. Brown submitted his claim to the Creek national council, and that body, as a result of a compromise on a 50 per cent basis, passed an act which was approved by the principal chief on November 4, 1905, making an appropriation of $7,388.94, which was forwarded to the Department for submission to the President.

On the showing made, the claim being solely supported by affidavits, the Department did not feel justified on that character of evidence in recommending the approval of the act, and on May 10, 1907, recommended that the President disapprove the act, which was accordingly done on May 13, 1907.

Under the provisions of the act of Congress, approved April 26, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 137), the Department has authority (section 11) to pay all valid claims against the Creek Nation contracted after July 1, 1902, but there is no authority of law for the payment of this claim, and as I would have no objection to the payment of the amount of the claim if satisfactory evidence of its justification were furnished, I recommend that the draft submitted by you, which reads:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay S. W. Brown $7,388.94 from any funds in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Creek Nation," be amended so as to read:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, if after investigation he believes such action to be justified, to pay to Samuel W. Brown $7,388.94 from any funds in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Creek Nation."

If amended as suggested, I recommend that the draft be enacted into law.

Respectfully,

FRANK PUREE,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. OWEN. After the amendment just agreed to I move to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay to D. H. Johnson the sum of $3,000, in full of his salary as governor, in accordance with the act of the Chickasaw legislature.

This item has not been reported on by the Department.

Mr. KEAN. May I ask the Senator from Oklahoma from what fund it is to be paid?

Mr. OWEN. It is to be paid from the Chickasaw fund for service rendered to the Chickasaw Nation in pursuance of an act of their legislature.

Mr. KEAN. The amendment does not so provide.

Mr. OWEN. It comes as a matter of course.

Mr. KEAN. Unless it is so provided, I must make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. OWEN. I will modify the amendment to that effect.

Mr. KEAN. If the payment is to be made from the Treasury, it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. OWEN. I will amend it so as to provide that the payments shall be made from the Chickasaw fund.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator can modify his amendment.

Mr. KEAN. Certainly; and I have no objection to it as modified.

Mr. OWEN. I add the words, "to be paid from the Chickasaw fund."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. On page 52, line 3, I move to strike out the words "reimbursable, to be charged to each lease at the time of its approval, not to exceed $2."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest that the amendment of the committee has already been agreed to, and it would be necessary to reconsider the vote by which it was adopted.

Mr. OWEN. I move a reconsideration of the vote. I was out of the Chamber when it came up.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. OWEN. With pleasure.

Mr. CLAPP. The committee considered that matter. This is work that is done for the particular individuals, and the committee felt that it was no more than proper that if it should be done by the Department, instead of their hiring some one else to do it, they should pay for it. That is the explanation the committee has to offer for the use of the words. Personally I should be in favor of its being reimbursable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. It is proper to say that the Senator from Oklahoma, at the time of the action of the committee, reserved the right to oppose the amendment in the Senate.

The motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. I make a point of order against those words because it is general legislation, and because it proposes on its face to establish a system of charges against the citizens of that country which is not authorized by existing law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest that the amendment is not now subject to the point of order. The point of order may be interposed after the bill reaches the Senate, and in order to do that the amendment may be reserved when the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. I reserve the point of order, then, upon that amendment and upon the words "reimbursable, in each case to be charged to the land involved," on page 52, line 8.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be necessary to make the reservation when the bill comes into the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senate recently passed a bill creating a national park out of a part of the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, and the bill as passed did not include the appropriation to pay for the land at a dollar and a quarter an acre. The Department has estimated the land, and I offer as an amendment, on page 22, after line 19, in the provisions affecting the Coeur d'Alene Indians, the bill for the creation of the park and the appropriation for the payment of the Indians.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, after line 19, insert:

That the following subdivisions now embraced in the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation in Idaho—to wit, sections 1, 2, and 12, township 46 north, range 4 west, Boise meridian; sections 35 and 36, township 47 north, range 4 west, Boise meridian; all of those portions of sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, township 46 north, range 3 west, Boise meridian, lying south and west of the St. Joe River in said township; all of those portions of sections 31 and 32, township 47 north, range 3 west, Boise meridian, lying south and west of the St. Joe River in said township—are reserved and withdrawn from allotment and settlement and dedicated and set apart as a public park or pleasuring ground for the benefit and enjoyment of the people; and all persons who locate or settle upon or occupy any part of the land thus set apart as a public park, except as provided in the following section, shall be considered trespassers and removed therefrom.

That such public park shall be under the exclusive control of the Secretary of the Interior, whose duty it shall be, as soon as practicable, to make and publish such regulations as he may deem necessary or proper for the care and management of the same. Such regulations shall provide for the preservation from injury or spoliation of all timber, mineral deposits, natural curiosities, or wonders within the park, and their retention in their natural condition. The Secretary may, in his discretion, grant leases for building purposes, for terms not exceeding ten years, of small parcels of ground at such places in the park as may require the erection of buildings for the accommodation of visitors; all of the proceeds of such leases and all other revenues that may be derived from any source connected with the park to be expended under his direction in the management of the same and the construction of roads and bridle paths therein. He shall provide against the wanton destruction of the fish and game found within the park and against their capture and destruction for the purposes of merchandise or profit. He shall also cause all persons trespassing upon the same to be removed therefrom, and generally is authorized to take all such measures as may be necessary or proper to fully carry out the objects and purposes of this section.

There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $8,585, to be deposited in the Treasury as part of the fund belonging to the Coeur d'Alene and nonfederated tribes of Indians, for their use and benefit, to be distributed in the manner provided for the funds of said Indians, and no rules and regulations shall ever make discrimination between said Indians and other persons as to the right to enter upon and enjoy the national park hereby created.

The Secretary may, in his discretion, grant permits for any use of the national park hereby created or its resources which will not interfere with the purpose for which it was created or which will make it more accessible and usable by the public; all of the proceeds of such permits and all other revenue that may be derived from any source connected with the park to be expended under his direction in the management, protection, and improvement of the same.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIXON. I propose an amendment. I wish to state in explanation of the amendment that it is a bill which passed the Senate two months ago, but, owing to the congested condition at the other end of the Capitol, they have not been able to get action on it there. It was unanimously reported from the committee and recommended by the Department, and there is no possible objection to it that I know of.

Mr. KEAN. What is the amendment?

Mr. DIXON. It is to amend the old Flathead Reservation act, opening the Flathead Reservation to settlement, which was passed four years ago.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 36, after line 12, insert:

That section 9, chapter 1495, Statutes of the United States of America, entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all surplus lands after allotment," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That said lands shall be opened to settlement and entry by proclamation of the President, which proclamation shall prescribe the time when and the manner in which these lands may be settled upon, occupied, and entered by persons entitled to make entry thereof, and no person shall be permitted to settle upon, occupy, or enter any of said lands, except as prescribed in such proclamation: Provided, That the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors of the late civil and the Spanish wars, as defined and prescribed in sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of March 1, 1901, shall not be abridged: Provided further, That the price of said lands shall be the appraised value thereof, as fixed by the said Commission, but settlers under the homestead law who shall reside upon and cultivate the land entered in good faith for the period required by existing law shall pay one-third of the appraised value in cash at the time of entry, and the remainder in five equal annual installments, to be paid one, two, three, four, and five years, respectively, from and after the date of entry, and shall be entitled to a patent for the lands so entered upon the payment to the local land officers of said five annual payments, and in addition thereto the same fees and commissions at the time of commutation or final entry as now provided by law where the price of the land is $1.25 per acre, and no other and further charge of any kind whatsoever shall be required of such settler to entitle him to a patent for the land covered by his entry: Provided, That if any entryman fails to make such payments, or any of them, within the time stated, all rights in and to the land covered by his or her entry shall at once cease, and any payments theretofore made shall be forfeited, and the entry shall be forfeited and canceled: And provided, That nothing in this act shall prevent homestead settlers from commuting their entries under section 2301, Revised Statutes, by paying for the land entered the price fixed by said Commission, receiving credit for payments previously made: Provided, however, That the entryman or owner of any land irrigable by any system hereunder constructed under the provisions of section 14 of this act shall in addition to the payment required by section 9 of said act be required to pay for a water right the proportionate cost of the construction of said system in not more than fifteen annual installments, as fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, the same to be paid at the local land office, and the register and receiver shall be allowed the usual commissions on all moneys paid.

"The entryman of lands to be irrigated by said system shall in addition to compliance with the homestead laws reclaim at least one-half of the total irrigable area of his entry for agricultural purposes, and before receiving patent for the lands covered by his entry shall pay the charges apportioned against such tract. No right to the use of water shall be disposed of for a tract exceeding 160 acres to any one person, and the Secretary of the Interior may limit the areas to be entered at not less than 60 nor more than 160 acres each.

"A failure to make any two payments when due shall render the entry and water-right application subject to cancellation, with the forfeiture of all rights under this act, as well as of any moneys paid thereon. The funds arising hereunder shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and be added to the proceeds derived from the sale of the lands. No right to the use of water for lands in private ownership shall be sold to any landowner unless he be an actual bona fide resident on such land or occupant thereof residing in the neighborhood of such land, and no such right shall permanently attach until all payments therefor are made.

"All applicants for water rights under the systems constructed in pursuance of this act shall be required to pay such annual charges for operation and maintenance as shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, and the failure to pay such charges when due shall render the water-right application and the entry subject to cancellation, with the forfeiture of all rights under this act as well as of any moneys already paid thereon.

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to fix the time for the beginning of such payments and to provide such rules and regulations in regard thereto as he may deem proper. Upon the cancellation of any entry or water-right application, as herein provided, such lands or water rights may be disposed of under the terms of this act and at such price and on such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, but not less than the cost originally fixed.

"The land irrigable under the systems herein provided, which is owned by or has been allotted to Indians in severalty, shall be deemed to have a right to so much water as may be required to irrigate such lands without cost to the Indians so long as the title, legal or equitable, remains in said Indians; but any such lands leased for a longer term than three years shall bear their pro rata share of the cost of the operation and maintenance of the system under which it lies, and when the Indian title is extinguished such lands shall also bear their pro rata cost of operation and maintenance, in accordance with the laws of Montana.

"When the payments required by this act have been made for the major part of the lands irrigable under any system, and subject to charges for construction thereof, the management and operation of such irrigation works shall pass to the owners of the lands irrigated thereby, to be maintained at their expense under such form of organization and under such rules and regulations as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Interior, subject to the provisions hereof for the furnishing of water rights for the irrigation of Indian lands without cost except for operation and maintenance.

"A right to the use of water acquired under the provisions of this act shall be appurtenant to the lands irrigated, and beneficial use shall be the basis, the measure, and the limit of the right.

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect."

That section 14 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. That the proceeds received from the sale of said lands in conformity with this act shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and after deducting the expenses of the Commission, of classification and sale of lands, and such other incidental expenses as shall have been necessarily incurred, and expenses of the survey of the land, shall be expended or paid, as follows: So much thereof as the Secretary of the Interior may deem advisable in the construction of irrigation systems, for the irrigation of the irrigable lands embraced within the limits of said reservation; one half of the money remaining after the construction of said irrigation systems to be expended by the Secretary of the Interior as he may deem advisable for the benefit of said Indians in the purchase of live stock, farming implements, or the necessary articles to aid said Indians in farming and stock raising and in the education and civilization of said Indians, and the remaining half of said money to be paid to said Indians and persons holding tribal rights on said reservation, semiannually as the same shall become available, share and share alike."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. I move to insert on page 52, after line 14, "To pay Dr. G. W. Harkins the sum of $634.15 for professional services in the suppression of smallpox."

Mr. KEAN. Out of some fund?

Mr. OWEN. It will come out of the funds of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not necessary to read the amendment if it is to be paid out of the funds of the United States, as the Senator says it is. A private claim is not allowable on an appropriation bill. I make a point of order against the amendment

Mr. OWEN. I think the point of order is well taken, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. The Chair understands that the Senator from Oklahoma desires to reserve two amendments.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to reserve the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole inserting on page 52, line 3, after the word "dollars," the words "reimbursable, to be charged to each lease at the time of its approval, not to exceed $2," and also on page 52, line 8, inserting the words "reimbursable, in each case to be charged to the land involved."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Those amendments will be reserved. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole aside from those reserved by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. OWEN. I now make a point of order against the reserved amendments.

Mr. CLAPP. While I doubt very much whether it is a good point, in view of the balance of the legislation, as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] is anxious to take the floor, I will consent to their going out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments inserting on page 52, after the word "dollars," in line 3, the words "reimbursable, to be charged to each lease at the time of its approval, not to exceed $2," and on the same page, in line 8, after the word "dollars," inserting "reimbursable, in each case to be charged to the land involved."

The amendments were nonconcurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CHOCTAW-CHICKASAW CITIZENSHIP COURT.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas there appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 11, 1908, at page 1934, in relation to the Choctaw-Chickasaw citizenship court, the following statement:

"It is alleged that the members of that court were bribed and received as a consideration for their decisions a part of the fee paid these attorneys. Counsel for claimants are reliably informed that the Secretary of the Interior now has in his possession positive proof of the bribery of certain members of that court, said proof setting forth the amount paid certain members of that court, the time and place the payments were made, and the manner of the payments. This evidence has been in the possession of the Secretary of the Interior for more than three months and yet no investigation, so far as counsel for claimants have been able to ascertain, has been inaugurated and no proceedings have been instituted calculated to bring these guilty persons before the bar of justice, although the time in which they can be criminally prosecuted is rapidly expiring:" Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what foundation there is for such charges, and to transmit to the Senate all correspondence, affidavits, evidence, papers, and information pertaining or appertaining thereto.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution just read?

Mr. WARREN. If I heard the resolution rightly, there is in the preamble a rather severe arraignment of the Secretary of the Interior, and I should say a resolution of that kind had better lie over.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is simply a request for information.

Mr. WARREN. That part of it is all right, but if I heard it aright, there is a statement that he has had this proof in his possession so long, has failed to move, and so forth.

Mr. TILLMAN. If it were not for that there would be no resolution at all. It is to have the Secretary answer to the Senate and to the country for this accusation against his official administration of the office.

Mr. WARREN. I will ask that the resolution may go over. I may want to offer an amendment to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the present consideration of the resolution, and it will go over.

BRANCH LIBRARY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1476) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept donations of money and land for the establishment of a branch library in the District of Columbia, to establish a commission to supervise the erection of a branch library building in said District, and to provide for the suitable maintenance of said branch.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I have heretofore objected to the consideration of this bill for the reason that the offer on the part of Mr. Carnegie to contribute $30,000 toward the construction of this library is accompanied by a condition that at least $3,000 per year for an indefinite period shall be provided as a maintenance fund.

I desire that it shall be understood that if the Government is going to match pennies with Mr. Carnegie it must be prepared to make good. I am on principle opposed to the Government of the United States accepting gifts of this kind. I believe that if we need a library it should be built and the appropriation should be made out of the General Treasury, and I stand ready to vote for that; but I am opposed to accepting a contribution from anyone on condition that the Government shall forever maintain it at an expense of not less than $3,000 a year.

We are going to accept a burden here of $3,000 a year. Putting it for fifty years—for that is not a very long time—by accepting this $30,000 as a contribution toward building a library for the use of the people of the District of Columbia, we obligate ourselves to pay $150,000 for maintaining it. That is the condition stated in the letter. I have seen it and read it, and it is printed in the report of the House committee on this subject.

With this statement I have no further opposition to make, although I object to such legislation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will simply say that the Senator might have extended the time to a thousand years instead of fifty and made this a much greater burden. It will cost the Government of the United States $1,500 and the government of the District of Columbia $1,500 a year. Takoma Park is a thriving community, several miles from the center of the great city of Washington. The citizens have contributed a very desirable lot on which to erect this library, and they are going to get the money precisely as we got the money for our municipal library in Washington. I trust sincerely that there may be no very serious opposition to the passage of this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TREATY WITH MEXICAN KICKAPOO INDIANS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I present a statement made before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs February 13, 1908, relative to the bill (S. 4735) to fulfill treaty stipulations of the treaty of June 28, 1862, and other treaty agreements with the Kickapoo Indians. I move that it be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 2, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 28, 1908.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 28, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PAY OF ENLISTED MEN, ETC.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the order of the House, No. 4, have had the same under consideration and herewith report the same with the recommendation that it be agreed to.

"Ordered, That during the consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union of the bill making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, it shall be in order to offer and consider, with right of amendment, at the end of the paragraph relating to pay of enlisted men, the following provisions: From line 12, page 6, to line 23, page 10."

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the matter in the Army appropriation bill, from line 12 on page 6 to line 23 on page 10, relates to the increase in the pay of privates and noncommissioned officers. It was stricken out yesterday on a point of order as being new legislation; but the debate clearly disclosed that a very large majority of the House were in favor of the proposition, and the Committee on Rules feel that in reporting this rule they are simply permitting the Members of the House to carry out what is their wish in the premises. This is a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, it is unnecessary to add anything to what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said. This is a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules, recommending that the House be given an opportunity to pass upon this proposition. The right of amendment is reserved in the rule, and we were of the opinion that it was good legislation; and although we had some slight objection to that method of legislating, yet we thought that under the circumstances the end would justify the means.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, just a minute to say I trust this rule will be adopted. As a member of the Military Affairs Committee I am very much in favor of this legislation for our soldiers, and I believe the taxpayers of the country generally favor at this time an increase in the pay of the enlisted men of the Army in accordance with the provisions of the Army appropriation bill which were stricken out on a point of order yesterday. The adoption of this rule will put back in the bill those provisions.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to say further that I am very glad, personally, to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] inform the House that the Committee on Rules has complied, in reporting this rule, with the sentiments of a majority, as they think, of the membership of this House, and I express the hope that the Committee on Rules will hereafter always comply with the expressed will of a majority of the Members of the House. If they only would do this in all cases, we would be able to pass some legislation most devoutly desired by the great majority of the people of this country.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON TUBERCULOSIS.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate concurrent resolution No. 5.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas an International Congress on Tuberculosis will meet in Washington in September, 1908, the same being the Sixth International Congress on Tuberculosis, and the first to be held in America; and

Whereas seven of the nine Departments of the Federal Government have petitioned Congress for the authority and means to participate in this congress; and

Whereas the governors of twenty-eight States of the United States have authorized the participation of their several States in this congress; and

Whereas the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis has provided the necessary means and created a special committee to secure the participation of voluntary and private interests in the coming International Congress on Tuberculosis; and

Whereas preceding international congresses occurring in other countries in the past fifteen years have been held under governmental auspices, and delegates from the United States have participated therein as guests of foreign governments: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Department of State be, and is hereby, authorized to invite the Governments of other countries, through their ministries, to send representatives to the International Congress on Tuberculosis to be held in Washington, September 21 to October 12, 1908.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MANN. I wish to make the point of order that we can not do by concurrent resolution what is proposed to be done here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of order that the object desired can not be reached by a concurrent resolution. It has occurred to the Chair that that is a matter for the House to determine.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps that is correct, but I think it is a matter worthy of consideration. A concurrent resolution is a resolution directed solely to matters within the control of the House and the Senate alone. A joint resolution is a resolution that requires the approval of the President, or permits, at least, his disapproval. Here is a proposition by concurrent resolution to direct the Secretary of State to do something without giving to the President an opportunity to approve it or disapprove it; in other words, it is an attempt by concurrent resolution to enact law.

Now, the universal rule of parliamentary law would provide that if this action be taken it must be taken in the form of a joint resolution or bill. It is not merely a matter of discretion of the House, because it goes to the right of the House by concurrent resolution to direct an officer of the Government to do something which would have the effect of law; and while it is true that the officer of the Government might not be bound by the resolution, and while it is undoubtedly true the resolution would give to the Secretary of State no authority which he does not now possess, it seems to me it is subject to a point of order when you endeavor to do something by concurrent resolution which the House and Senate have not the power to do.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman from Illinois claim that the House and Senate, acting concurrently, do not have the power to direct an executive officer to do anything within the law?

Mr. MANN. They may direct the officer of the law or the Department of State to report something to Congress, but they can not by concurrent resolution authorize him to do anything which the law does not now permit him to do.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I did not notice the language of the resolution, but does it mean anything more or less than sentiment on the part of the two Houses? Is the Secretary of State "directed," or is he simply "requested," by the language of the resolution?

Mr. MANN. He is "authorized." I take it the very purpose of the resolution is to base an appropriation upon it. If the resolution is passed and be law, it is sufficient to base an appropriation upon. I do not know that there is any objection to it.

Mr. TAWNEY. If that is the case, it certainly should be a joint resolution—if it authorizes or creates an obligation on the part of the United States.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. We are not asking any appropriation.

Mr. MANN. I do not know in what shape this may be on the Speaker's desk. I hold in my hand the printed copy of the resolution as being reported to the House, and it appears to be a resolution introduced by Mr. GALLINGER. There is no Mr. GALLINGER in the House.

Mr. DALZELL. This is a Senate resolution.

Mr. MANN. But I hold in my hand a printed resolution showing that it was introduced by Mr. GALLINGER and not showing that it has passed the Senate, and I take it from the printed resolution that the Committee on Foreign Affairs probably has reported into the House favorably a resolution introduced by the Senator in the Senate.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The resolution I call up, Senate resolution No. 5, was passed by the Senate, came here and was reported unanimously by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I do not understand that its purpose is to lay the foundation for an appropriation. The National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis has raised by private subscription something over $50,000 to defray the expenses of this congress. All the bills have been paid up to date and there is now in the treasury something like $39,000.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman state that it is not the intention to make a request for an appropriation based upon the passage of this resolution?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I do so state. I am so informed. I have a letter in my hand which, if the House desires to have read, I shall be glad to send to the Clerk's desk. This congress met heretofore in Paris, Naples, Berlin, London, and again in Paris in 1905. At that time it was considered a great honor when the delegates from the United States to that congress succeeded in getting the congress to vote to come here. The congress insisted that it could not accept the invitation because it did not come in any way from the National Government. But finally that objection was overruled, in view of the fact that Congress was not in session and no such invitation could be had at that time. Assurance was given that Congress undoubtedly would take action.

This is an international congress. When it met in Paris, in 1905, it was practically the guest of the Republic of France. But all these representatives of the national organization ask is that this formal invitation be extended, in order that the technical objection may be overcome and the meeting here have the form of an international gathering. This seems to be necessary in order to secure the presence of many distinguished physicians who are authority on subjects to be discussed by the congress.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman say that the Secretary of State has no authority now to extend such an invitation on behalf of the Government without the passage of a resolution by Congress?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I am so advised.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that the passage of a concurrent resolution, having no force beyond the confines of the Capitol, would confer the authority upon the Secretary of State which he does not now possess?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I ask to amend the resolution by making it a joint resolution. I think perhaps the point is well taken.

The SPEAKER. First, is there objection to its consideration?

Mr. MANN. Let me ask the gentleman one more question, if I may. I have the print of this resolution as reported into the House. It has the appearance of a resolution introduced into the Senate and reported into the House without ever having been passed by the Senate. Has the resolution passed the Senate?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that in a moment the original official copy will be present.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman desires to amend his resolution and make it a joint resolution, I will withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The concurrent resolution is properly before the House, if there be no objection to its consideration. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman proposes to amend, I will withdraw the point of order. Otherwise I would like a ruling.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I ask to amend the resolution.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask one question. Does changing the form, as the gentleman now proposes, change the character of the resolution? Clause 3 of section 7 of the Constitution reads as follows:

> Every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary * * * shall be presented to the President of the United States.

It seems to me that under that section in either event, if the action of both Houses is necessary, it must go to the President.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I would say to my friend from Iowa that that question of the difference between a concurrent resolution and a joint resolution and the necessity for the signature of the President was discussed a great many years ago, and there is a very elaborate report on it in the Senate. While it does not seem to me that the language admits of any other interpretation, nevertheless it has been the practice for a great many years to submit those concurrent resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the title and insert the following:

"Joint resolution authorizing the invitation of governments of other countries to send representatives to the International Congress on Tuberculosis."

Strike out resolving clause and insert:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the preamble will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the publication in the RECORD of the letter which I hold in my hand, from Dr. Lawrence F. Flick, of Philadelphia, chairman of the committee of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis having in hand the arrangements for the congress. It contains many interesting facts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

THE INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON TUBERCULOSIS,
Washington, D. C., February 24, 1908.

Hon. JOS. G. CANNON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE AND DEAR SIR: I was informed while in Washington yesterday that you were unfavorably disposed toward Senate concurrent resolution No. 5, House Calendar No. 46, which authorizes the United States Government to extend official invitation to foreign governments to send delegates to the International Congress on Tuberculosis. A committee tried to arrange for an interview with you through Mr. FOSTER and failed, but I was informed by Mr. FOSTER that I might write you setting forth the reasons why the bill should be passed.

The International Congress on Tuberculosis has held sessions under governmental auspices in Paris, Naples, Berlin, London, and again recently in Paris. The meeting in London was held under the auspices of King Edward in 1901, and the meeting in Paris in 1905 was held under the official patronage of the French Republic. Ex-President Loubet presided at the initial meeting.

The National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis invited the congress to the United States at the meeting in Paris. At that time it was an unwritten law that invitations must be extended by governments, but as the United States Congress was not in session and a governmental invitation could not be extended, the technicality was waived upon the assurance of the representatives of the national association that proper provision could be made for the congress in this country, and that as much of an international character would be given to it as possible.

The national association as far back as 1905, immediately after the meeting in Paris, took steps to organize the congress. A fund was privately raised for the expenses of the congress, and an office was opened in Washington under the auspices and guidance of a special committee appointed by the national association to organize the congress. Upward of $50,000 have so far been subscribed privately for the expenses of the congress. All expenses have been paid up to the present time and the committee has $39,000 in hand. We have organized the entire United States in the interest of the congress and have strong committees in almost every State of the Union. Many of the State governments have already officially participated in the organization of the congress, and it is expected that practically all State governments and most of the large municipal governments will participate.

Under the precedents which have been established by other governments it is of considerable importance that the congress which is to convene in this country this year will receive an official stamp of the United States Government in order to give it a proper international character. Foreign governments are standing ready to send official delegates, but as a matter of technicality can not do so without an official invitation on the part of the United States. Recognizing this situation, we made an effort to have the United States Government give an official stamp to the congress during the last Congress. We approached the Department of State in the matter and were assured of the most hearty support of the Government, which we believe still exists. The various Departments of the United States at that time expressed a deep interest in the congress and offered to participate officially in the congress upon the invitation of our committee. A bill was then introduced giving official recognition to the congress and authorizing seven of the Departments to participate in the congress. This bill carried an appropriation with it for the participation of the Departments. Through a technicality the bill failed in the last Congress.

As the support of this Congress was very hearty and unanimous, we felt secure that a similar bill would be introduced and passed in the present Congress. Such a bill was introduced, but as it again failed of speedy enactment and time became an important factor we ourselves had a bill introduced into the Senate and House simultaneously giving official recognition to the congress and authorizing official invitation to foreign governments to send delegates without any appropriation, and this is the bill which I write you about, namely, House Calendar bill 46.

Further delay in the enactment of this bill will make it practically impossible for foreign governments to participate in this congress as they have participated in all the former congresses. I have visited Europe twice to inform myself of the practices in connection with these congresses and I have found that it has been customary for the governments of Europe to send official delegates to these congresses at the expense of the governments, but that in order that such an action may be taken considerable time is necessary. There, as here, legalization is requisite by a formal enactment of law, and for the accomplishment of such an end time is of much importance. We have only a few months before the adjournment of most lawmaking bodies, and as considerable ceremony is necessary in the extension of the official invitations some of the governments can probably not be reached even now except by cable.

Failure on the part of the United States Government to give an official stamp to the coming congress will have an unusually pernicious effect upon this congress on account of our remote position from the older governments. This is the first time that the United States has been honored with the convention of this congress, and it is the second time that an English-speaking country has been so honored. For the success of the meeting we need the workers in the crusade against tuberculosis of the older countries for stimulation of effort here. The expense of coming to America is very much greater than that of going from one European country to another, and inasmuch as many of the European workers in the cause have relatively small financial resources it is practically impossible for them to come to a congress in this country unless they receive financial aid from some source.

We have ourselves from our private fund extended financial support in the way of honoraria to a limted number of the most prominent workers in the cause from abroad, but our resources do not permit us to extend such aid to very many. With the official invitation of the United States Government to foreign governments to send delegates, financial aid could be extended to a great many workers through those governments, and this is now being withheld because the United States has taken no action. I have already had solicitous inquiries in this regard from England, Germany, and France, and have had the embarrassing question put to me why the United States Government has not yet taken action which would enable other governments to send official delegates.

I have been told that there is a suspicion in your mind that the bill which we are trying to have enacted into law is merely a preliminary skirmish for an appropriation bill which is to come later. I assure you that this is not our position. The bill to which I have already referred, carrying an appropriation of $25,000 for the participation of the United States Government in this congress, is somewhere in process of enactment, but that bill has absolutely nothing to do with this and we are only indirectly concerned with it. We have asked the United States Government to participate in the congress, as we have asked every State government of the United States to participate. In extending our invitation we have said that each government would have to bear its own expenses of participation, and we, of course, would be delighted to have the United States Government participate in a creditable manner.

The items of the appropriation which the bill for the United States' participation carries were made up by the United States Government itself and not by us. Failure of this appropriation would not be disastrous to the congress, except in so far as it would place the United States in a somewhat embarrassing position with other nations who might participate; but failure to pass bill, House Calendar 46, giving official recognition to this congress, not only would place the United States in a most embarrassing position with other nations, but would seriously interfere with the success of the congress as an international congress. So far as national success is concerned, we have the assurance of that in the money and organization at our command, but even had we unlimited money we could not make an international success of it without an official stamp of our own National Government, which can only be given by the United States Congress.

Disraeli one time said, "Public health is the foundation upon which rests the happiness of the people and the power of the State. Take the most beautiful kingdom, give it intelligent and laborious citizens, prosperous manufactures and productive agriculture; let arts flourish, let architects cover the land with temples and palaces. In order to defend all these riches have first-rate weapons and fleets of torpedo boats. If the population remains stationary, if it decreases yearly in vigor and stature, the nation must perish. And that is why I consider that the first duty of the statesman is the care of the public health."

In harmony with these sentiments governments have been vieing with each other for the last decade in securing the convention of the International Congress on Tuberculosis. When we asked for this convention in Paris in 1905, invitations from governments in different parts of the world were strongly pressed, and we were considered exceedingly fortunate in securing the congress. Japan made an exceedingly strong bid for the congress, and it was rumored in Paris that the Japanese Government had, through its official delegates, expressed a willingness to send ships to Europe to bring all delegates that might be willing to come if Japan were given the congress. Austria also made a strong bid for the congress, but there was a general feeling that the United States was to take precedence in this honor. I was personally the spokesman for our national association in inviting the congress, and I felt sure at the time, and still feel, that the people of our country would give this congress a warm, dignified welcome, commensurate with the greatness and intelligence of our country. I am confident that whatever opposition may have existed to giving official recognition to this congress has been based upon misinformation, and that so far as you, honorable sir, are concerned it is merely necessary to present the facts to secure your warmest and most ardent support of every effort which can be made to make this the greatest and most successful congress which has yet been held.

I have taken the liberty of sending you, under separate cover, a little book upon the crusade against tuberculosis, which I beg you to glance over, if you have a few spare moments, in order that you may form some idea of what this crusade against tuberculosis means to the world. If I can give you any further information or can help to clear up the subject by calling on you personally, it would give me great pleasure to do so.

Yours, truly, LAWRENCE F. FLICK.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state, reading from page 671 of the Manual, it was decided by reason of conditions arising under former Rule No. 114, that a resolution of the House could not be amended so as to convert it into a joint resolution. Rule 114 no longer exists, and has not existed since 1880. The reason for that decision under the rule was the special facility given to the introduction of resolutions as distinguished from bills, but as the practice is different and the rule is different now, the reason for that decision has passed. Therefore the Chair entertained the motion made by the gentleman from Vermont.

MESSENGER TO COMMITTEE ON THE POST-OFFICE AND POST-ROADS.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I call up the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

House resolution 249.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided for by law, compensation at the rate of $1,000 per annum, for the services of a messenger to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, in lieu of a janitor at $720 per annum now authorized.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION AND SUPPLY OF ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER IN THE DISTRICT OF LAHAINA, HAWAII.

Mr. KIMBALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 16643) to ratify an act of the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, authorizing the manufacture, distribution, and supply of electric light and power in the district of Lahaina, county of Maui, Territory of Hawaii. This bill is reported from the Committee on the Territories without amendment and with the expressed opinion that it should pass.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I think that that is a bill that ought not to be considered on a request for unanimous consent. It is altogether too comprehensive and involves a great many matters that it is impossible to understand from a cursory reading of the bill, and revives, as I recollect it, a controversy that we had in the last Congress upon this same subject. I shall, therefore, object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. R. 58. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to establish harbor lines in Wilmington Harbor, California;

S. 3976. An act to authorize and require the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company to maintain and operate a track connection with the United States navy-yard in the city of Washington, D. C.;

S. 5476. An act for the purchase or construction of a launch for the customs service at and in the vicinity of Portland, Oreg.;

S. 2695. An act to amend the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act to determine the jurisdiction of circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes," and the acts amendatory thereof; and

S. 2729. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate for the sale of certain Indian lands to H. E. Eldred.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 5476. An act for the purchase or construction of a launch for the customs service at and in the vicinity of Portland, Oreg.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 3976. An act to authorize and require the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company to maintain and operate a track connection with the United States navy-yard in the city of Washington, D. C.—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 2729. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate for the sale of certain Indian lands to H. E. Eldred—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 2695. An act to amend the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act to determine the jurisdiction of circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes," and the acts amendatory thereof—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 4171. An act to provide for continuation of investigations of the rivers and water resources of the United States—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

S. 4712. An act to provide for the care of persons adjudged insane in the district of Alaska—to the Committee on the Territories.

S. R. 58. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to establish harbor lines in Wilmington Harbor, California—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

REPEALING SECTION 4885, REVISED STATUTES, AND SUBSTITUTING ANOTHER SECTON THEREFOR.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 17703) which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17703) to repeal section 4885 of the Revised Statutes and to substitute another section therefor.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4885 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same hereby is, repealed and the following section is substituted therefor:

"SEC. 4885. Every patent shall issue within a period of three months from the date of the payment of the final fee, which fee shall be paid not later than six months from the time at which the application was passed and allowed and notice thereof was sent to the applicant or his agent; and if the final fee is not paid within that period the patent shall be withheld."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain to the House what is the statute it is proposed to repeal?

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report from the committee in response to an urgent request of the Commissioner of Patents to meet a technical difficulty. In the issue of patents under the existing statute it is provided a patent must issue within six months of the date of allowance, and if the final fee is not paid within that time it is withheld. Now, the process of lithographing, etc., takes about six weeks——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WASHBURN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RESTORING CERTAIN TRACTS OF PUBLIC LAND IN THE STATE OF MINNESOTA TO THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2495, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill S. 2495, and that the same may be considered in the House. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2495) restoring certain tracts of public land in the State of Minnesota to the public domain.

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described land, to wit, the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 30, and the point of land in section 18, extending from lot 1 in section 19, omitted from the original United States land survey, but which is shown upon the plat of survey made under the direction of the War Department by the United States engineer office at St. Paul, for the Gull Lake Reservoir, in Minnesota, which said land was reserved for reservoir purposes and the reservation approved by the President January 18, 1896, in township 134 north of range 29 west, in the State of Minnesota, be, and the same hereby is, restored to the public domain subject to homestead entry; and all prior rights of settlement and entry, or attempted entry, are hereby reserved to the occupant and claimant of the land, to be passed upon and determined by the Commissioner of the General Land Office: Provided, however, That any homestead entry of said land or final certificate or patent that may be issued therefor, shall be subject to the right of the United States to construct and maintain a dam for reservoir purposes at Gull Lake and to flood any part of said land by means of said dam.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand, this tract of land was first reserved by the Government for use in connection with reservoirs.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. In 1895.

Mr. MANN. And somebody has now settled upon it, and this bill proposes to give that person the exclusive right to purchase this land, reserving an easement on the part of the Government, giving a preference to the occupant.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If the gentleman will pardon me, I think the gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. MANN. That may be.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. In 1895 the War Department asked that a large tract of land be reserved for the purpose of a reservoir. It was at that time unknown just how much would be needed. Since then it has been surveyed. A dam has been constructed, and it is now well known just what is needed. In view of such knowledge we have passed several bills, some in the last Congress and some in the Congress before that, restoring different tracts of this same land to entry. There is no earthly use for these lands as a reserve for the future. There are parties who want it, but we do not in this bill give it to anyone in particular. We simply permit the United States Land Office to determine who has the preference right to take this land as settlers upon it.

Mr. MANN. Oh, but I beg the gentleman's pardon, that is not what the bill does. The bill gives to the occupant claiming the land the exclusive right to purchase land or to use it under the homestead, or otherwise. It does not assume there is no use in the War Department, because it expressly provides that it shall be subject to the right of the United States to construct and maintain a dam for reservoir purposes, so that the bill itself shows that the Government does intend to use this land for various purposes and does give to one occupant, who has taken possession of the land in violation of the law, the exclusive right to use it as a homestead.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Now, it seems to me——

Mr. SLAYDEN. What reason is advanced?

Mr. MANN. No reason is advanced.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. MONDELL. I think that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is somewhat mistaken as to the conditions. When it was proposed to build this dam a very considerable amount of land was withdrawn from entry. It is not especially valuable land up there in that upper Mississippi region. That withdrawal covered much more territory than can possibly be covered by the waters of the dam. Gradually, as the Department has learned what lands are needed for the purposes of flooding, tracts not needed have been restored. But it is true that there may be on these tracts that have been restored some low places that might be flooded if in the future we expect to increase the height of the dam. The probability is that but little of this land would be covered in that case. It is rough and broken, but in order that there may be no question as to the right of the Government——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The point that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is making is not with regard to that at all.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say in regard to that——

Mr. WILLIAMS. But it is in regard to giving the inhabitants who have gone on there without any right, the exclusive right.

Mr. MONDELL. He has not gone on there without any rights. If this land had not been withdrawn——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why did he not go on without any right if it had been reserved from homesteading?

Mr. MONDELL. Anyway, he was a squatter, but if this land had not been withdrawn for this particular purpose it would have continued to have been subject all the time to homestead entry. This bill does nothing more than to restore the land to the condition and status in which it was prior to this temporary reservation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But I beg the gentleman's pardon. I do not understand how the gentleman can draw that conclusion. If this were restored to its original status it would merely become again a part of the public domain, subject to homestead entry and subject to be dealt with like other public land, but this bill does not put it in that attitude, but gives exclusive right to the men who have gone upon it.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, the gentleman knows that it has been the uniform policy of this Government so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, where temporary segregation or withdrawals have been made, to restore them, granting the right of the settler who has gone upon those lands a preference right as a homestead settler, and why should he not have it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does this merely grant a preference right?

Mr. MONDELL. It grants no right except the preference right to make a filing to the man who is already there, and it is the uniform practice in all cases where we restore land to recognize the preference right of the man who settled.

Mr. MANN. The bill does not say "exclusive right." It is practically an exclusive right, because the prior rights of the present occupant are to be respected, and that means an exclusive right.

Mr. MONDELL. The homestead settler has certain recognized rights. If he is upon the land when it is restored to entry his right is uniformly recognized where the land is subject to homestead entry, and this does nothing more than that. No man except a homestead claimant under this bill would have any preference right. There is no preference right under any other land law. There is a preference right which the homestead law does give to the homestead settler wherever he may be found.

Mr. MANN. This bill practically gives to a man who had settled on a piece of land reserved for public purposes, especially reserved for public services, the right to take the land and own it as a homestead.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course it does.

Mr. MANN. Notwithstanding the facts shown in the bill itself that the land may be needed yet for reservoir purposes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Let me say in regard to that, Mr. Speaker, that the War Department says it is not needed. The War Department recommends this bill. They know, as they have made a thorough survey, and as they have built this dam, exactly what is needed. There can be no question about that, and it seems to me this land ought to be opened to settlement. There is no advantage in retaining it in this reserve, and then why should not settlers upon these lands have a preference? We have given that preference in every other instance where people have gone upon public lands. We are not giving it to them except under the homestead law. We are giving it in the laws subject to which these lands may be entered and the provision objected to adds nothing. It does seem to me that those parties who are there are the ones that under the law ought to have a preference. Wherever we have opened Indian reservations and wherever we have opened military or forest reservations, on surveyed and unsurveyed lands, we have consented to do that very thing. It is the policy of Congress to do so; and why should we not continue that policy, which prevents injustice, prevents somebody outside taking advantage of the improvements made on the land by actual settlers?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

REPRINT OF REPORT.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of House report 19 on House bill (H. R. 6082) removing the charge of desertion standing against the military record of Bernhard Steuben.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that bills that were in order on the Private Calendar to-day shall be in order on the next legislative day following the passage of the Army appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that bills in order on the Private Calendar to-day shall be in order on the next legislative day following the conclusion of the consideration of the Army appropriation bill as of to-day.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that, following the consideration of the pension bills, bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on the Public Lands may be considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming also asks unanimous consent that after the consideration of bills in order to-day that bills on the Private Calendar, reported from the Committee on the Public Lands, shall be in order for the remainder of that day.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman has not got all the bills on the Private Calendar relating to public lands. I think he had better make his request later in the session.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman, if he will allow me a moment, that there are four, five, or six bills, several of them Senate bills, on the Private Calendar, reported from the Committee on the Public Lands in regard to which there can be no question as to the propriety of their passage. They are without special importance, and yet several of them relate to titles, to small areas of land granted to municipalities, etc., and I think that it is important that they should be considered at an early day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SHERMAN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 17288, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17288) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill by inserting the matter provided for by the rule this morning, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

A parliamentary inquiry. Will this be read by sections or be read as a whole, and will each section as read be open to amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The rule, as the Chair understands it, provides that this whole proposition can be offered as one amendment. Of course, it would then be open to discussion under the five-minute rule and would be open to amendment. The whole proposition is offered as one amendment.

Insert all after line 11, page 6, down to and including line 22 on page 10.

"That hereafter the monthly pay of enlisted men of the Army during their first enlistment shall be as follows, namely: Master electricians, master signal electricians, $75; engineers, $65; regimental sergeants-major, regimental quartermaster-sergeants, regimental commissary-sergeants, sergeants-major senior grade Coast Artillery, battalion sergeants-major of engineers, post quartermaster-sergeants, post commissary-sergeants, post ordnance sergeants, battalion quartermaster-sergeants of engineers, sergeants first class Hospital Corps, electrician sergeants first class, sergeants first class Signal Corps, and first sergeants, $45; battalion sergeants-major of infantry and Field Artillery, squadron sergeants-major, sergeants-major junior grade Coast Artillery, battalion quartermaster-sergeants Field Artillery, and master gunners, $40; electrician sergeants, second class, sergeants of engineers, ordnance, and Signal Corps, quartermaster-sergeants of engineers, and color sergeants, $36; sergeants and quartermaster-sergeants of cavalry, artillery, and infantry, sergeants of the Hospital Corps, firemen and cooks, $30: Provided, That mess sergeants shall receive $6 per month in addition to their pay; corporals of engineers, ordnance, Signal Corps, and Hospital Corps, chief mechanics, and mechanics Coast Artillery, $24; corporals of cavalry, artillery, and infantry, mechanics of Field Artillery, blacksmiths and farriers, saddlers, wagoners and artificers, $21; privates, first class, of engineers, ordnance, Signal Corps, and Hospital Corps, $18; privates Hospital Corps, $16; trumpeters, musicians of infantry, artillery, and engineers, privates of cavalry, artillery, infantry, Signal Corps, and privates second class, engineers and ordnance, $15.

That any soldier who receives an honorable discharge at the termination of an enlistment period and reenlists within three months thereafter shall be entitled to continuous-service pay as herein provided, which shall be in addition to the initial pay provided for in this act and shall be as follows, namely: An increase of $3 monthly pay for and during the second and third enlistments each, and a further increase of $1 for and during each subsequent enlistment up to and including the seventh, after which the pay shall remain as in the seventh enlistment: Provided, That any soldier who receives an honorable discharge at the termination of his first or any succeeding enlistment period and reenlists after the expiration of three months shall be regarded as in his second enlistment; that an enlistment shall not be regarded as complete until the soldier shall have made good any time lost during an enlistment period by unauthorized absences exceeding one day, but any soldier who receives an honorable discharge for the convenience of the Government after having served more than half of his enlistment shall be considered as having served an enlistment period within the meaning of this act; that the present enlistment period of men now in service shall be determined by the number of years' continuous service they may have had at the date of approval of this act, under existing laws, counting three years to an enlistment: And provided further, That any soldier who has been honorably discharged and reenlists within three months of the date of said discharge shall, upon such reenlistment, receive an amount equal to three months' pay at the rate he was receiving at the time of his discharge.

That enlisted men now qualified or hereafter qualifying as marksmen shall receive $2 per month; as sharpshooters, $3 per month; as expert riflemen, $5 per month; as second-class gunners, $2 per month; as first-class gunners, $3 per month; as gun pointers, gun commanders, observers second class, chief planters and chief loaders, $7 per month; as plotters, observers first class, and casemate electricians, $9 per month, all in addition to their pay, but no enlisted man shall receive at the same time additional pay for more than one of the classifications named in this section: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to increase the total number of gun pointers, gun commanders, observers, chief planters, chief loaders, plotters, and casemate electricians now authorized by law.

That increase of pay for service beyond the limits of the States comprising the Union, and the Territories of the United States contiguous thereto, shall be as now provided by law.

That the pay during first enlistment of enlisted men of bands, exclusive of the band of the United States Military Academy, shall be as follows:

Chief musician, $75; principal musicians and chief trumpeters, $40; sergeants and drum majors, $36; corporals, $30; and privates, $24; and the continuous-service pay of all grades shall be as provided in this act: Provided, That Army bands or members thereof shall not receive remuneration for furnishing music outside the limits of military posts when the furnishing of such music places them in competition with local civilian musicians.

That nothing in this act shall be construed to increase the pay of enlisted men now on the retired list.

That sections 1280, 1281, and 1284 of the Revised Statutes be, and are hereby, repealed, and so much of section 4819 as pertains to the deduction of 12½ cents per month from the pay of every soldier of the Regular Army for the benefit of the Soldiers' Home be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

That section 6 of the act entitled "An act for the better organization of the Army of the United States" be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That any soldier who deserts shall, besides incurring the penalties now attaching to the crime of desertion, forfeit all right to pension which he might otherwise have acquired."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to offer an amendment to page 8 of the bill, in line 20, after the word "discharged" in the proviso. Insert after the word "discharged" the words "at the termination of his first, second, and third enlistment periods." And then the provision goes on that when he reenlists he shall have the bonus provided here. I will say that that is not a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by inserting on page 8, after the word "discharged" the words "at the termination of his first, second, and third enlistment periods."

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman whether a man must have enlisted three times before he gets the benefit of this provision?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not at all; he gets it each time he reenlists, but it limits it to the fourth enlistment, and does not go beyond that. The reason the words "enlistment periods" were placed in is because it was called to my attention that as it reads here, if a man served a month and was for any cause discharged and then within three months reenlisted, he would get three months' bonus for it. This makes it comply with the balance of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer one more amendment, on page 10 of the bill, where it provides for the better organization of the Army of the United States, insert after the words "United States" the words "approved April 26, 1898," so that it will more definitely describe the act.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman send his amendment to the desk in writing, or repeat it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will send it to the Clerk's desk. There are two amendments on that paper. If necessary, I can move both at once.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 17, page 10, as printed in the bill, as follows:
After "organization" insert the words "of the line" and after the words "United States" insert "approved April 26, 1898."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

After "organization" insert "of the line."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. OLMSTED. Just a minute. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa in what particular this would amend the law as it now exists?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This amendment simply makes definite and specific the act we refer to. The amendment to the section would come in afterwards, but I am willing to state it now. That section provides 20 per cent increased pay in time of war, and also provides for the penalty for desertion. We wanted to repeal that part of the section increasing the pay by 20 per cent in time of war and leave the section so far as it applies to deserters just as it stood. So that we only repeal part of the section, and the committee thought the better way to repeal that part was to reenact the section, leaving out the words that we desire to repeal.

Mr. OLMSTED. So that this part that is quoted here is the law now?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The part that is quoted here is the law now.

Mr. OLMSTED. And you amend by leaving out the portion that is not recited here?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is all. We amend by leaving out the first part.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now, Mr. Chairman, let the second amendment be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

After "United States" insert "approved April 28, 1898."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, just one word. I was requested yesterday by members of the committee to give a statement as to the cost of a company in time of peace. It was impossible to figure that on the floor of the House, for two reasons. One is that the 20 per cent increase for war-time service would have to be deducted, and in the second place the organization in time of peace is composed of a less number of men than in time of war; but I have here a table which I desire to put into the RECORD, giving the figures as to the entire cost of an infantry company, a cavalry company, and an artillery company in time of peace under the present law, and under the law as it is proposed to be enacted.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the table will be published in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The table is as follows:

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I move to strike out the last word. I understand that the amendment authorized by the rule adopted this morning is now under consideration.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am not opposed to the amendment; I believe it to be a good one. I think the pay of the enlisted men and noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army ought to be increased, and I hope the increase provided in this bill will be sufficient to bring the Army up to the standard determined by the President of the United States. The increase is somewhat substantial. I am sure that a majority of the Members of this House are thoroughly in favor of some provision along that line. I rose, however, to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question or two in relation to the matter of retire pay. Will the gentleman from Iowa give me his attention?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The paragraph on page 10, line 6, provides that nothing in this act shall be construed to increase the pay of enlisted men now on the retired list. I assume that if this provision becomes a law it will increase the retire pay of those who are retired hereafter.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is correct.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Even if it should be but one day after the passage of this act.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman has had experience enough with questions of equalization of retire pay of veterans of the Army and Navy who went out of the service with the same rank and under substantially the same conditions as others, doubtless, to foresee in the future at almost every session of Congress an effort made to put those who were retired on or before the date of the passage of this bill upon the same basis as those who shall be retired after the bill becomes operative.

I suppose the explanation is that the chief object of this bill is to build up the Army; and yet, at the same time, Congress will be confronted in the future with the contention in behalf of thousands of ex-private soldiers and noncommissioned officers that they are entitled to the same pay as the men who may retire after this bill becomes a law, under substantially the same circumstances. It is an ugly question to meet. We meet it every time a Navy bill is up for consideration, and there is a good deal of merit in the contention. Would it not be better to put the men now on the retired list upon exactly the same status in respect to retire pay, in order that we may do justice to all of the retired soldiers, as the soldiers who will retire under the operation of the law? Would it not be better, in the interest of good feeling and simple justice, to put them all on the same basis?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, that question was discussed, and while there is an element of justice in saying that those now on the retired list shall have all the benefits of this act, yet there is nothing in equity that demands it. When anyone goes on the retired list his status is fixed. So far as the Navy is concerned, my understanding is that they have a law which provides absolutely that no man on the retired list shall have his pay increased or diminished while he is on the retired list.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is no trouble about that, so far as I can see.

Now, just one other remark. This question of providing for the future presented a great many problems to the committee, and one of the great problems was that of cost, to be frank with the gentleman. This is going to make, as I stated before, a large increase in the military establishment. When a man goes on the retired list his status is fixed, and he remains there. We last year, in order to help the soldiers on the retired list of the enlisted force, increased their pay by three-quarters of all the allowances they were entitled to under the active list, fuels and quarters. My judgment is that we ought not to disturb the retired list. My judgment is that something over $400,000 that would be required to meet the conditions in this bill applied to the retired list would be more than in equity and justice they are entitled to.

What we want to-day is an active Army, to fill up the depleted ranks, to make it possible to secure for the service of the country in the future the number of men prescribed by law for the size of the Army in time of peace. I do not believe that there is any reason why this provision should apply to the retired list. I will say that when the pay of the officers was up the Secretary of War was explicit that, in his judgment, the officers and men on the retired list had their status fixed and had no reason to come to Congress for an increase.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. The men who enlist under this provision, if it becomes a law, and are retired would then be entitled to increased retired pay?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the necessity of increasing the retired pay of men enlisted and retired hereafter above the men which are on the retired list now and which we did increase at the last session of Congress?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think one very good reason is to induce the men to remain in the Army as a permanent occupation.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman think that men can be induced to enlist in the Army on the strength of what they will get as retired pay six or eight years after?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do think so. Without the provisions for retirement neither officers nor men would remain in. One object in the amendment that I offered is to cut off the bounty giving three months' pay in all grades after they have been in the Army a certain length of time, believing as I do that the provision for retirement would then be sufficient to retain their services.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to state that there are on the retired list of the Regular Army quite a number of veterans of the civil war, who were retired on account of age or disability, and who are receiving pay under existing law. Under this provision many will be retired in the future during the lives of these veterans of the civil war, men retired who have never seen a day of actual service, but who will receive a substantially higher rate of pay than these veterans of the civil war. The gentleman from Iowa knows that there are twelve or fifteen admirals in the Navy——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is a different proposition.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. But it illustrates the principle. Every one of whom saw valiant service during the civil war and were retired under a certain law with retired pay, fixed by that law. The law was subsequently amended and the admirals retired under the operation of the amendment, most of whom never performed any actual service in time of war had substantially higher rates of pay than those who performed actual service.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman is mistaken in that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In what respect does the gentleman from Iowa say that I am mistaken?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. In this. Under the law the active pay provided applies to all officers and men unless there was an exception made in the law itself. The gentleman has in mind some deserving officers of the Navy, but their trouble does not come from what the gentleman from Indiana states, but because of the personnel bill, where we made a provision for retiring all officers who served in the civil war one grade higher. That applied only to officers on the active list, and as these officers were already retired that provision did not apply to them. It applied only to those on the active list, and it did not affect the retired pay but it gave a man on the active list a grade higher, and under the law that applied when he went on the retired list. If the men on the retired list had been given an additional grade by law, it would have increased their pay.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is true that there are admirals——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to say to my friend that I believe Congress ought to pass an act giving those few deserving old officers another grade. It is not the pay of the retired list that affects them; it is the grade given by Congress to those on the active list. If they are given like recognition, their pay will follow.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The retire pay depends on the rank upon which an officer retires.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly; but if the pay of a grade is increased for officers on the active list, it applies also to the retired list of corresponding grades.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And it is true that men of the same rank are on the retired list at different rates of pay. In relation to this matter I feel that this element of injustice is one that will rankle in the hearts of a great many men, and it is better to have equality, if we can have it in harmony with principles of justice and equal treatment, than to discriminate, unless there be some very substantial reasons for the discrimination. My suggestion was that we either put those on the retired list now on the same retire pay as those will receive who retire under the operation of this law, or amend line 7 by adding "or hereafter" after the word "men," so as not to increase the retire pay of those who may enlist and serve under this law.

Mr. HAY. I want to ask the gentleman what injustice this provision does to men already on the retired list?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is in its inequality; that is all.

Mr. HAY. There is no inequality about it. They are retired on the pay they were receiving when they entered the Army, and this is a new provision applying to a different class of men entirely. There can be no injustice at all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is good doctrine and I think it has divine authority. That is illustrated in the parable of the penny.

Mr. HAY. Exactly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yet it does not seem to fit modern conditions of civilized life.

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman that my experience here has been that there is very little pressure brought to bear upon Congress from the retired men of the Regular Army. The pressure is brought from the Volunteers, not from the men in the Regular Army, and I do not think there will be any trouble about this. I do not believe these men who are now on the retired list are going to bring any pressure to bear to be placed on the same footing as the men who go into the Army under this provision.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I desire to call the attention of the committee to this situation, that is all.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Under the law as it stands now, the President has the right to fix the pay of the enlisted force in the Navy, as the exigencies may demand. He has largely increased the pay within the last few years, necessarily so, in my judgment. Now, those retired enlisted men of the Navy can not have their pay increased on the retired list; their pay remains the same. Has the gentleman heard any particular complaint of any injustice done to those retired under one rate of pay because they did not get another rate of pay?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have not; and perhaps complaints would not come to me. There is this principle that we all think a great deal of, that is dear to the hearts of every American, and that is the principle of equality. It is not what I have or do not have that troubles me so much, but the question is, Have I what I am entitled to as measured by my fellowmen? If I receive a certain amount for a certain service and some man no worthier should receive a substantially larger emolument for substantially the same service, I would be dissatisfied, though abstractly I might be satisfied with the pay I receive.

Mr. CAPRON. Will the gentleman permit a question? I would like to ask my friend if he really believes that the gentlemen who went out of Congress previous to this session have not some claim upon Congress to put their pay up equal to that which we are now receiving. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, no; but if Members of Congress were receiving retired pay after one or two terms of enlistment, they would have the same claim.

Mr. CAPRON. It seems to me that those men on that American principle of equality are feeling a little badly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think they are congratulating themselves, probably, that they are now on the retired list, and they carry no jealousies or vexations.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am not much of a lawyer and I may be getting in water I better not wade in; but it seems to me I have somewhere got the impression that a Federal judge, when retired, has to live on that pay even if his successor gets pay double what he receives and is retired at advanced pay.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know that there had been any change in the salary of judges until the last Congress, I think, for some years.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. But when they retire their status is fixed, as I understand it. I got it from the Secretary of War, and he is a good judge himself.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The law provides a judge shall retire upon the salary he received, I think, at the time of his retirement.

Mr. OLMSTED. I think there is one judge on the retired list who retired before the last increase in the salary of the Supreme Court judges.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Justice Brown.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And Justice Shiras. However, I shall not propose any amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to say just a word in behalf of that portion of the amendment which proposes to increase the pay of soldiers. Yesterday I was before the Committee on Appropriations and told them briefly of the conditions which I saw last October when I made a visit to Fort Casey, Fort Flagler, and Fort Worden, that guard the entrance to Puget Sound. I told them that at one of the forts two out of four of the 12-inch guns were useless, one of them upon the grass and the other mounted upon a carriage from which it could not be fired. But, bad as those conditions were, so far as equipment was concerned, I found that it was worse in regard to men. At neither of these three forts, if you would take all the men on detail duty, all the cooks, all waiters, and all men in the hospitals, there would not be one-third enough men at either of these forts to man the guns that they already have. I have received this morning in relation to this matter a dispatch from the Hon. Erastus Brainerd, editor of the Post and Intelligencer of Seattle, one of the leading papers of the Northwest and one of the foremost and most ably edited newspapers in the United States, and I ask that the Clerk read it as a portion of my remarks.

SEATTLE, WASH., February 28, 1908.

Hon. W. E. HUMPHREY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

If Appropriations Committee could see Fort Casey's condition as I have seen it; if the people of the nation knew its condition, they would appropriate more than you ask. It is shocking to ascertain that in case of war we would be so nearly helpless. Two guns mounted is something, but it is not enough.

ERASTUS BRAINERD.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Fortifications has given the country a better coast defense than it has probably ever had. To man all of the guns that are now in position would require a force for a single shift, without reserves, of 41,833 men. As a matter of fact there were only 9,628 men in actual enlistment on October 15, 1907, to man all of these guns, and, therefore, it is not surprising that there are only skeleton companies in command of most of these coast defenses. The committee in presenting this section for the increased pay of the Army feels confident that within a reasonably short time the number of enlistments will be so great that these guns can be properly cared for at all of the fortifications along the coasts of our country. There is another provision in this amendment which commends itself to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I hope that it will also commend itself to the House; and that is the provision that military bands shall not compete with civilian musicians when the furnishing of music outside the limits of military posts by such military bands places them in competition with local civilian musicians. This legislation has been asked for for many years by the musicians of the United States, and I am glad to see that it is incorporated in the present bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Additional for length of service, $38,640.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in line 1, the word "pay" should be inserted after the word "additional." This is simply a clerical amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the clerical correction. [After a pause.] None is heard, and it will be made.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of paymasters' messengers, $18,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I observe that is increased $2,000 for messengers. Is that an increase in salary or an increase in number?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is an increase in number by two.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the necessity?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They have more officers to provide for.

Mr. TAWNEY. I wanted to know if you have a provision for additional paymasters?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We do not increase the number beyond ninety. We have to have two extra messengers to meet the service.

Mr. YOUNG. I will say that one is for Cuba and the other for the Philippines.

The Clerk read as follows:

For interest on soldiers' deposits, $100,000, and so much as may be necessary to pay back such deposits.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling the attention of this House to the fact that the Government of the United States is now maintaining a savings bank in the Army and a savings bank in the Navy for reasons which argue strongly in favor of the establishment of a system of postal savings banks for all the people. In the Fifty-eighth Congress I had the honor to introduce a bill for the establishment of postal savings banks, and to make an address in support of the same. Later in this session I shall undertake to make some remarks in support of a similar bill which I have introduced at this session.

I simply desire, at this time, to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that the establishment of this savings bank in the Navy, in which there are now on deposit, as I recall, something like a million and a half of the saving funds of officers and men in the Navy, has no logical existence whatever except upon the same argument which would plead for the establishment of a postal savings bank for all the people.

It may said, Mr. Chairman, that three-fourths, or at least a large proportion, of the people of the United States to-day—the poor people, the people in moderate circumstances, the industrial classes—have no means provided by the Government or by private enterprise by which they may be encouraged in thrift, under which they may deposit with absolute security of a return of their funds. Every other civilized government in the world has established some form of governmental savings banks. The United States alone of the enlightened nations has failed to do so—the United States, whose Government is supposed to be formed with the purpose of protecting all the people and encouraging them in those habits of life which work for progress and civilization. Yet in the matter of Government provision for protecting the savings of the people our country holds a place among the most effete and benighted nations of the world.

Now, Mr. Chairman, at the present time the people of the United States and the statesmen in both Houses are discussing what shall be done to provide a larger measure of confidence in banking institutions. Postal savings banks afford a perfect means of establishing confidence among millions of small depositors. Statesmen are discussing what shall be done to bring out of hiding the hundreds of millions of dollars which people have withdrawn from the banks or which they hoard rather than deposit in banks, and yet there is a simple remedy—one that has been time-tried in many countries since originally proposed by Gladstone, the great English statesman—the opening of our post-offices to receive the deposits of the people. It may be estimated, Mr. Chairman, with a reasonable degree of certainty, that almost immediately upon the establishment of a system of postal savings banks in our Post-Office Department, in perhaps 15,000 money-order offices, more than $500,000,000 hidden away in old mattresses, under carpets, in old teapots, or buried in the ground would be brought into the light and placed in the custody of the Government, and thus brought into circulation. This is a nation very largely composed of the foreign element. Hundreds of thousands—yes, millions—of those foreigners have come to our shores, and they and their descendants have been raised in the belief that the Government was the place for the poor people's savings. This vast foreign element, of all nationalities—of all European nationalities, at least—to a very great extent keeps its small hoards hidden at home.

Every newspaper that we read contains some argument in favor of the system of postal savings, Mr. Chairman, because it contains news of robberies and burglaries and murders to secure this hoarded money.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to rise to a question of order, but I gave notice yesterday that outside of a discussion of the bill under the five-minute rule I would object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am ready to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may extend his remarks in the RECORD if he desires to do so.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think I will not take that privilege, because I intend to burden the House with a full discussion of this subject at some future time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mileage to officers and contract surgeons when authorized by law, $550,000: Provided, That hereafter actual expenses only, not to exceed $4.50 per day and cost of transportation when not furnished by the Quartermaster's Department, shall be paid to the officers of the Army, contract surgeons, and dental surgeons, when traveling on duty without troops, under competent orders, within the geographical limits of the Territory of Alaska.

Mr. MANN and Mr. SLAYDEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order must be disposed of before the committee can consider an amendment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is clearly subject to the point of order. The same reason applies to this provision that was used in the insertion of the provision for reimbursement. The same hearings and the same documents all apply to each of these items. It is simply to make it possible for the officers of the Army in Alaska to transact their business and obey orders without bankrupting themselves.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman give us any information as to the subject of mileage in the United States and differentiate between this and that? Of course the gentleman knows, I assume, because I think he knows more about the military branch of the Government than anybody else within my acquaintance, that there is a very great abuse on the part of some officers in the Army in reference to the present mileage provision.

Now, is there any danger that this provision, which greatly exceeds the cost of travel, or will greatly exceed the cost of travel in some places in Alaska, will also be made the opportunity for additional grave abuse?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, Mr. Chairman, I suppose there is hardly a possibility to get up a law that may not under some conditions be abused.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I understand that.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think that our present mileage law is abused frequently, and we have been trying for some years to correct that abuse. Only a few years ago, any officer ordered to any South American republic got his full 7 cents a mile, even if he had transportation given to him by the steamship line. To-day, on account of the Committee on Military Affairs trying to correct abuses as rapidly as we find them, under similar circumstances, the travel is only actual expenses. In this matter I suppose that if it were possible during the summer months for an officer to take long trips by water, where his board is included with his transportation, and if the Government permitted him to elect which way he would go each time, he could take a water trip, with transportation from the Quartermaster's Department, and make money on it. But as to the larger part of this travel, this Document 316 sets out the truth of the situation, and the provision submitted by the Department has been incorporated here as the result of this document and the hearings. And then, further, I should imagine that the Department would call an officer down very quickly that undertook to abuse that privilege in that way.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know of any case where the Department has called an officer down for the grave abuses which some of them now perpetrate upon the Government in this respect?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, I will say to the gentleman that early in this session the Committee on Military Affairs called upon the Department for a detailed statement of the mileage accounts of the higher officers—and the abuse does not come from the lower officers. We found that some of the highest officers were disposed to take trips a little more frequently, possibly, than the demands of the Government required. We called attention of the Chief of Staff to the discrepancy in these enormous mileage accounts of some of the officers, and he is now engaged in an investigation of the matter. If we can get that in time I will be glad to lay it before Congress. In view of the fact that the Department has received full information, and in view of the fact that we have notified all these officers, especially the general officers, that we are looking after their mileage accounts, it will have a very decidedly good effect in reducing expenditures in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Does the gentleman from Illinois raise the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Well, I withdraw the point or order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, in line 2, amend by adding: "Provided, That hereafter only actual traveling expenses, including an allowance not to exceed $4.50 a day for subsistence while so traveling, shall be paid to officers of the Army, contract surgeons, dental surgeons, paymasters' clerks, and enlisted men when traveling under orders on public business."

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer that amendment without——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I offer that amendment with very little hope of getting by those shoal places called points of order; but I think that if enacted it would work a genuine reform where a genuine reform is most urgently needed. Now, there is no Member of this House who has given any attention to military legislation or who considers military accounts at all as between the Army and the Government of the United States, who does not know that the atmosphere has been charged, surcharged, with stories as to an extravagant misuse of the mileage allowance. We have had some instances of gentlemen who seemed to think that the shortest line between two given points is not a straight line; that, indeed, the best, shortest, and certainly the most agreeable route of travel was by way of Paris, London, and Vienna, from Manila, say to Washington.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is no reason why this reform should not be instituted, and why it should not be begun now. I believe an overwhelming majority of the House would favor it if they were brought to understand it. I know, of course, that it will go out on a point of order, which I presume will be pressed, but we must come to it some time. If it be urged, as it has been urged, that there is not an adequate compensation for officers, then in heaven's name let us meet that question face to face and frankly increase the pay of the officers. It is urged in extenuation of a continuance of this law, which permits and covers these abuses, that it provides an allowance by which officers may transport their families from one place to another. Now, that may be all right. I have nothing to urge against that at this time, but if we are to undertake the cost of transporting officers' families, I want it known to the people; I want it known to the country; I want it perfectly understood by every Member of the House. I am not disposed to be niggardly in the treatment of the officers. I am disposed to go as far as justice and as far even as liberality will permit us to go; but I do not believe in granting allowances that increase the compensation of officers to a figure that we do not understand, which we can not measure, and, above all, I do not believe in permitting the continuance of a custom which will soon be, if it is not already, reeking with scandal.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It opens the door for favoritism, too, does it not?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Undoubtedly, as my friend suggests, it does open the door for favoritism. Now, I know how difficult it is for the Chief of Staff and for others who have to authorize these travel allowances to say no, because I have been in the office of the Chief of Staff when those cases came in. Circumstances did seem to suggest very strongly that the public service would be promoted by authorizing the travel. But sometimes I have thought that perhaps they strained a point and authorized the travel when it should not have been done, and I am not entirely convinced that things would not have gone on about as well if the traveling had not been undertaken. But it is difficult for the Chief of Staff or for any other man to pass upon this question. There can be no trouble if the travel allowance is limited absolutely and arbitrarily to the expenses incurred. If it be more than the allowance they now receive, they will benefit by it. If it be less, the Government will benefit by it.

I could not catch the conversation between the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], but the instances referred to yesterday I believe were those of officers who traveled under orders in Alaska. One officer paid $90 in actual expenses and got back $4.50. Another officer lost in one year, by his travel under orders, orders that he was compelled to obey, in expenses that he could not avoid undertaking, $683.

Those victims of circumstances were standing around the corridors of the War Department and of the committee, hopeless of ever recovering those sums. One of them spoke to me about it, and I told him that they should unquestionably present their case to Congress, because I did not believe that so simple an act of justice would be denied.

Now, if my amendment should be accepted, if this should be held in order by the Chairman and accepted by the House, no such hardship as this could ever occur, and I hope that the amendment will be adopted and the knife put to this abuse.

The time of Mr. SLAYDEN having expired, by unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. MANN, it was extended five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to state, from his investigation of the subject, how much money has been paid to any officer for traveling expenses in one year?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I can not tell the gentleman exactly. I know some pretty large sums have been paid.

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to embarrass the gentleman, or any member of the Military Affairs Committee. Is the gentleman able to say that it is up into the thousands of dollars?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am able to say that it is a very considerable sum.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say that there is only one officer who received as much as $2,000 last year.

Mr. MANN. Was that for foreign travel?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It was for the total traveling he did during the year—none of it foreign travel.

Mr. MANN. He traveled thirty or forty thousand miles. It is impossible for me to understand how any such travel could be incurred except for the purpose of getting mileage.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think that is one object.

Mr. MANN. I thank the gentleman for his frank statement.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think this amendment is subject to the point of order, because it goes to the entire mileage account of the Army, while we are simply providing here for one specific matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa make the point of order?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I make the point of order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is simply a limitation on the expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not agree with the gentleman from Texas. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have been considerably impressed by what my friend from Illinois has said, and I have an amendment which I will submit, to strike out the proviso and insert, beginning at line 3, down to and including line 9, as follows:

Provided, That hereafter actual expenses only shall be paid to officers for travel while traveling to and from the Territory of Alaska and when traveling within the limits of the Territory of Alaska.

That will give them actual expenses. That will cover this point mentioned by the gentleman from Illinois where officers might take a long trip by water down the Yukon, or down the coast, where transportation is furnished carrying with it meals; where they pay 7 cents a mile it would be a source of profit. It carries with it the travel while going to Alaska and returning from Alaska, so that they will get the actual expenses only. That will make a limitation, but I warn the gentleman that it may cost more than $4.50 a day.

Mr. MANN. I think if an officer expends more than $4.50 a day in travel, the Government ought to pay it. It is not a question of the amount of money so much as it is whether we encourage officers to get money in a way that they ought not to.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If this is a wise limitation to put on the mileage expenditure in Alaska, why is it not wise to apply it to the entire Army?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say that there is nothing in my mind of analogy between the travel in the United States proper and other places and the travel in Alaska. In this country, after a great many years of effort, the mileage for the Navy was fixed at 8 cents a mile and for the Army at 7 cents a mile. The reason for the discrimination was claimed to be that in the United States the Army officer received quartermaster's transportation for his baggage up to a certain number of pounds for each rank, while in the Navy they had to pay all of their freight for moving the baggage.

There was a time when we had the expense account. It was a source of constant irritation, it was a source of constant annoyance, and the amount of 7 cents was finally agreed upon as being a substantially fair amount for the Government to pay. I want to call the attention of my friend from Texas to one statement that I know he did not intend to make—because he is one of the most accurate men in the House—where he said that the officers selected the farthest way around. The officer has nothing to do with selecting his route. If an officer goes from here to San Francisco, no matter what line he takes, the mileage is computed from tables made up by the Paymaster-General's Office over the nearest route. That applies to every trip, no matter where made.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But when he goes from station to station?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If he is ordered from Manila to New York, it is computed on sea travel to San Francisco, and from San Francisco on by the nearest usually traveled route, the shortest line from San Francisco to New York. The gentleman refers to European travel. There was an abuse of that at one time, in my judgment, when men were ordered home by way of Europe. But the only way they could get mileage even then was to be ordered first to Hongkong and then from Hongkong to some point in Europe and then from some point in Europe home.

Mr. SLAYDEN. When I referred to being ordered from station to station I had that in my mind.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, strike out lines 3 to 9, inclusive, and insert "Provided, That hereafter actual expenses only shall be paid to officers for travel while traveling to and from the Territory of Alaska, or when traveling within the limits of the Territory of Alaska."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that it had better remain at $4.50 a day. Who is to say what the actual expenses are? That is the way these matters are abused.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They will have to furnish the bills before they are paid. A man could not be paid until the bill was approved by the War Department.

Mr. HAY. It seems to me the provision in the bill reported by the committee is much better than the gentleman's present amendment.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the amendment include the word "necessary?"

Mr. HAY. I know they file an account and say "actual expenses," and that is the way the matter is passed.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am not at all tenacious about the amendment.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Under the amendment he would also be entitled to what he spends in the way of traveling expenses, and he may live in the most extravagant manner.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think it is pretty bad policy to try to amend in this way on the floor of the House, and I will withdraw the amendment. Enough attention has been called to this matter to do good.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of officers of the line, $50,400.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, to that I raise the point of order. I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the Porto Rican regiment, under the act of June 30, 1904, was mustered out of the service, and I will read the provisions of that act:

For the Porto Rico Provisional Regiment of Infantry, composed of two battalions of four companies each, to include the enlisted men of the present regiment who may be in the service June 30, 1904, and officers as herein provided. The field officers shall be detailed from the officers of the Regular Army of the same grade, and shall receive the pay and emoluments of their grade. The present officers of the regiment below the grade of field officers who are mentally, morally, and physically qualified and have proved efficient in their respective positions may be reappointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate (and such officers shall be entitled to preference in such appointments), for a provisional term of four years.

The provisional term of four years provided for in this act will end on the 30th of June, 1908, and my point is that Congress can not appropriate for officers who will be out of the service of the United States when the appropriation goes into effect. There is no provision of the law which will authorize the President to appoint these officers for an additional term of four years after the 1st day of July, 1908. They are mustered out by virtue of the law on that day, and the Chairman will probably recall when this matter was before Congress, at that time it was distinctly understood that this regiment was only to remain in the service for four years, and the legislation was intended to bring about that result. The law, so far as the officers are concerned, I believe does bring about that result, and therefore I think that the point of order will lie to the provision for the payment to the officers for this Porto Rican Provisional Regiment. I will reserve the point of order for a moment, as I understand the gentleman from Texas desires to make some remarks.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, not being a parliamentary tactician, I am not certain whether a point of order will lie or not, but I am convinced in my own mind that the common sense of this House ought to lie against this provision, and I think it ought to go out by an overwhelming vote. There may have been a time in the history of the last ten years when it was desirable to have this regiment, but that time has gone by—gone by a long time ago, and I doubt whether it ever really existed. I do not believe that we ought to have two kinds of military organizations. I believe that to transact the military business of this Government we ought to have the Army of the United States, and that alone. The former Secretary of War, the present distinguished gentleman who is at the head of the Department of State, came before the Committee on Military Affairs some years ago and recommended specifically the discontinuance of the Porto Rican regiment. He said that it was no longer necessary to maintain the organization. Subsequently, I will not say for political reasons, he modified that statement very slightly. We have lately had before the committee the distinguished gentleman who presides, occasionally at least, over the War Department, and he urged the continuance of the Porto Rican regiment, but his reasons are very remarkable. Secretary Taft said:

> I think it would be a mistake, a great mistake, not to continue the Porto Rican regiment. I doubt if there is any one thing that makes the Porto Ricans feel so like a part of our country as to have that regiment there parading, drilling, maneuvering. I believe that as a part of the policy of maintaining our government in Porto Rico such a regiment is necessary. I do not mean to say that the conditions of order there are such that you can not do without it.

He hopes that it will be continued and made renewable forever, admitting that it is an anomalous situation, that there is nothing like it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. In Porto Rico, is there no organization there that takes the place of the National Guard in the States, that could parade around and give them the pomp and glorious circumstance?

Mr. SLAYDEN. The committee which prepared this bill has no official connection whatever with the National Guard in any of the States or Territories, and I am not advised on that question. We have only to do with the regular establishment.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. But I thought if the Secretary's reasons were the only reasons for maintaining this organization, perhaps that might be met by the maintenance of a National Guard in Porto Rico.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Undoubtedly, Mr. Chairman, it would be much less expensive to maintain a national guard there and contribute out of the Treasury for the purpose of maneuvering and drilling.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. And quite as spectacular——

Mr. SLAYDEN. And quite as spectacular and as good so far as the moral effect is concerned. He further says that it is convenient to have positions of this kind to give officers out there, although anomalous. Now, as a matter of fact, we limit the opportunity of the Porto Ricans themselves to the exalted rank of captain. Beyond that, under the provisions of law, officers in that regiment have to be detailed from our Army. Gentlemen speak of it as offering a career to the Porto Ricans. Bear in mind that the ultimate development of that career is to attain the rank of captain, and as now organized they do not have the privilege of retirement. They are simply in an organization which, under the recommendation of the Secretary of War, is to be renewable at the end of each four years. Mr. Chairman, they all admit that conditions of peace and order in the island of Porto Rico do not require the presence of this organization. I myself entirely subscribed to that view until a few days ago, when I read this article which I hold in my hand from a New York newspaper, and I am going to ask the Clerk to read this, and in order that he may have time to do it, Mr. Chairman, I shall ask for an extension of five minutes in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] None is heard. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PORTO RICANS CALLED TO ARMS—DELEGATE RIVERA MAKES A VIOLENT ATTACK ON AMERICANS IN THE ISLAND HOUSE.

SAN JUAN, PORTO RICO, February 10, 1908.

Governor Post's friends and advisers in the Unionist party are putting him in an embarrassing position by their seditious utterances. If he reproves them he will lose their support, and, on the other hand, his silence is construed by Americans and loyal Porto Ricans as a tacit acquiescence in Unionist declarations and proposed legislation.

Delegate Luis Munoz Rivera, leader of the house and of the Unionist party, a man who has great influence with Post, recently made a long, bitter and violent attack on the American Government in a speech in the house. The Porto Ricans approved Rivera's tirade with vociferous applause. He denounced Americans as tyrants, declared that the one thought written on the hearts of Porto Ricans is independence, and said:

"Porto Rico is a mass of helots, submissive to the bitter caprice of its lords. And while Cuba awaits to have the ties which bind her parted, Porto Rico is less than a tribe, for tribes struggle for their honor and for their existence.

"Japan affirms that Korea is not fit for self-government; the United States is of the opinion the Philippines are not prepared for it. Gentlemen, we know already that there was a country that was not fit one eve, according to their masters, but was fit the following day, when they took up their machetes and guns and in the mountains regained by force their rights. From this it appears that there is no other road but the road of the woods and no other alternative than the alternative of arms if effective preparation is to be reached. It is necessary that the victims raise their voices and let their bitterness be heard. I raise my voice in the name of the victims.

"I shall advise my country to prepare to fight with machete and gun in the mountains. It is necessary for the people of Porto Rico to defend themselves with Spartan resolution against injustice. By giving in one does not advance toward the future.

"We are small, but we shall be great; we are weak, but we shall be strong if we unite hand to hand in the difficult climb of our Calvary. Union will save us. And for this purpose and to save ourselves the basis of the Union of Porto Rico (Unionist party) was established, which extends its hand and opens its doors to all Porto Ricans.

"The house of delegates sent four messages to Congress and to the President of the United States. Not one of them attained the fortune and honor of a reply. The President recommended to Congress that we should be declared citizens. Congress did not listen to the kind recommendation of Mr. Roosevelt.

"I would say to Speaker CANNON, to that gentleman who in this very corner of the house reminded us of our so-called "inferiority"—I would say to Mr. CANNON that if citizenship is to be given to us without the fullness of the American right, if it is only to consist in an abstract formula, we prefer Porto Rican citizenship. Up there they can be very proud of their citizenship. We understand that there exists no greatness in the world which excels the greatness of the United States, but here we are very proud of our citizenship, which is poor, which is feeble, but it is ours."

Rivera violently denounced the "six little kings," as he termed the Americans who are the heads of executive departments, and even sneered at his friend, Colonel Post, who, he says, lacks power and prestige. The executive council, Rivera asserts, is "the rock on which Porto Rican hopes are dashed."

The speech might be ignored as simply another violent outburst by a Porto Rican leader, but unfortunately it has fed the fire of anti-Americanism all over the island and increased the hatred between natives and the Americans.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not apprehend any serious result to the Government of the United States from the burning eloquence of the speaker in the Porto Rican assembly, but it does not quite bear out the statement of the Secretary of War that all is calm and serene in that island, and I believe that history will repeat itself. I believe that despite the optimism of the secretary of the colonies, which has recently illuminated the country from the Pacific to the Atlantic and from the northern coast of Maine down to the Ohio River, where pessimism begins, that ultimately we will have repeated in this country the same sort of history that they have had in England, that they have had in Germany, that they have had in France, and that is disturbances in colonies governed at remote capitals. The people of Porto Rico have shown themselves to be orderly and peaceful in the main. They have also on occasions shown themselves to be spirited; and if we go on denying to them the right to be our fellow-men politically, it stands to reason that at some time or other, and in the not very distant future, their manhood will revolt, and in spite of the optimism of the Secretary of War, we will have to send other organizations for service there in addition to this one, which he says is only required for drill, maneuvers, and for show. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order I want to say simply a few words and then yield to the gentleman from Minnesota. If the Chair has the document bearing on this subject, and I assume he has it——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has the communication from the Secretary, Document No. 429.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is the one. You see the provision is simply as to the officers—nothing else. There is nothing there that prohibits them from being reappointed, but at the expiration of four years, unless reappointed, they would go out of office. An officer can not be reappointed if he is a Porto Rican, but the gentleman from Minnesota has an opinion from the Judge-Advocate-General on this very question, and I will yield to him to present that part of it to the Chair.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the Judge-Advocate-General sent to me an opinion on this point, which I will send to the Clerk's desk and have read as a part of my remarks. I will state, however, as a preliminary matter, to the chairman of the committee, so that this opinion can be fully understood. The history of the organization is set forth in the statement of the Judge-Advocate-General and refers to two statutes, and, with the permission of the Chair, I will read enough so that the Chair and the committee will understand the language of the statute organizing this regiment. In an act approved February 2, 1901, which was the Army reorganization act, section 37, appears the following language:

The President is authorized to organize and maintain one provincial regiment, not exceeding three battalions of infantry, for service in Porto Rico, the enlisted strength thereof to be composed of the natives of that island, so far as practicable.

Then another sentence, closing that section:

The regiment shall be continued in service until further direction by Congress.

The only other legislation is that which appears in the report containing the terms of the act of 1904, that the chairman now has, in which there is no direction by Congress which discontinues the service of that regiment. The act of 1904 does not pretend to change the tenure or term of service of the regiment as an organization. It does provide for the status of the officers and the enlisted men. This is not a direction by Congress discontinuing the service of the regiment.

Now, with those remarks I ask that the opinion of the Judge-Advocate-General be read. It shows that the regiment was organized and maintained as directed by law, that Congress directed it should be continued, and made provision for it, and that Congress has not by any legislation changed that direction.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

There also seems to be a misunderstanding as to the existing legislative status of the Porto Rican regiment. I will try to put before you the legislative history of that organization.

A regiment of volunteers, composed largely of native Porto Ricans, was organized in 1899. In section 37 of the general reorganization bill (act of February 2, 1901, 31 Stat. L., 748) the organization of a provisional regiment in Porto Rico was established. This continued in existence for about three years, when it was reorganized in the act of April 23, 1904 (33 Stat. L., 266). As reorganized it was made to consist of two battalions of four companies each. The field officers were to be detailed from officers of the Regular Army of the same grade. The company officers were provided for, as you will see, by an examination of the bill, one of the essential features being that they were to hold office for the term of four years. In the execution of the legislation which was embodied in the act of April 23, 1904, the regiment was mustered out on June 30, 1904, and a new regiment was organized on July 1 of the same year.

There seems to be an impression in the committee that the regiment is required, by existing law, to be mustered out on June 30, 1908. I think if the act of 1904 be carefully examined it will be found that there is no such requirement, and that, if it be desired to disband the regiment, legislation to that end will have to be adopted by Congress.

And I remain, as always, faithfully, yours,

GEO. B. DAVIS.

Hon. FREDERICK C. STEVENS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Chairman a question about that. Does he interpret that letter to mean that this Porto Rican battalion, or regiment, or whatever you call it, has a perpetual life?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the gentleman when we agreed on this conference report for the recommissioning of the officers for four years, I regarded it as not abolishing it, but making it so that at the expiration of four years Congress could refuse to appropriate for it without doing any injustice to anybody in that regiment. And I also at that time believed that the disposition of Congress was to abolish it. Now, I do not believe the point of order is good; but I do believe if the majority of the House is opposed to the continuance of the Porto Rican regiment, that under this provision of the Senate as agreed to in conference, the Porto Rican regiment has reached the limit of its existence unless Congress does appropriate, and that no claim can come upon the Government by reason of our refusal to appropriate. In other words, if it was a regiment of the Regular Army, provided for as a permanent organization, and we refused to appropriate for it, then they would have a claim which, finally, the Government would have to pay, while in this case it would necessitate the muster out of the regiment. The term is fixed by law when the officers' commissions expire. If we make an appropriation, we have by that affirmatively stated that we desire its continuance. We have not yet said by this law that it shall expire in four years, and I want to say, after hearing the Judge-Advocate's opinion, I am inclined to think that I was a little mistaken as to its absolutely being determined now, but I think I am not mistaken in the statement that we can refuse to appropriate and that the natural effect will be to terminate its existence.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I can not agree with the argument made by the Judge-Advocate-General. The law of 1901, providing for the organization of the Army, merely provided that Congress should have control of this Porto Rican provisional command. Congress, in the act of 1904, to which the attention of the Chair has been called, undertook, as is admitted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], to say when the term of office of the officers, at least, should cease and determine; and my point is that until Congress enacts some further legislation which shall permit the President to appoint these officers again we can not make appropriations for men who can not, under the law, be appointed to hold the offices which they now hold. Can it be said that the President can reappoint these officers under this law every four years when the law itself provides that their terms of office shall cease and determine at the end of a certain four-year period?

Now, I assume that the enlisted men do not come under the same provision of that law as the officers do, but if the officers go out—and the officers are not like the officers of the Regular Army—under the law under which they hold their commissions in the Army, they may hold all their lives. There is no provision for retirement or anything of that sort for these men. They hold an anomalous position there, and they ought not, in my judgment, to be continued; and it was the intent and purpose of the law when it was made that the terms of these officers should expire four years from the 4th day of July, 1904. And I think the law, as the Chairman has it there, clearly states that; and I therefore believe that the point of order is good.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The chairman, of course, has seen this act. I think it clearly explains itself. In the year 1904, there being then an existing regiment of infantry, appropriation was made for that regiment, changing the mode of appointment of its officers and the time for which those officers should serve. It said, first, that the field officers should be detailed from the Regular Army of the same grade. It said next:

The present officers of the regiment below the grade of field officers who are mentally, morally, and physically qualified and have proved efficient in their respective positions may be reappointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate (and such officers shall be entitled to preference in such appointments), for a provisional term of four years.

It simply prescribed the term for which the officers should be appointed. It does not say that the regiment shall come to an end at that time.

It again says:

Officers so reappointed shall be eligible for promotion in the regiment up to and including the rank of captain upon examination as to their fitness for such promotion.

It does not at all state that when so promoted to captain they shall not be appointed for the full term of four years from the date on which they should be so appointed. The statute continues:

Vacancies then existing or thereafter occurring in the grade of second lieutenant may be filled by the President, in his discretion, and with the advice and consent of the Senate, by the appointment of citizens of Porto Rico for the provisional term of four years.

Suppose a vacancy "thereafter occurring;" if the vacancy took place last week, there would be an appointment for a provisional term of four years from that date. The "provisional" means that we need not reappoint the officer if we shall not want him.

Then, again, "men hereafter enlisted in the regiment shall be citizens of Porto Rico and shall be enlisted for a term of two years." If such men were enlisted yesterday they were enlisted for a term of two years, and their term of enlistment goes on till 1910.

The statute ends by providing:

The names of all enlisted men who have served honorably in the regiment shall be kept at the headquarters of the regiment, and these men shall be regarded as a reserve, to be specially considered in time of war. The pay and allowances of officers and enlisted men of the regiment shall be the same as authorized for like grades in the Regular Army.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to point out the object of these short terms for officers and for not reenlisting the men. It was because the pay of our Regular Army was supposed to be so much higher than the usual wages in Porto Rico that we believed we could educate both officers and men, especially the men, by taking them in for two years only and not allowing reenlistment, and thus educate a great part of the people of Porto Rico in the training of the Army and in general conditions of health and living, and that we would create a reserve of good men in Porto Rico for the purpose of peace and war. The continuance of the organization and of appointments and enlistment up to the present time and up to any time is regarded as assured by these provisions. There is no suggestion that the regiment should be disbanded. It governs only terms of office and enlistment. The term of the officers shall be four years and they can be reappointed, the term of the noncommissioned officers two years, and they can be reenlisted; and the term of the private soldiers is two years, and they can not be reenlisted.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that the statute referred to by the gentleman from Iowa, providing for the organization and maintenance of this provisional regiment, and the statute of 1901 referred to by the gentleman from Minnesota distinctly state that this regiment shall be continued in service until further ordered by Congress. The act of 1904, to which the gentleman from Virginia refers, has reference to certain officers, certain specific officers. Now, it would seem to the Chair, to maintain the position which the gentleman from Virginia takes, it would be necessary to hold that the regiment could be continued without officers. It seems to the Chair that that is not a reasonable construction. Therefore it seems to the Chair that the statute having distinctly provided that the regiment should be maintained until Congress otherwise provided, officers being of necessity a part of the regiment, that it must be maintained until Congress says otherwise. Therefore it seems to the Chair that the point of order made by the gentleman from Virginia is not well taken, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LOWDEN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate has passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4712. An act to provide for the care of persons adjudged insane in the district of Alaska.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 17227. An act to authorize the city of St. Joseph, Mich., to construct a bridge across the St. Joseph River at or near its mouth.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4064) to provide for a term of the United States circuit and district courts at Lander, Wyo.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERSTREET, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported the bill (H. R. 18347) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I reserve all points of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I wish it understood, on behalf of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] of our committee, that all points of order are reserved.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Delegate from Porto Rico may have ten minutes to address the committee on this Porto Rican regiment.

Mr. LARRINAGA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs for his kindness in asking that I should be allowed to speak on the Porto Rican regiment. I will avail myself of this opportunity to say a few words in connection with the political paper just read by the Clerk. I can assure the House that that article is a tissue of inaccuracies, to say the least. The gentleman spoken of as a member of the house of delegates is a good patriot, and he has the whole country behind him. I wish I had here that article, so that I might translate it word for word to this House, to show that every noble American would subscribe to it. I hope I may have an opportunity to take up this subject at some future time.

I will now take up the subject of the Porto Rican regiment. Mr. Chairman, the Porto Rican regiment is an institution of learning; it is a school of training for the Porto Rican people; it is a school of patriotism, and it has done a great deal of good. It has in some way helped to modify the sentiments raised by the injustice of this Congress in giving to Porto Rico that organic act popularly known as the "Foraker Act."

Mr. Chairman, the creation of the Porto Rican regiment has been about the only token of confidence and good will that the American Government has given to the island of Porto Rico, and I should consider the mustering out of that regiment a very unjust and unfair action on the part of Congress. The people of Porto Rico are proud of their regiment. They have a record as soldiers, and I am going to take the liberty of repeating here a part of what I said before the Committee on Military Affairs in regard to the past military history of the Porto Ricans. I do this, Mr. Chairman, because I have heard stated as one objection to the continuance of that regiment, that it is not an efficient unit of the Army, either for an offensive or a defensive purpose. I call your attention to these facts in order to show you that we, the Porto Rican people, have done our duty as citizens when called upon to shoulder a musket. The Porto Rican as a soldier has a good record. It was mainly the native militia that defended the country from foreign aggression in past times.

In 1625 the native militia cooperated with the regular troops in repelling the landing from twenty-four Dutch vessels under the command of Admiral Boudom Henry. In 1635 they took part in the expedition to the island of San Martin, West Indies.

In 1637 they routed the French, who had troops in Santa Cruz, West Indies. In 1647 they took an important part in repelling the attacks of the Dutch and French who were established in the small islands. This action caused the Spanish Government to admit the Porto Rican militia to the regular military service.

In 1664 the Porto Ricans outside of the city of San Juan organized themselves together for the defense of the country.

In 1681 all of the Porto Rican militia were called to arms to repel an attack by Admiral D'Entree. In 1690 the citizens of Porto Rico had again to organize in a military way to defend the country.

In 1702 Captain Correa, with only thirteen cavalrymen, repelled an attack of the Englishmen from two of their ships at Arecibo, swimming their horses out into the sea and lancing the enemy in their own boats. In the same year fifty militiamen repelled an attack of men landing from two ships from St. Thomas, at the town of Loiza.

In 1703 twenty militiamen defeated fifty Dutch in Guadiamilla, and Governor Rivas wrote to the King of Spain as follows:

> These Porto Ricans are not very numerous, but they are of such good quality and push that with them we fear no trouble.

Philip V granted military honors to the officers and men who participated in some of the engagements above mentioned.

In 1765 Governor O'Really organized nineteen companies of infantry from native Porto Ricans. In 1797 the Porto Rican militia repelled the attack of Admiral Abercromby, who with 60 ships and 6,000 men landed outside of San Juan and invested the city. After two weeks' hard fighting the Englishmen took to their ships, leaving behind them a great number of cannon, many of which were in the fort of San Juan until very recently.

In 1809 Lieutenant Power with a body of Porto Ricans went to the island of Santo Domingo to help the people of that country against the French after the battle of Palo Hincalo. During the nineteenth century the Porto Ricans fought in Santo Domingo, the Philippine Islands, and Africa.

In addition to authentic accounts of these facts which are to be found in the Spanish and Porto Rican archives, two living historians vouch for the truth of the facts, Mr. Salvador Brau and R. A. Van Middeldick, in their respective histories of Porto Rico. [Applause.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question or two?

Mr. LARRINAGA. Certainly; with great pleasure.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. How long have the people of Porto Rico had a regiment of soldiers?

Mr. LARRINAGA. The Porto Rican militia had existed from time immemorial.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is the Porto Rico regiment the only military organization that is now maintained in the island?

Mr. LARRINAGA. It is.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is not now any local militia that corresponds to our National Guard?

Mr. LARRINAGA. Not at all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. So this regiment is the only military organization in the island at this time?

Mr. LARRINAGA. The only one. About forty years ago, when the political struggle for self-government became very intense, Spain got a little suspicious of the seven Porto Rican militia regiments and mustered them out. From that time to the present we have not had any armed force there except the provisional regiment as it now exists.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say something else in connection with this matter, if I am allowed the time. Some one in Congress said once that he did not like the Porto Ricans because they were not fighters. That gentleman simply had not taken the trouble to read Porto Rican history. Of course if it is necessary that a man should fight every day in the back streets of the cities in order to be a fighter, the Porto Ricans are no fighters; but as for the fighting record of Porto Ricans, I have pointed you to some pages of their history. Mr. Chairman, God forbid that the United States should ever get in trouble with another nation; but if so unfortunate a thing ever happens, I invite the gentleman who expressed a doubt about the fighting qualities of Porto Ricans to come and share in the fighting by our side, and we will show him how to fight for the honor of the flag and the liberties of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, for me to insist upon the efficiency of the Porto Rican regiment would look too much like sounding our own praises. I am a peaceable man. I do not join the legions of Mars or those of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. I rather find myself attracted to the legions of the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], president of the American group of the lovers of peace that I joined some time ago, that learned gentleman who, single-handed and almost without any assistance, has brought honor upon the name of America at the peace conference in Europe. I will be always with him, praying to the Lord that this country may never have put the Porto Rican regiment to the test; but if that time ever does come, as I said before, the American people will have an example of how the Porto Ricans fight and, if it comes to the worst, how they fall for the liberties of the country and the honor of the flag. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that there is any motion pending. I ask the Clerk to proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

All the money hereinbefore appropriated, except the appropriation for mileage of officers and contract surgeons when authorized by law, for pay of the Army and miscellaneous shall be disbursed and accounted for by officers of the Pay Department as pay of the Army, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after line 14, on page 22 of the bill, the following:

"Encampments of organized militia with troops of the Regular Army: For paying the expenses of regiments, battalions, squadrons, and batteries of the organized militia of any State, Territory, or of the District of Columbia, which may be authorized by the Secretary of War to participate in such encampments as may be established for the field instruction of the troops of the Regular Army, as provided by sections 15 and 21 of the act of January 21, 1903, entitled 'An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes,' $1,000,000; and for paying the expenses of regular troops authorized by the Secretary of War to participate in such encampments, $500,000."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would like to ask the gentleman where he proposes to have this come in?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. It is a new paragraph to come in after line 14, page 22.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that this is the same provision that was made in the Army appropriation bill last year. The law under which this provision is made is a fixed law now in relation to the Army, and, as I say, this is the same provision or appropriation that was made in the bill for the support of the Army at the last session of Congress.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, while it may be true that this would go out on a point of order, I hope the gentleman will not insist on it, but that the appropriation may be made. It has been stated by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that the Regular Army in many instances is depleted, that the regiments have been so depleted that now there are but few men left in certain companies.

We have here an arm of the military branch of our Government that is not engaged in military affairs as a vocation, but is composed of young men located in the States, employed on the farms and in the workshops and the factory and various other employments; so that they are an adjunct to the Regular Army in time of war, and this provides the means for making them more efficient. I believe it is a good thing to encourage the militia and have appropriations made so that they may meet with the regular troops in the encampments held yearly. It was for this reason that I introduced the amendment. It was left out of the bill; also the appropriation of $500,000 to pay the expenses of the Regular Army in participating in the encampment of the militia.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Were both of these items in the bill last year?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I understand that they were.

Mr. MANN. But not in the same place in the bill?

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will pardon me, I think I can explain that. The gentleman from Iowa stated in his speech the other day that the appropriation for the regular establishment had been cut down about $500,000 on account of their not making any provision for the maneuvers this summer, and then he said that it was $1,000,000 less on account of there not being any maneuvers.

Mr. MANN. The item of $1,000,000 was in the bill of last year; but the other item was not in the bill, but was covered in the total appropriation. Is that what the gentleman means?

Mr. CRAIG. Yes; it was covered, but was not in the bill in the same way in which this amendment provides.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. It was not in the bill as a separate item.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the ground that there is no law authorizing these maneuvers which the amendment proposes to appropriate for during the fiscal year 1909. Now, if it is true that authority for the maneuvers and appropriations made was in the current appropriation law, that is not sufficient authority for appropriating for another year; in other words, it is not the substantive law authorizing these maneuvers, and for that reason I think the point of order must be sustained.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman this question: In accordance with sections 15 and 21 of the act for promoting the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes, is this appropriation made to carry out the provisions of this act which is provided for in those sections?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it seems, as far as the point of order is concerned, that the act of January 21, 1903, provides in section 15—and this is a permanent statute and has not been repealed, as I understand it—

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to provide for participation by any part of the organized militia of any State or Territory, on the request of the governor thereof, in the encampment, maneuvers, and field instruction of any part of the Regular Army at or near any military post or camp or lake or seacoast defenses of the United States. In such case the organized militia so participating shall receive the same pay, subsistence, and transportation as is provided by law for the officers and men of the Regular Army, to be paid out of the appropriation for the pay, subsistence, and transportation of the Army, etc.

Section 21 provides for the furnishing of ammunition and for instruction in firing—target practice.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. That law has not been repealed.

Mr. MANN. That is what I say.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this provision is subject to a point of order, but even if it were I do not think it ought to be made. The law clearly, as set forth in the Dick bill, provides that the Secretary of War shall provide for these maneuvers. For what purpose? For the purpose of educating the National Guard up to a point where they can become an aid to the Regular Army, and make a first line of defense in case of emergency. They are brought together with the Regular Army, and any man who has ever had anything to do with the militia knows that you can teach the militia more in one week in connection with regulars than you can in a year without them. Why? Because they are officered by men who know their business. They are drilled daily, they are made to go at it as a business, and they are not allowed to shirk anything. Some one may say, well, that may be all right, but the National Guard does not come up to the mark of the regular soldier. I say they do come up to the mark of the regular as far as their opportunities permit. I say the National Guard wants to come up to the mark of the regular soldier just as far as possible. In substantiation of that statement I want to call attention to the report of the Secretary of War of last year's maneuvers. Last year's maneuvers were held on the seacoast. The National Guard were sent to these seacoast fortifications and drilled with the regular soldiers. A national guardsman, as a rule, knows absolutely nothing about seacoast fortifications. They went there and worked night and day for ten days, and I will tell you that they are more proficient now than they would have been by studying their books at home and drilling on the streets and campuses for a month. The Secretary of War says, in speaking of these maneuvers:

ARMY AND MILITIA SEACOAST MANEUVERS.

It was the intention of the War Department to continue the same practical method of instructing regular troops and organized militia in summer encampments that had proved so beneficial last year, to and from which camps the troops marched equipped and outfitted as for war; but the absence of troops in Cuba and at the Jamestown Exposition, and the necessary preparation for sending a large part of the mobile army in the United States to the Philippines, to relieve organizations stationed there, left too few troops available for the proposed mobilization. It was possible, however, to detail suitable officers and small bodies of regular troops, to cooperate with and assist the organized militia with their regular encampments, and accordingly this was done whenever requested by the State authorities.

There was no combined encampment of all arms of the service with the militia this year, but joint Army and militia coast defense exercises were held by the Coast Artillery, which were participated in by militia organizations from the seaboard States, as follows:

MILITIA ORGANIZATIONS PARTICIPATING IN EXERCISES.

Maine National Guard (twenty-four companies).
Massachusetts National Guard (twenty-four companies).
Rhode Island National Guard (thirteen companies).
Connecticut National Guard (seventeen companies).
New York National Guard (thirty-one companies).
New Jersey National Guard (twelve companies).
Maryland National Guard (eleven companies).
District of Columbia National Guard (twelve companies).
South Carolina National Guard (ten companies).
Alabama National Guard (four companies).
Georgia National Guard (eight companies).
Florida National Guard (twenty-one companies).
California National Guard (thirty-six companies).
Oregon National Guard (seven companies).
Washington National Guard (eleven companies).

All of the coast States except Delaware, Virginia, and North Carolina, which had made arrangements for their troops to go to the Jamestown Exposition, responded favorably to the invitation of the Department to participate in these joint exercises. Texas wished to participate, but owing to the fact that the defenses of Galveston have not yet been rehabilitated since the storm of 1900 no coast-defense exercises could be held at Galveston, and it was too far to transport the Texas troops to San Diego, Cal., on the west, or Pensacola, Fla., on the east, the nearest places at which exercises were to be held.

The chief of artillery speaks of the excellent spirit, zeal and desire to learn coast artillery gun work exhibited by the militia in these maneuvers, and regards the exercises as successful beyond his most sanguine expectations. Both regular and militia officers and men report that the exercises were in a very high degree interesting and instructive.

One of the main objects of these joint exercises was to encourage and foster the creation of a militia coast artillery force. The present number of the regular Coast Artillery is about sufficient to provide a complete manning body for one-half of the guns in our seacoast fortifications, or they can be so disposed as to provide one-half of a manning body for all of the guns. It was the idea of General Murray to make this latter disposition and to use the militia to provide the remaining half of the manning body necessary to operate all the guns, and also to use the militia as so-called "artillery supports," which are required to protect the land approaches of the batteries against attacks in the rear by small landing parties from the ships that are in action against the batteries.

The plan for the exercises provided that each regular coast artillery company should be linked for drill and instruction purposes with a militia company acting as coast artillery, and that the officers and men of these two linked companies should affiliate as closely as possible in all matters pertaining to their duties, each officer and each man of the regular company acting as the coach and tutor of the corresponding officer and man of the linked militia company, it being the theory that by this policy instruction would be most expeditiously given and good fellowship promoted between the regulars and the militia. From personal visits to artillery districts during the period of the exercises and from personal correspondence and reports in the daily press, the Chief of Artillery is led to believe that—

"There is good ground to hope that from the initiative and impetus of these joint army and militia coast-defense exercises there may in the course of time develop an adequate and efficient coast artillery reserve among the militia to reenforce the regular Coast Artillery in time of war, and an equally adequate and efficient body of coast artillery supports to defend the coast batteries against land attacks from the rear."

Even if we do not have the maneuvers like we did at Manassas year before last, let us send these men to these different posts. It is true the American people would have no trouble in raising an army if a war were imminent. Why, the American people would spring to arms in case of an emergency. But what is the use of a man springing to arms if he does not know which is the business end of a gun? Why not take these men and train them? Ah, but you say, it is a very small number trained each year. Yes; only a few were trained last year; but, as was said by Schonhorst in Prussia, "If you will let me have 40,000 men enlisted and let me change that 40,000 every year, in five years I will have 200,000 men trained for battle." Why can we not do the same thing with our National Guard? Why take away this appropriation when the boys are enthusiastic and want to do this work? I have been in the National Guard myself, and I know what it means. These boys work all day at their different businesses and at night go and shoulder their muskets and drill for two or three hours on the streets. They get absolutely nothing for it; and in the summer they want to go to the encampments. For what? Some say for pleasure, but I say when the national guardsman goes to an encampment with the regular soldiers he does not get much pleasure. He does not get anything but work, as was exemplified by one of the troops who went last summer. When they came back one of the boys said: "Tom, did you have a good time?" He replied: "Oh, well, they call it a good time. I haven't had my shoes or my clothes off for ten days, because every time I laid down, even at nighttime, a bugle would blow or a gun would shoot, and somebody would say, 'You'd better hurry.'"

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRAIG. I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe this is subject to a point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, in order to save the time of the House, I will state that I have examined the statute and it is my opinion that the amendment is not subject to the point of order, and I withdraw it.

Mr. CRAIG. Very well; I have nothing further to say as to the point of order.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this amendment provides for the appropriation of $1,000,000 for encampments of the National Guard with regulars, and for their instruction by the regulars in maneuvers that will really do them an inestimable amount of good.

I am not one of those who believe that war is likely to come upon us in anything like the near future, and it is not my purpose to advise that a large, regular, standing army be maintained by the United States. The small army that we have is costing us some eighty-odd million dollars each year. It is a very small army compared with the immense armaments of Europe, but for its size it is one of the most expensive organizations of its kind in the world. Of course, I know the reason it is expensive is because it is not possible to get Americans to enlist at anything like the amount paid to the soldiers of Germany, Russia, or Japan. Neither do we have or wish to have the law that these countries have, compelling their young men to serve in the Army. The opportunities of money making and of securing large salaries by competent young men in this country are so attractive that the Army, with its small pay and many arduous and unpleasant duties, offers very little inducement; and for that very reason we have found it necessary to-day to increase the pay of the enlisted man in order to keep him in the Army.

It is evident to the most unobserving that our Regular Army of from 50,000 to 75,000 men would be practically powerless to cope with a foreign force of 500,000 veteran soldiers, if they should once be so fortunate as to get by our Navy and make a landing on our shores. I say 500,000 because there are many of the great powers that can mobilize such a force on short notice. Neither has it ever been contended that our Army could cope with such a force, nor were they expected when organized to be able to do so; but it has always been contended and it has always been the policy of the Government to rely, ultimately, upon the support which our National Guard could give to the Regular Army, in case of an emergency, to constitute a first line of defense, while an army of American volunteers which ultimately, in time of war, becomes the Regular Army, was being enrolled, equipped, and mobilized for active service.

At present the National Guard comprise from 110,000 to 120,000 men. They are, in the main, young men, full of vigor and patriotism, and enlisted to go anywhere in the United States for the purpose of preventing an invasion. I do not believe there is a man in this House who would question for a moment their bravery or patriotism. We know that they are ready at all times for a call to arms, and that they would willingly throw themselves between this country and any threatening danger.

I yield to no man in my admiration for the regular soldier in our Army, and I state without the slightest fear of contradiction, that man for man, they are far and away the best fighting material in the world, and nothing I say here to-day is intended in any manner to reflect upon them in the slightest degree. But they know, and you know, that they are intended to be a nucleus around which and through which the real American Army, the Volunteer Army, is to be formed. The Regular Army looks first to the National Guard to fill out its depleted ranks and help them to officer and discipline the volunteers and shape them into soldiers. There is no one who realizes the need of an organized militia more thoroughly than does the officer and enlisted man of the Regular Army.

The Constitution of the United States recognizes the necessity for a well-organized militia when it says, "The Congress shall have power to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia." Thomas Jefferson recognized their great value when he said, in his first inaugural address, that he deemed one of the essential principles of our Government to be "a well-disciplined militia—our best reliance in peace, and for the first moments of war."

The Democratic party, which has always stood for that which is best and wisest in the policies of our Government, and which has always recognized the fact that the best and surest way of keeping the Government from having to maintain a large and burdensome regular standing army, was to have an efficient and well-organized militia, composed of the citizens of the country who are engaged in the peaceful walks of life, but are patriotic enough to give a portion of their time to being instructed and disciplined in military matters, says in its platform of 1900:

> In time of danger the volunteer soldier is his country's best defender. The National Guard of the United States should ever be cherished in the patriotic hearts of a free people. Such organizations are ever an element of strength and safety.

If, then, we believe, and I do not believe there is a man here who differs with me, that the National Guard, when well organized, is our greatest bulwark in case of a sudden crisis, then, in the name of all that is reasonable, let us have a National Guard that knows something about fighting, and, better still, knows enough to teach the raw volunteer recruits how to use themselves, take care of themselves, and do the most possible damage to the enemy.

How can this be accomplished? It can best be accomplished by putting them under teachers who know the business and who can impart their knowledge to them. These teachers we have now in the Regular Army. Let the National Guard and the regulars be brought together once in every year for exercises and maneuvers in every branch of the service. Let them have their practice marches, so that they will become hardened; let them have their field maneuvers, in large bodies, so that the officers can learn what it is to handle brigades and divisions as well as companies and regiments. Let them be instructed in the use and operation of coast-defense guns, building pontoon bridges, and all the other things which now are things in name only to the militia. Let the commissary officer get some real experience in feeding vast armies of men, so that we will never have a repetition of the gross errors and inefficiency exhibited by that branch of our service in our brief war with Spain.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that it is unjust and unreasonable for this great country to expect the men who compose our militia to be rushed into the trenches in case of war, which I pray may never come, without giving them a chance now to learn something of the real nature of the things which they will undoubtedly encounter and which they will be expected by the nation to overcome.

We are told in earnest and pathetic terms by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] that we are spending too much money, and that if we do not stop we will soon be spending $6,000,000 per year upon the National Guard, and that we are now facing a large deficit. And yet he did not vote against the appropriation of the millions voted to-day for the increase in pay of the regular soldiers. This amendment asks for nothing more than has been appropriated for several years for the same purpose, that of maneuvers of the National Guard in connection with the regulars, and which is highly praised by the War Department as being money well spent and bringing in a good return in instruction of the most valuable kind. We are asked in this bill to appropriate approximately $80,000,000 for the support of the regular establishment of some 50,000 to 70,000 men; but when the Congress is asked to supply only $1,000,000 for the purpose of giving the 110,000 National Guardsmen an opportunity of getting in contact with these same regulars, and thereby acquiring some of the knowledge which they are anxious to obtain and which the regular is equally anxious to impart to them, we are met with the assertion that we want to create a large standing army, and that we are spending too much money.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that that proposition is an erroneous one. It is no purpose of ours to create a large standing army; but it is our purpose to create a well-organized militia and thereby obviate the necessity of an expensive and burdensome standing army. The position of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] as to our deplorable financial condition is not borne out by the statement so recently made to us by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL], his party associate, when he exultantly informed us on yesterday or the day before that the gold alone in the United States Treasury had reached the almost unthinkable amount of one thousand million dollars. Are we asking too much of the country when we ask this Congress to give one-thousandth part of that ready money to be used in instructing this patriotic aggregation of young Americans in the art of the defense of their country, for which instruction they are most earnestly clamoring?

I sincerely believe that if this Government would consistently help the National Guard and endeavor, by bringing them into contact with regulars, to make them efficient, we would soon have a reliable and effective force of 125,000 men who could be mobilized for active service upon a day's notice, and who could be maintained at one-tenth the cost of the Regular Army of 50,000 men.

Now, it is insisted that more good can be done the National Guard by sending the regulars to encamp with them, and instruct them in their State encampment, than can be done by mobilizing them all together in large bodies, and that it will be great economy to do so. In reply to that we ask you if you expect to train men in the use of heavy seacoast artillery by carrying such artillery to State encampments? Do you expect to send enough regulars to each State encampment to link every company of the National Guard with a company of regulars? If you expect to do either, then you will spend equally as much money, and we believe far more, than would be required to take the guardsmen to the seacoast fortifications and the general field maneuvers. You are bound to admit, and the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has already admitted, that you can not train men in seacoast defense gun work without taking the men to the seacoast, where the guns are planted. You are forced to admit further that in case of war the seacoast defenses would immediately become the most important part of our armament, for without them the Navy would have no proper base, and our great coast cities and our thousands of miles of coast would be exposed to the enemy and be his for the taking. You know further that we have but one-half enough men in those fortifications to man the guns, thus leaving one-half of our seacoast totally undefended. Which half will it be? You know further that the Secretary of War and Chief of Artillery say that with such maneuvers as were had by the National Guard in this seacoast defense work last summer they could in a short time train enough of the militia to man the idle half of those guns.

And yet the Republican leaders in this House quibble over this appropriation and are willing that those guns be left mere useless piles of iron and steel, while the men in the citizen soldiery, who are anxious to learn how to handle those guns and make them a real defense to the country, must be idle and untaught, because it suits the purposes of the leaders of the majority in Congress not to supply the means required for the purpose.

Of course infantry and cavalry can be instructed in a way by regulars in State encampments; but I venture the assertion here and now that there will not be ten regulars detailed to each regiment of National Guard at their next encampment.

The argument of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] that they will be sent is of no avail, because it is based on nothing. Experience of past years has shown that regulars never have been sent to such encampments in large enough numbers to do the guard as a whole much good, and I call the attention of the House to the fact that there is nothing in the bill that requires them to be sent; nor is there anything therein that would lead one to believe that they will be sent. That idea seems to be in the minds of the committee more than in the bill.

We are therefore forced to the conclusion that the general maneuvers are undoubtedly the best way in which to give rapid and thorough instruction to the militia in matters in which they can not hope to become effectively proficient without expert aid; and I call upon the House to pass this amendment, and thereby recognize, in a measure at least, the unselfish patriotism of the National Guard, who serve the Government gallantly without pay or hope of reward, save that reward which comes to a good citizen in the consciousness of having done his duty to his country and his flag. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of my friend who has just addressed the committee to one fact that, it seems to me, he has overlooked. The Department in asking for the maneuvers this year did not include the Coast Artillery. This year was for five or seven grand camps of maneuvers in the interior of the country. My own judgment is that you can not give too much training for the next few years to the reserve militia on the coast defenses. The Committee on Military Affairs is not proposing to put itself in opposition to the general principle of maneuvers. That was not the object of the committee in striking it out. We are confronted this year with this proposition of an immense increase in the expenditure for the military establishment. The only question before us was, Where could any economy be practiced without any injury to the Government or to the service? If this was discrimination against the militia or the National Guard, I should be in favor of it, no matter what its expense might be; but I want to say to this committee that when you come to the encampments of the National Guard, if they will take the Regular Army to the States, a representative of the infantry, the cavalry, the artillery, and the Signal Corps, you could instruct the entire National Guard of the States, all of them, at a very small expense. You would do the guard proper much more good in the way of practical education than by so-called "grand maneuvers." That can all be done under the provisions of the bill as reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

When you congregate, as is proposed by this amendment, the Regular Army in large camps with only one regiment from each State to participate, you only instruct one regiment of the National Guard. Now, this year we are going——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield for a question on that point?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It is permissible, however, under the State law, as I understand it, where that practice is followed, that in sending one regiment of the National Guard you have that regiment composed of companies or battalions from several regiments.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; I do not understand that at all.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. There is nothing in the law forbidding that.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. But it has not been the practice in my State. There are four regiments there, and they designate one regiment to go, and that goes, as I understand, as one organization. And another time another regiment is designated, and that goes. I imagine the proposition for making up a regiment from several distinct organizations is something the Government would not inquire into, and so each State could do as it pleased as to that.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It permits one regiment, but it does not designate which regiment, but leaves——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That to the governor of the State.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. And to the adjutant-general of the State to say whether that regiment shall be taken bodily from the guard or whether the regiment shall be composed of different companies and battalions.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is not my understanding of the practice in my State. If the gentleman's State makes up a guard in that way, that is another proposition and is, of course, satisfactory to the officers of the State.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I understand it is the practice in a number of States.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have no information on that subject.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That would meet the objection of the gentleman.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not at all, because it would only be a small fraction of the guard that would be instructed. Now, we have, as I say, a prospectively large increase in the regulars this year. In my judgment, if the provision adopted by the committee to-day will become a law, it will increase enlistments enormously in the next six months. There will probably be 20,000 to 25,000 raw recruits in the Regular Army. Where is the best place for them to be instructed? In grand maneuvers? No. First in the company and then in the regiment. The best instruction comes from that. The National Guard, in their encampments as we have them in Iowa, where the militia and the National Guard have their encampment, put in the full time provided by law, and they are assisted by Regular Army officers—cavalry, infantry, artillery, and Signal Corps. They go through the maneuvers as a whole commanded by their officers, under the supervision of the regulars, and every one of the guardsmen has the greatest benefit from it. I believe that the instruction that comes from that——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I believe that this year the time may be properly occupied in that way. We made the appropriation for the Regular Army sufficiently large and you need no authority of law to do it. The President, as Commander in Chief, can shift them from one place to another, and the appropriation is sufficiently large to pay for the transportation of the regulars while attending State encampments, and then I believe after you have gone through with this method of maneuvers, sometimes, not every year, but at stated periods of time, we should have grand maneuvers where our generals can have just a little exercise in larger command, although we have done pretty well for one hundred and twenty-five years without that, but I believe that it is a good thing. But in my judgment the great demand that has come upon this House at this time is because the Department has insisted to the different adjutant-generals to write and telegraph every Member of Congress urging him to override the committee in trying to save a million and a half dollars and insist upon grand maneuvers this year. I will say to my friend, who recently addressed the House, that if it was a proposition to instruct the reserve Coast Artillery I would be in favor of it; but if this appropriation is made and the plans of the adjutant-generals of the different States and the Department are carried out, it will not be expended for the Coast Artillery.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit a question at that point?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to say to him that I have had no communication from the adjutant-general or from anyone connected with the National Guard of the State of Texas in support of this proposition. I know that they would favor it, but none of them have taken the trouble to communicate with me about it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I thank you. I have had a good many communications, but my judgment is, Mr. Chairman, that this year of enormous increases with decreasing revenues is a good time for every Member of this House to try to save $2,000,000 where it is possible to save it and not injure the administration of affairs connected with our military establishment.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I am not familiar with the bill myself which has been reported in from the Committee on the Militia, which makes a good many changes in reference to the militia, but would that in any way have anything to do with this proposition?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. That increases the expense. It proposes, as I understand, very largely the amount contributed by the Government to the militia?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have not seen the bill as reported. I saw the bill as introduced. It was agreed upon at Boston by a convention of national guardsmen and officers of the Regular Army from the Departments here, and it proposed that the Government should aid the militia or the National Guard by furnishing the entire equipment—clothes, subsistence, and all equipments of the guards—as we now furnish them their arms and ammunition. It proposes to make a permanent and indeterminate appropriation. My recollection is it proposes also to practically create a new bureau in the War Department composed of certain officers of the National Guard, who, in connection with the officers of the Regular Army or staff and Assistant Secretary of War, who has charge of the militia, should determine what is necessary for the benefit of the guard, and that then there should be appropriated in this permanent, indeterminate appropriation whatever amount should be decided on. I spoke to the chairman of the Committee on Militia, of which I am a member, and I told him I could not meet with him, but that I was opposed to any appropriation that did not limit the amount; that I did not believe this Government ought to put upon its statute books a law of this character, that would turn the entire Treasury over to any men, no matter how patriotic and loyal and economical they might be. His reply was that it was estimated to cost less than $800,000. Then I said: "Put in a million more for the militia, and I doubt if there will be opposition to it."

But in talking with a leading member of the National Guard who is looking after this matter here he said: "We must have at least $2,000,000 for the first year," and would not state how much they might need hereafter. That would be $4,000,000 for next year. That question is not before us. However, we are going to be called upon to add at least $2,000,000 to the annual permanent appropriation for the militia.

Mr. MANN. That is the reason I called attention to it. That bill has been reported and is on the Calendar. Another bill has also been reported from the same committee, reorganizing the District militia and very largely increasing the expense of that, and I thought it might be well to take those bills into consideration in connection with this proposition for greatly increased expenses.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think that is a pertinent thing for us to consider. But, Mr. Chairman, to sum up: To my mind the great maneuvers at five or seven great camps of concentration, reaching through all the interior of the country where only a small fraction of the National Guard can be brought together with the regulars, can go over this year without any injury whatever, and we can have our State camps, and the regulars can participate in them and give instructions to all the militia, and then when we come to the time that we can afford it we can have our grand camps of maneuvers, not for the instruction of the enlisted men of either the militia or Regular Army, but for the instruction of the general officers; and that is what your grand maneuvers are for.

I served in the Army once and I know something about it. I happened to occupy a subordinate position, and the only instruction I got was just as far as I could see from day to day in my marches or in the battles. The generals, of course, who could look over the whole field, would get some benefit from this. The private soldier gets work, but he can get that work in his State encampment just as well.

And I want to call your attention to another thing, namely, that in these grand encampments, where men go several hundred miles, they lose at least three days out of their time going to and returning from the encampment. That is lost time. When they meet in their State they lose none of that time. We have made it possible, as I said a while ago, for the regulars to go to every State and participate in every State encampment. Take your guards, where you have four regiments, or six regiments, or ten regiments, or two regiments, even, and give them the thorough instruction that comes from the close association with the Regular Army, it is to my mind much more efficient than your grand maneuvers can ever be.

Mr. HACKNEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question right there. He says that it has been made possible in this bill. Is it mandatory to have these soldiers go the round of State encampments?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not at all. But I have no question but it will be done, because the Department has shown the greatest disposition to cooperate with the States, and last year I took special interest to have my State, at least——

Mr. WILLIAMS. It will be done where the governor of a State requests it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Without doubt.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You do not make it mandatory.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No.

Mr. HACKNEY. One other question. I wanted to know what is the proportion of the expense of transporting troops to the point of maneuver in the line of time, etc. How much is there given for that?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They used a million dollars for the State troops two years ago; last year they used it for the coast defense by assembling the reserves for coast defense.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois by striking out that portion providing for $500,000 for the regular troops. The appropriation carried in the bill for transportation of the Army, supplies, etc., covers that anyway. I therefore move to amend the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of the amendment the following words: "and for expense of regular troops authorized by the Secretary of War to participate in such encampments, $500,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. O'CONNELL. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs what assurance we have that this appropriation will be put in the bill next year? I understand the present proposition is one of economy, and in the event of Congress having a fever of economy next year and the following years, what assurance can you give the militia of those States that they are going to participate in any national encampment?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I can not give any assurance of anything that any Congress will do. I only want to say, and to repeat here what I said largely in my opening remarks, that I am strongly in favor of every movement that will bring the National Guard and the Regular Army into the closest association and assimilation. I am strongly in favor of encampments on account of the benefit that it will be to both bodies. But this year it seemed to me, with the large number of raw recruits that we hope to have in the Regular Army, with the fact that only a small number of the militia could participate in the maneuvers, it would be better for this year to have the Regular Army go to the State encampments, where all the militias of the State could participate in the maneuvers. Let them all have the benefit now, and when the Regular Army goes into the grand maneuvers the governor of each State should be requested to send the best regiment he has, or even two regiments, as a prize for efficiency—the regiment which has reached the highest efficiency—and let it go to the grand maneuvers to participate in those larger operations that come from a larger field to operate in as a reward of merit.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. How often are those grand maneuvers to occur?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. In my judgment they ought to be held once in every three years. That is what they have in Germany and the other great countries; but that would, of course, be only a question of my own opinion. I can not bind Congress.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I wish to ask the gentleman a question for information. You spoke of sending the regular troops into the States as instructors at the National Guard encampments to be held in the States. Does this provision in the bill authorize or contemplate sending a member of the Medical Corps into the State encampments with the regular troops?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They would send any branch of the Army—line or staff—the governor wanted.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The reason I asked that is that it is one of the most important branches of the service, and it is a branch of the National Guard service which is the most sadly in need of instruction. In my own State I think that branch has been the particular pride of the National Guard, and it is due to the fact that the officer of that State who had the direction and control of that branch had associated with the regular soldiers in the United States Army, and had there obtained instruction that proved of inestimable value to the National Guard. Now, does the gentleman think his provision is broad enough to include that?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is. The gentleman remembers that the President of the United States can order the Regular Army or any man in the Regular Army any place he pleases in the United States or for any legitimate duty. Under the provision of the Constitution making him Commander in Chief, he can order any detachment of troops or staff corps to any State in the Union to participate in these maneuvers; and wherever it is proposed to use the Regular Army under the appropriations that we make, they can use a part of this fund for the purpose of attending the maneuvers or to any extent it may be required for that.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Now, if the National Guard goes into an encampment with the regular soldiers with a regiment it is perfectly evident that a medical officer should be sent, and it is the practice in several of the States where they send several regiments to send also several medical officers, so that they may get experience, and that is very valuable.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think it is very valuable.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. If the encampments are to be held in the States it might be that they should have two years in which to get the benefit of any positive information for the formation of a medical corps.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think they would get every branch of the service that your own people would like to have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. AMES] has expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended. I have no desire to cut off the time.

Mr. O'CONNELL. I call attention to the fact that it took me about a half a minute to ask my question, and the gentleman has used five minutes in answering it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will ask for all the time the gentleman needs. I do not want to cut anyone off.

Mr. AMES. Unless this amendment goes through, what provision is there in the bill for the heavy artillery in these joint maneuvers, that as I understand are their only course of instruction?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have tried to state to the gentleman that if the information given to the Committee on Military Affairs is correct, it was not intended that this million of dollars should apply to the Coast Artillery, because it was intended to apply to seven camps of concentration outside of the coast defenses, and when we had these maneuvers before, with only two camps, they spent a million dollars, and I have no doubt they will spend the full million on the other camps, without that. As I understand it, they claim that the reasons why the Coast Artillery were not provided for this year was because last year the money which was appropriated was applied to the Coast Artillery; but I regard it of such importance that the Coast Artillery should be included that although I do not think as much as a million dollars is needed I would be glad to give whatever is absolutely necessary for instruction of coast artillery militia. Of course, gentlemen understand that they can not send the regular establishment to the Coast Artillery, as the coast defense batteries are stationary, but you must bring the coast artillery militia to the regulars, because the guns of the Regular Army fortifications are not movable, and you have got to take the coast artillery militia where the guns are to give them full instruction. In the other branches of the service you can take the Regular Army where the militia are located, but in reference to the Coast Artillery a different plan must be pursued.

Mr. CRAIG. Is there any provision in your bill by which the Coast Artillery can go where the guns are?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. None whatever, if you mean coast artillery militia.

Mr. CRAIG. Is it not a fact that last year they spent something like $700,000 and received a great deal of benefit?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think the Coast Artillery militia received great benefit, and I think we ought to continue to educate that great reserve to man our guns for the reason that we can not pick up the men and put them in the intrenchments to handle these great modern guns, operated by electricity, aimed by means of range finders and mathematical calculations. You must have them educated, and if you will propose an amendment here confining these maneuvers to the Coast Artillery and appropriating what I should imagine would be ample—half a million of dollars for that only—I will not oppose the amendment.

Mr. CRAIG. Is there anything in this amendment to permit it to be expended in that way?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; not in this amendment, if plans submitted to our committee are carried out.

Mr. CRAIG. Is it not a fact that the Secretary of War, in his report, says that the maneuvers last year, in which the regulars were carried to the Coast Artillery, were not as beneficial as the maneuvers which were had the year before?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. CRAIG. You stated in your remarks the other day that there had been $500,000 left off the appropriation for the regular establishment and $1,000,000 for the militia. Now, if the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia to strike out the appropriation in this amendment goes through, would it be possible to carry on any of these maneuvers, there being no appropriation for that purpose?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; they would probably carry them on, and come back for a deficiency; and I want to call the gentleman's attention to the wisdom of the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, because if the amendment carries in its present form, the Regular Army would be limited absolutely in any expenditures for maneuvers to the amount in this amendment.

Mr. CRAIG. What I want to get at is whether we can get the maneuvers at all without the $500,000, in view of the gentleman from Iowa having stated that it was cut off because we were not going to have maneuvers.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; that was an item of expense that we thought we could dispense with. But I have noticed that where the law provides that a thing shall be done they go on and create the expenditure and then bring in a deficiency before the close of the fiscal year, and it is entirely proper to do so. When the law requires a certain thing to be done it carries with it an obligation on Congress to provide the necessary funds.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, I will confess that I am decidedly at a loss to understand the economy of any proposition such as that advanced by the gentlemen opposed to this amendment, in which they attempt to explain their opposition to this appropriation of only $1,000,000, when at the same moment they quickly appropriate $85,000,000 for the maintenance of the Army, which sum added to the initial permanent cost for the equipment, armament, weapons, buildings, forts, lands, recruiting, and education of our Army must make an enormous sum already spent on the Army. I do not know that anybody could tell us what the total cost of the Army is up to date, but you are now proposing to add $85,000,000 to it, and then you come forward with a proposition to economize by striking out a million dollars which would help to make the troops more efficient. Where is there any sense in spending such a tremendous sum of money on a department that will be utterly useless unless the men are suitably drilled and educated to carry out the principles and purposes of the Army of which they are the most essential part? I am free to confess that I do not see any force in the policy of the Committee on Appropriations in cutting off the appropriations for joint maneuvers, because if the Government desires to make the National Guard the reserve of the Regular Army, this appropriation should be made, and then Massachusetts would be willing to send a whole brigade to White Plains this summer. It seems to me that this is cutting off something that should not be cut off.

It seems to me that it is a proposition that is unfair to the militiamen of our country and to those States that have spent so many millions on their militia and which take a just pride in the splendid qualifications now attained. Massachusetts is desirous of helping her troops to properly practice the real science of war in order to keep their efficiency at the highest possible point. We have taken great pride in our militia, and Massachusetts wants her citizen soldiers to be the best in the country, and she expects and demands some encouragement from the War Department to build them up by the attraction of the national annual encampment. The militia of Massachusetts, including officers and men, from Governor Guild down, are deeply interested in this bill and desire the militia to have a chance to practice in the annual maneuvers with the regular troops at White Plains this summer, and I trust the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will be adopted.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNELL. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will this failure to appropriate this money interfere in any way with the annual encampment in the State of Massachusetts?

Mr. O'CONNELL. I understand that it will.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, no.

Mr. CAPRON. No; it will not.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think it will not interfere with your encampment at all. It will affect the maneuvers in this way—the only thing the appropriation in this amendment will accomplish will be to enable some regiment in your State to go into a neighboring State and participate in the grand maneuvers with the regiments of the several States and the regular troops.

Mr. O'CONNELL. That is the feature that I had in my mind.

Mr. TAWNEY. It does not interfere with your annual encampment.

Mr. O'CONNELL. It will interfere with such encampments as took place at Manassas, and which this year I understand is to take place at White Plains. The staff departments of our militia, and in fact of the Regular Army, need plenty of practice in transporting and rationing large forces, and giving the troops some actual experience. This would make the service attractive and would stimulate recruiting.

Mr. TAWNEY. Only with the general encampment of Federal troops, where the militia of the several States and the regiments of several States have assembled for the purpose of maneuvers with the regular troops.

Mr. O'CONNELL. I protest in the name of Massachusetts against being obliged to omit such important military education from the schooling of our militia. I believe that the general annual emcampment promotes their efficiency, and I know that the Regular Army can be made more efficient by the efficiency of the Volunteer Army when called upon to assist them in a time of war. An army that can maneuver properly and scientifically is a better weapon for warfare than anything I know of. We do not believe that they can be made efficient unless you give them this general practice, such as is indulged in when the militia of our State comes into actual contact with the Federal troops in a general encampment. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that instead of a measure of economy this is more a measure to the detriment of the Army, which in the long run will be far more expensive to the country, and one which we may deeply regret. I do not believe in economy of this kind, and I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] will prevail.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. O'CONNELL. Certainly.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Can the gentleman show this committee where any real, tangible good has come from the maneuvers to his State by reason of participation of the militia in the national maneuvers? In what respect have the troops become more efficient by participating in these maneuvers?

Mr. O'CONNELL. I believe our militia have improved by their acquaintance and familiarity with the conduct of the Federal troops when in action under the orders of highly equipped officers trained for such purposes in West Point and with the actual knowledge that they derived from maneuvers with the Regular Army. I believe this practice is much better than mere theory or dress parades or encampments of a small number of troops. I will refer the gentleman back to the axiom of life, that "practice makes perfect."

Mr. TAWNEY. How many maneuvers has the militia of the State of Massachusetts participated in as is proposed in this amendment?

Mr. O'CONNELL. I can not tell.

Mr. TAWNEY. Just one.

Mr. CRAIG. The State of Massachusetts sent twenty-four companies last year to the coast artillery exercises.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say just a word in corroboration of my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. O'CONNELL]. There is deep interest taken in that Commonwealth on this subject. No State in the Union has cooperated more earnestly and thoroughly with the militia law, known as the "Dick bill," than my own State. The results have been so satisfactory that the adjutant-general of Massachusetts, who has been familiar with military affairs and an active man in our own State for many years, came on to Washington a week or ten days ago for the purpose of laying before the Representatives in Congress from that State the reasons for the interest taken by Massachusetts in these maneuvers.

Mr. MANN. Hence these tears!

Mr. TIRRELL. The question has been asked what benefit has resulted therefrom. I wish to say, in addition to what my colleague has stated, that the benefit has been, first, that the companies in Massachusetts have been kept recruited up to their full limit by a more general interest taken in militia affairs; second, the proficiency in the service in Massachusetts has been largely increased, and, third, greater respect has been shown to the militia law and all that appertains thereto. I don't know as I can add anything further. It is admitted here by the chairman of the committee who is in charge of this bill that the benefits flowing from these grand maneuvers have been great, and that economy is why the appropriation has not been continued this year. That may be a reason. To me it seems to be the only reason that can be assigned under the existing condition of the country why the appropriation should not be voted.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I trust this amendment will not prevail. I think the Committee on Military Affairs in providing as they have for participation by the Federal troops with the State militia in their annual State encampments, will prove more beneficial from the standpoint of experience and instruction than the policy heretofore followed of having one regiment attend one of these grand maneuvers. I want to call to the attention of the committee the very rapid growth of Federal appropriations for the benefit of the State militia since the passage of the Dick bill only a few years ago. We were then appropriating about $400,000 for this purpose. Then came the permanent annual appropriation of $1,000,000. Then in the last Congress another or additional permanent annual appropriation of $1,000,000, making the permanent annual appropriation for the organized national militia two million. These two appropriations aggregating $2,000,000 are permanent annual appropriations, and will continue indefinitely. The National Guard of the several States receive the benefit of that $2,000,000 every year. By this amendment it is proposed to add another two million for the benefit of the National Guard, and a bill has been reported from the Committee on the Militia for a permanent indeterminate annual appropriation of at least $2,000,000 more.

So that we will appropriate annually for the National Guard, if this amendment is adopted and the bill now pending in this House is passed, from the Federal Treasury, at least $6,000,000, instead of $400,000 less than four years ago.

This enormous increase in so short a time should arrest the attention of this House and the country, and shows how rapidly we are drifting toward militarism. We have to-day, as a result of the passage of the Dick bill, for all practical purposes, an authorized standing army of about 200,000 men, all fully equipped and organized for active service. We have heretofore maintained militia or National Guard organizations, but these organizations were maintained largely for the benefit and protection of the State and its interests, and this organization was then maintained at the expense of the State. It is now proposed, in effect, to transfer to the Federal Treasury the burden of maintaining militia organizations. If this is done it will not be long before the military appropriation bill passed at each session of Congress will reach more than one hundred millions of dollars annually. In this bill we deal very liberally with the Army. We have agreed to the proposition to increase the pay of the enlisted men, in the aggregate, over $4,000,000. The proposition is also pending in the other branch of Congress to increase that aggregate some two or three million dollars more by increasing the pay of the officers.

If this Congress proposes to also add $4,000,000 more to this and to the permanent appropriations for the maintenance of the National Guard, anyone can see that it will be only a very few years when the appropriation for the Army will exceed the enormous sum of $100,000,000. The current appropriation for the support of the Army is $78,193,311. The amount carried in this bill is $85,007,566.66, an increase of $6,814,255. If we add $4,000,000 more on account of the militia, we will have increased the appropriation for military purposes for the next fiscal year more than $10,000,000 above the amount expended for that purpose this year. At this rate it will not be long before the people will be compelled to greatly increase Federal taxation for the purpose of maintaining our military organizations in times of profound peace on a war basis. How long do you suppose the American people are going to submit to this policy?

If we want to maintain and retain an efficient military organization, let us do so; but do not let us waste the people's money in doing it by providing such an impracticable scheme as this is.

Mr. Chairman, I had occasion, early in the session, to call attention to the fact that unless Congress revised the estimates submitted to it by the several Executive Departments at the beginning of this session and greatly reduced the appropriations upon these estimates, we would certainly close this session with a large and certain deficit. If we propose to increase the estimates for military purposes, if we propose to pass new authorizations here not included in the estimates, what prospect do the Members, or the people of the United States who are interested in internal improvements, have of securing the money necessary to make these desired and much needed internal improvements? There is a great demand for waterway improvements all over this country; there is also a demand for an appropriation of money for public buildings and for other necessary internal governmental purposes, improvements that relate to the carrying on of the functions of Government in times of peace. If we propose to increase the expenditures of the Government for military purposes at the rate of $10,000,000 a year when our revenues are declining and other expenses incident to the civil administration of the Government increasing, where can we look for the revenues with which to authorize and make the more important, more essential internal improvements which the American people are to-day demanding? I certainly claim and believe that no man can go to his constituency and justify his failure to appropriate money for these necessary internal improvements by voting to increase the military expenses of the Government at the rate of $10,000,000. I sincerely hope, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment will be voted down.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. He has made an argument against this amendment from a standpoint of economy——

Mr. TAWNEY. From a standpoint of extravagance.

Mr. FINLEY. Oh, I differ with the gentleman, and I think I am entitled to my view of his remarks—from a standpoint of economy, and he points out to us that there will be a deficiency in the revenues, most likely. I believe that this amendment will increase the efficiency of the militia of this country. I think it is one of the very best amendments that has been or can be offered to the military appropriation bill. The gentleman points out that with the $2,000,000 provided this amendment will be an additional million and that other laws contemplate as much as two or three millions more. I do not know, nor do I think the gentleman from Minnesota knows, whether or not the bills of which he speaks will become law at this session of Congress. I want to say here, and I want to say emphatically, that if these bills will add to the efficiency of the militia of the United States, I am in favor of them and I hope they will pass.

will not, but we can not take for granted that that time will not come, and we will need a strong military force. There is no better way; there is no more economical way than to provide a strong militia or National Guard in the various States. It is a National Guard, authorized under national law, and subject in all respects to national law when the necessity arises. I think the sooner this country is spending $10,000,000 a year on its National Guard the better it will be for the military force and the safety and defense of this country in time of need. I am opposed to a large standing army. Increase the militia in numbers and efficiency and decrease the standing army. These are my sentiments; I have long held them, and I am not frightened at all by argument based on economy. There is no extravagance in this. It is the cheapest and most economical expenditure that has been proposed for the betterment of the military force of this country, and I am heartily in favor of the amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. AMES. Mr. Chairman, I should like to disabuse the mind of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations on this subject of the militia. From his own admission he counts on an army of 200,000 men. Our present regular service is but 50,000 men. In round numbers he has just admitted that we are appropriating $80,000,000 for the present military establishment, or at the rate of $1,600 per man. Now, the militia of 150,000 men, which he includes in his estimate of the total available military force, comes and asks for a paltry million for combined maneuvers, or at the rate of $6.50 per man. I think to oppose such an amendment is a cheese-paring proposition. If our militia is to be efficient, if it can get the benefit of association and contact with the regular troops and the discipline of the regular establishment, we can not better spend a million or two millions or six millions of dollars than to give it in just such a way.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just one word. I do not know how many colonels there are on the floor of this House, but I want to say to the gentleman, who is the colonel of one of the regiments of the State of Massachusetts——

Mr. AMES. May I interrupt the gentleman? I was a lieutenant in my militia. I went out a lieutenant in the volunteers, and I was promoted at the front in the volunteers. I am not a militia colonel. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I understood the gentleman was a member of the militia organization of the State of Massachusetts. I have been misinformed if he is not at the head of one of the regiments. If he is not he ought to be, because he would render very efficient service to that organization. But I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that when the Government of the United States provides, as is proposed in this bill by the Committee on Military Affairs, to give the several State militia organizations the benefit of contact with experienced and trained men in the Regular Army, at their annual encampments, it has done infinitely more for the benefit of these different State militia organizations than it would do if it spent $5,000,000 for camp maneuvers where only one regiment of these several organizations in the State could participate. Now, when the regular troops attend and participate in the State encampments they are participating with all of the members of the militia organizations in the several States, and I think the wisdom of this proposition ought to appeal to the members of this committee who are anxious for the betterment of the service in our State militia organizations. Where you have a service, or provide for an encampment which only one regiment from a State can participate in, which is also attended by Federal troops, you thereby minimize the benefit to be derived from the expenditure of the money that is necessary for the carrying on of this encampment.

Mr. FINLEY. Does the gentleman contend or understand that if this amendment carries it will cut out State encampments?

Mr. TAWNEY. It does not cut out State encampments. It does not interfere with State encampments at all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow me? It may be I do not have this question clearly in my head, but my understanding is that even if this amendment shall prevail, during the next fiscal year there will be only one kind of encampment, either the State encampment, with Federal aid, or these great camps of concentration, described by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the chief benefit of which will be to the officers of the militia or the National Guard. It is not likely both kinds of encampment will be held, and the question is, it seems to me, Where can the country get the best results for its money? The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has convinced me that more good will come from State encampments under the control and direction of officers of the Regular Army than will come to the National Guard through these great camps of concentration; and if we are to have but one, let us have the kind that will do the most good.

The bill, Mr. Chairman, carries an appropriation of $10,000, with which to pay the traveling expenses of the officers of the National Guard to go to garrisons and other places for their instruction. It seems to me to be idle to talk about State encampments and these great camps of concentration both in the same year, and in my judgment more good will come if this amendment is defeated and we go on with the policy of State encampments than if it should be included in the bill and the appropriation be quadrupled even in amount. The good comes from the Federal officers and soldiers visiting the National Guard in the various States in a body together, where every member of the guard can receive some benefit from the instruction.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, my attention has been called by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to the fact that if there is any provision made for these grand maneuvers contemplated in this amendment, there can be no regular troops attending State encampments, so that the proposition is one of relative merit. Now, the proposition presented to the committee from the Committee on Military Affairs is to aid the State militia organizations by having the regular troops attend their State encampments, and not to have the concentrated encampment where only one regiment from the neighboring States can attend. I think that the committee, not only from the standpoint of the benefit to the National Guard, but from the standpoint of expenditure, is doing a wise thing by voting down this amendment and adhering to the proposition presented by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations takes an erroneous view of this subject. I have been to a number of military encampments——

Mr. TAWNEY. So have I.

Mr. CRAIG. And if you have you know when they send officers there they usually send one to a regiment of National Guard.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is that? They send one officer?

Mr. CRAIG. They send one.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Regular Army?

Mr. CRAIG. One Regular Army officer.

Mr. TAWNEY. That has not been the experience of the militia of the State of Minnesota.

Mr. CRAIG. It has been the experience of the militia in the State of Alabama.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. And in Illinois.

Mr. O'CONNELL. And in Massachusetts.

Mr. CRAIG. And I desire to say that in a majority of the States of this Union.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit me. Are you talking about the inspection officer?

Mr. CRAIG. I am speaking of the man who is sent as an instructor.

Mr. TAWNEY. That really has been the rule heretofore, but in this bill I am informed by the chairman of the committee that that rule will not obtain in the future, and it will be entirely competent for the Secretary of War or the President to send any number of troops that they may deem necessary to these State encampments.

Mr. CRAIG. I will ask if that was not possible some four or five years ago, and did they then do it? No. Now, the national guardsmen have ten days in the summer for instruction. They have got to learn just as much as possible in those ten days. They are not like the Regular Army, who are drilled from day to day and have it hammered into them. Can one officer or one company of regulars go into a camp of national guardsmen and teach them much in ten days? They can not do it. The way to do it is like they did it with the seacoast artillery last summer. "Each regular Coast Artillery company should be linked for drill and instruction purposes with a militia company acting as Coast Artillery, and that the officers and men of these two linked companies should affiliate as closely as possible on all matters pertaining to their duties." It is impossible for one man or one company to teach a regiment much; but when you take one regiment of regulars and link it with a regiment of National Guard you will get results, and get them quickly. That is the only way to do it. It is contended that we have a standing army of 200,000 men, 150,000 of militia. We are spending $6,000,000, or will spend it, according to the Committee on Appropriations, on this militia. Now, is it not better to spend $6,000,000 on men and get something than to spend $5,000,000 and get nothing?

Now, if for these encampments we make an appropriation of $1,000,000, which will be what the Secretary of War says such encampments will cost, it will be the best money we ever spent, and whenever we can get a standing army of 150,000 American soldiers for $6,000,000 per year, we will get the cheapest standing army that the world ever saw, and we will get the best. [Applause.] I say to you, gentlemen of the committee, it is the only way, and it is the best way to get it. You can not send enough of these regulars to the camps to instruct these troops, because if you do the cost will be just as great as if you send them to the regulars. Now, it has been contended that this money will not be used for the seacoast fortification drills. Mr. Oliver, in his answers in the hearings, in answer to a question by Mr. YOUNG, as to how many camps there will be, said:

Six or seven. It is proposed to have two on the Pacific coast, one on the northeast coast, one in the South, one will be at Indianapolis, one at Fort Riley, one at Fort Sam Houston, and one at Fort D. A. Russell.

Thus showing conclusively that they had expected to have some of them on the coast. Now, Mr. Chairman, in these camps to be held on the coast these men will daily be instructed in the use of coast artillery; and they will never know anything about coast defense unless you take them to the coast fortifications and teach them how to use this very complicated mechanism known as coast guns.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not prevail. When an appropriation was first made for these Army maneuvers it was well understood by the committee that they were something in the nature of an experiment, and the general talk was that they were not expected to be repeated every year, but might be taken up once in every three or four years, with a view to ascertaining whether they were of sufficient substantial advantage to the militia to justify the appropriation. That was a matter well understood in the committee and well understood at the War Department.

Now, the result of these maneuvers has not been such, in my judgment, as to justify us in continuing this appropriation. After the maneuvers were held down at Manassas I made all possible inquiries that I could—from persons who had participated in them, Army officers, and persons cognizant of the situation—to ascertain what real, tangible benefit had accrued to the militia by reason of them. They all said it was a good thing, a nice thing, but not one man could point out a particle of benefit that had been derived. In my judgment, speaking for myself and not for the committee—and I do not agree with them—my own notion is that this was simply a big junket for the benefit of the officers of the militia, and that is about all there is to it. It does not aid the individual soldiers of the National Guard one particle. I have participated in drills many a time—in company drill, in regimental drill, in brigade drill, and division drill—and I want to say to you that my experience is that the real training that the soldier gets is in squad and company drill. The average enlisted man knows nothing and cares less about what occurs at these great parades and reviews. They are not held for his benefit. When the British undertook to train the Egyptians into a fighting machine they did not have reviews. They sent out their sergeants and their corporals to drill them until they got them into fighting shape, and that has been done in all military countries in the world. The real basis of the training of a soldier is laid in the squad drill, and I want to say to you gentlemen that the knowledge that a soldier receives before he even goes to his company is worth more than all the other knowledge that he receives during his entire drill, so far as the enlisted man is concerned.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Will the gentleman tell me that the volunteer soldier gets as much idea of war or the training in war from the drill in an armory as he does from the great maneuvers in the field and in a great district?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I do not know anything about drilling in an armory, but I do say he gets his practical knowledge of fighting by drilling in the squad and the company.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Does the gentleman maintain that mere drill is all that is necessary in the preparation of a soldier in modern warfare?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. No; you must have a good man to begin with, and then the drill will do the rest. There is a good deal of talk about our unpreparedness for war. The fact of the matter is that if a war was to break out an army would be extemporized in a very short time that would give a mighty good account of itself, whether we had a militia or not. A good many years ago such a war did break out, and I know of my own personal knowledge there were a lot of men from the Sunny South who did splendid fighting against us, without practical experience or practical training in war. There is a good deal of rot about this talk of our wanting to be a great military power. The proposition is to increase the Army, for that is just what it means. The proposition is ultimately and eventually to make the militia a part of the Regular Army and increase our Regular Army establishment to probably half a million men. Then will come along other ambitious men, with a good deal of jingoism in their character, and want to build up a tremendous Navy, and the first thing we know, gentlemen, we will be groaning under the burdens that Germany groans under now by reason of her immense army and navy. [Applause.] Let us stop while we can. I supported the proposition to increase the pay of the men, because I say let us have a little army—I would not vote to increase it one man—but for its size let us have the best fighting machine in the world, and let it go at that. We are in no danger of a war. There is no war cloud hanging over this country. We need not go to work and spend additional millions upon the Army and Navy. The youngest man in this House will never see any reason for it, in my judgment, and it is not necessary to be hysterical because some yellow newspaper talks of imaginary dangers 40,000 miles away from here. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman means 98,000,000 miles away from here!

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I am perfectly willing to accept an amendment reducing the distance somewhat; but, gentlemen, in all seriousness, let us stop now. We do not want to make this a great military country. I will tell you the army that you want to serve, and that is the army of the unemployed. You want to start public works wherever you can and give them plenty to do. You are then conferring far higher benefits on the American Republic than in adopting this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Certainly.

Mr. FINLEY. That proposition to give something to the unemployed the gentleman addresses to the Republican party, I suppose?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I direct it to the whole House. I thank God I have got to the point in my life where I can talk without having politics enter into it. I am addressing the whole House. I assume that we are all patriotic and that we want to do the best thing that we can for the country. The only difference is the method. No; I am addressing myself to the whole House.

I want to say seriously that the American people have got tired of jingoism; they have got tired of militarism; they have got tired of this notion of diverting from peaceful pursuits and industry a vast amount of money that we ought to give to the workingmen in order to furnish them employment. [Applause.] Vote down this amendment and every other amendment that proposes to increase the amount of money provided for in this bill. We have been liberal enough; we have given the Army and everything connected with the Army all it is entitled to, and I hope that every amendment that proposes to increase any of the provisions in this bill will be voted down. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. LANGLEY. I think the gentleman from Indiana is perfectly right in not wanting to inject politics into the discussion of this measure, but I am sure that he and the House and country will be delighted to learn that the news has just come over the wire that the great State of Kentucky has again distinguished herself by electing a Republican United States Senator in the person of one of her most gifted sons, ex-Governor William O. Bradley. [Great applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I very much dislike to break into the felicitations of the gentleman from Kentucky and of the Republican side of the House, but I do believe that it is necessary that the great stock of misinformation that has seemed to pervade the committee upon the subject of these maneuvers be cleared a little by finding out what this provision will actually do. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois provides for an expenditure of a million dollars for maneuvers of the National Guard combined with the Regular Army. The reports as to the condition of the National Guard on file in the War Department show that during last year instead of 150,000 men, as has been so frequently stated on this floor, there are about 115,000 or 120,000, divided into something more than 2,000 companies, many complying and many not complying with the terms of the National Guard act. Last year at the maneuvers 241 companies participated, as shown by the last report of the Secretary of War. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CRAIG] read from the hearings before the Military Committee the number of maneuvers and the kind of maneuvers that will be held under the provisions of this appropriation provided in this amendment.

Now, the committee should understand that none of these will be coast artillery maneuvers; not one single one of them. One of this list will be held in the Northeast, probably in the upper or northern part of the State of New York somewhere—the grounds have not yet been located—and there will be one regiment probably from each New England State that cares to have an attendance, and one or more from New York and New Jersey. Another encampment will be held in the South, probably near Chickamauga, and there will be regiments from the adjoining States of North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, and probably Louisiana and Mississippi. Another will be held at Indianapolis, where the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, and Wisconsin and Michigan, on the north, will attend. Another will be held at Fort Riley, in Kansas, and probably a regiment each from Iowa, Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas, and Oklahoma will attend. Another will be held for Texas alone. Another will be held at Fort D. A. Russell, in Wyoming, for Wyoming and Colorado and for the mountain States. Two will be held on the Pacific coast, one for California and one for Oregon and Washington. These will be maneuvers in the field for the National Guard, combined with such regular forces as may be available.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman will notice that Texas alone is equal to any of the others.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I admit that. Texas only needs to be named to admit it. The total number of companies that will avail themselves of these encampments will be about 230, as I can hastily calculate from the facts as I have them here at hand. So that the committee will see that but a little over 10 per cent of the total militia in the United States can take part in any one of these maneuvers in any one year. Now, it will be seen that the other 90 per cent of the National Guard does not and can not receive any instruction from these maneuvers during any single year, except that in the coast States most of their local militia can be instructed, but the troops in the interior must do as best they can with their usual State encampments.

It has been stated that the War Department did not send officers and regular troops to participate in the State encampments. I call attention to the report of the Secretary of War this year, on page 27, where he states that wherever requested by the State authorities the suitable officers and small bodies of the regulars are sent at the request of the State authorities, and that it is the recent policy—not of long standing, but recent policy—to detail officers and men wherever it can be done and whenever they are wanted.

Mr. CRAIG. Is there anything said about how many are detailed for each regiment?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The regiments, battalions, and companies have not been very large, and the number of men in the last year who could be available has been comparatively small, so that whenever a company or battalion was sent, but few men could go in comparison to the number who should go. The War Department has sent just as many troops as it possibly could to the State encampments, and undoubtedly that policy will be pursued in the future just so far as it possibly can be.

Mr. CRAIG. How many did they send under that last year?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. There is no report, but I can tell the gentleman there were not so very many troops to send.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Is there any provision in this bill carrying an appropriation for sending these regulars to the State encampments?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes; the Secretary of War can order regulars anywhere he sees fit, and there is money provided in this bill to pay the expenses of transportation and the subsistence and supplies anywhere which may be necessary for any purpose ordered by the War Department. That is the regular appropriation made for this sort of work or any sort of work which is of military character. It is carried in every appropriation bill, and there is ample supply for that sort of work wherever the Secretary sees fit to send the men, and undoubtedly he would, if your State authorities presented the proper application.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. He sends them, as I understand, upon the request only of the governor of the State.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. He can send them without any request, but states he did send at the request of the State authorities.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I know he can do it, but he does not do it.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I think the gentleman is mistaken. He does do it, as a matter of fact. His reports so state the fact, and I do not presume it will be disputed. He uses the words "State authority" in his report as the basis for his action in forwarding the regular troops.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I understand there are plenty of men now in the service to be detailed for this purpose.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. They are not there yet. The service is very nearly 20,000 men short now, or was at the last report that I had.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Then, as a matter of fact, it is not a choice, as I understand it, as was indicated by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], between having the encampment supplied by instructors, if we might call them such, sent from the Regular Army to encampments of the National Guard, but in view of the gentleman's statement that there are no men in the Regular Army available for that purpose——

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. But the gentleman does not quote me accurately.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It is to have a general maneuver under this amendment or nothing at all.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Oh, no. The gentleman is using my time, Mr. Chairman, and is misquoting me.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I do not mean to misquote the gentleman, but I want information.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The companies of the Regular Army are depleted, and they are being recruited, and will be, I presume, as fast as possible. They are being recruited right now. They are always recruited at this time of year quite rapidly, in good times or hard times or any other time; during the winter the companies are filled up quite rapidly, so that when spring comes the companies are in fairly good condition. During hard times they remain in good condition. During good times the men leave in one way or another.

So that the chances are when next summer comes, especially if this bill passes, the companies will be in fairly good condition. Now, it is one of the policies of the Committee on Military Affairs to have, just so far as it can have, some military post of some size in nearly every State in the Union. There ought to be a military establishment where quite a number of regular troops are stationed, which can cooperate with the National Guard, cooperate in daily work, cooperate in their annual encampments, and cooperate in inspection and instruction. Mr. Chairman, the officers of the Department have not, and I speak advisedly, carried out in good spirit the policy of the House. They have tried to concentrate the troops of the Regular Army in large posts, in very large posts, in only a few States, and take them away from the States where large numbers of the National Guard have been, and always will be, maintained. So there can not be the cordial and constant cooperation between the arms that ought to prevail. The result is that the officers of the War Department would prefer at times that instead of constant, almost daily, cooperation, they should have a large encampment once in several years at a place like Fort Riley, instead of distributing the troops throughout the countries where they could meet the larger number of National Guard, in States like Missouri, Iowa, Wisconsin, Illinois, and Michigan.

The troops from those States do not get the advantage of association with the Regular Army except very seldom in these large encampments, and then under peculiar pressure and for only a few days. We have quite a number of regiments in our States. In a State like New York it would take fifteen years to get around under the plan of maneuvers as planned for this year; in a State like Illinois it would take six, eight, or ten years; and in Wisconsin three years, and if larger maneuvers of this kind be held only once in three years, as contemplated by the provisions of this act, it would take nine years to cover the three regiments of Wisconsin. The enlistments of the men would thus allow but few to get the advantage of this work. Now, the gentlemen can see why the chairman of the Military Committee states that it is best for the National Guard to be brought into more intimate contact with the Regular Army in their own State encampments, where the regulars can stay there all the time that may be necessary and be brought in contact every day with every regiment of the National Guard at least for one encampment.

Now, another point in answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Mississippi. Each regiment of the National Guard has about ten days available for its vacation and military work at the encampment. It would take about a day and a half or two days to get to the place of the larger encampments outside of the State. It takes about two days to get away from the place of encampment and reach home inside of this period, and that leaves less than a week for actual service, for actual military work and maneuvers and contact with the National Guard. If you will notice the location of these places of encampment, you will perceive this is necessarily so, because large tracts of land can be secured in but few places. The result is that the single regiments from these States, which may go to these large encampments and maneuvers can get about six days of actual training. If they went to their own State encampment, they would get ten days of actual training, every day in contact and under instructions with the regular officers and men. Every regiment in the State would thus get ten days of actual training instead of one regiment getting six days of actual training, and that is what I think the chairman of the committee desired to inform this committee and the House.

Mr. CRAIG. The gentleman says there is a provision by which these regular officers and troops can be sent to a State. I will ask if there is not also a provision by which the Secretary of War can send to the States officers to be stationed there, one or two officers?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes, sir; and, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CRAIG. I will also ask if that is done anywhere that the gentleman knows?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. CRAIG. Where?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Six hundred and eighty-two officers of the Regular Army are under detail on detached service in one way or another.

Mr. CRAIG. I will ask if they are not all retired officers?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I am speaking of officers on the active list. The report of the Secretary of War for the last year shows that there are with the States right now—I think there are about thirty officers with the various States right now, officers on the active list of the Army.

Mr. CRAIG. Is it not a fact that it is a rule of the Department only retired men shall be sent to those places?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. On the contrary——

Mr. CRAIG. I am very glad to hear that. It was my impression it was the other way.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I think the report of the Secretary of War gives a list of the officers under detail and on detached service. There are 682 officers on the active list away from their troops on one service or another now; instructors at State educational institutions, 56. I can not find at the moment the number with the militia, but I will place the number in my remarks. I am under the impression that thirty or forty officers have been detailed from the active list to serve with the militia in one capacity or another with the military work of the States.

Mr. CRAIG. Are they sent to serve with the National Guard, or are not these men who are sent to the military colleges?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Those fifty-six which I read were detailed to military colleges, and they were all from the active list, but there are many detailed from the Regular Army to serve with the National Guard.

Mr. CRAIG. I was informed by the adjutant-general of the State of Alabama not over two months ago that he could not get men stationed in Alabama because of a rule of the Department that they would not send anybody but men on the retired list.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. As far as the Committee on Military Affairs is concerned, and I speak for myself anyhow, we have tried to prevent officers on the active list being detailed for any such purpose and being detached from their troops, and the reason is there are 682 officers now absent from their commands. The efficiency of the Army is greatly impaired by the absence of those men from their companies. What we have tried to do is to keep these active officers at home with their commands and require that the officers on the retired list shall do that kind of work, and as far as we had any influence we have insisted upon that being done, but it is not done, and a great many officers are absent from troops on this service. I do not believe there should be any more details of men on the active list, and then the people will realize the advantage and even necessity of an adequate supply of officers for the Army.

Mr. CRAIG. Does not the gentleman think when an officer on the active list is engaged in the work of instructing the National Guard that he is engaged in about as good work as he could be employed in?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. No; if it results in the injury or the embarrassment of the Regular Army, it ought not to be done. The regular troops should receive first consideration of their own officers. What we ought to have is what the War Department recommends—enough officers so all these things can be done as may be necessary for the public welfare, but if we have to choose between the two courses of action, I think we ought to maintain the Regular Army first anyhow.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes? Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I desire to yield three minutes to my colleague on the committee [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, in determining what disposition should be made of this amendment, we should bear in mind that only 10 per cent of the amount which would be adequate for equal treatment of all the States is provided for.

If it should pass this would render it necessary for the War Department to discriminate in favor of five States and against forty. The money comes from the common Treasury of the nation, contributed to without distinction by all the States alike, and I believe that so far as it is possible it should be disbursed in the same manner and on the same basis of equality.

The militia is organized and maintained primarily for the purpose of enforcing the reserved police powers of the various States, putting down local insurrections, and quelling internal and local disorders, and in this the States are doing a splendid work.

The effort of every one of us should be to harmonize the Regular Army and the militia by destroying all possible causes for friction, and for this reason, if we are to provide the War Department with funds for increasing the efficiency of the militia of the States, let us provide an amount sufficient to cover at least a fair proportion of them and not such a small proportion as will necessarily give rise to rivalry for its benefits and cause necessary discrimination in favor of a few and against many by the military authorities of the United States Government in their dealings with the various military organizations of the States.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. This amendment of mine was offered here for the reason, as has been stated, that there has been a demand by the National Guard that this appropriation shall be made. I am free to confess to you that I have had letters from the adjutant-general of the State of Illinois, saying that great good has come to the State of Illinois and would come to the National Guard if this appropriation was made at this time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the National Guard is a sort of a citizen soldiery. One hundred and fifty thousand men, or possibly a little less than that, are raising corn and wheat, are working in the mines and in the workshops all the year except the little time that they spend in these encampments, and we saw in the late war with Spain where these boys were ready to go at a moment's notice, and we had an organized army in the field in a very short time. It has been shown here by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that we can not keep up the quota of the companies in the Regular Army. Now, this branch of the service furnishes the means of putting an army in the field when necessary, ready and equipped, and I understand there is now a bill before the Committee on the Militia which provides that they shall be made a part of the Regular Army, or will be accepted into the Regular Army in time of war without reenlistment. So that if that bill prevails they will be, in fact, a branch of the Regular Army, and I believe that much good would come in the encouragement of these boys, and what they might learn at these encampments would be of incalculable value to them as soldiers. I am not for a large standing army. I am for the smallest army possible; but I believe, gentlemen of the committee, that this is a way in which we can get an army that will be, in fact, civilians and men who are producing wealth in this country of ours nearly all the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute in order to make a correction.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] asks unanimous consent for one minute in order to make a correction. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I find in the report of the Secretary of War that there were stationed with the militia last year seven officers. I thought there were thirty, but the report shows there were seven. I knew there were some.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I also make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I want to state that when the amendment was offered——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted. The gentleman can extend his remarks in the RECORD, but he can not speak except by unanimous consent. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Can we have that amendment reported?

The CHAIRMAN. What is the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. When the amendment was offered by the gentleman from Virginia I thought that the Chair understood that I accepted that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It has to be voted on by the committee anyway. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to have the amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment and the amendment to the amendment; it is so long since they were reported to the committee.

The amendment and the amendment to the amendment were again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Division!

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 56, noes 48.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided, and tellers reported—ayes 59, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT.

Purchase of subsistence supplies: For issue, as rations to troops, civil employees when entitled thereto, hospital matrons, nurses, applicants for enlistment while held under observation, general prisoners of war (including Indians held by the Army as prisoners, but for whose subsistence appropriation is not otherwise made), Indians employed with the Army without pay, as guides and scouts, and military convicts at posts; for the subsistence of the masters, officers, crews, and employees of the vessels of the Army transport service; hot coffee for troops traveling when supplied with cooked or travel rations; meals for recruiting parties and applicants for enlistment while held under observation, authorized issues of candles; authorized issues of toilet articles, barbers', laundry, and tailors' materials, for use of military convicts confined at military posts without pay or allowances, and applicants for enlistment while held under observation, for issue of toilet kits to recruits upon their first enlistment; ice for issue to organizations of enlisted men at such places as the Secretary of War may determine; matches for lighting public fires and lights at posts and stations and in the field; flour used for paste in target practice; salt and vinegar for public animals; toilet paper for use by enlisted men at posts, camps, rendezvous, and offices where water-closets are provided with sewer connections, or where the sanitary conditions require its use; for sales to officers and enlisted men of the Army; coffee roasters and cooking apparatus in the field, and when traveling (except on transports), bake ovens and apparatus pertaining thereto; scales, weights, measures, utensils, tools, stationery, blank books and forms, office furniture, commissary chest and outfits, and field desks of commissaries: Provided, That the sum of $12,000 is authorized to be expended to defray the cost of furnishing food, and for providing extra-duty pay for cooks, assistant cooks, and waiters, and for perishable table equipment in subsisting enlisted men of the Regular Army and the organized militia who may be competitors in the National Rifle Match: And provided further, That no competitor who is thus subsisted shall be entitled to commutation of rations, and no greater expense shall be incurred than $1.50 per man per day for the period the contest is in progress. For payments: Of commutations of rations to the cadets at the United States Military Academy in lieu of the regular established ration at the rate of 30 cents per ration; of the regulation allowances of commutation in lieu of rations to enlisted men on furlough, enlisted men and male and female nurses when stationed at places where rations in kind can not be economically issued, and when traveling on detached duty where it is impracticable to carry rations of any kind, enlisted men selected to contest for places or prizes in department and Army rifle competitions while traveling to and from places of contest, male and female nurses on leaves of absence, applicants for enlistment and military convicts while traveling under orders, of commutation of rations in lieu of the regular established ration for members of the Nurse Corps (female) while on duty in hospital, and for enlisted men, applicants for enlistment while held under observation, and military convicts sick therein, at the rate of 30 cents per ration (except that at the general hospital at Fort Bayard, N. Mex., 50 cents per ration is authorized for enlisted patients in said hospital), to be paid to the surgeon in charge of compensation of civilians employed in the Subsistence Department, and of extra pay to enlisted men employed on extra duty in the Subsistence Department for periods of not less than ten days, at rates fixed by law; of extra-duty pay at rates to be fixed by the Secretary of War for mess stewards and cooks at recruit depots, who are to be graduates of the schools for bakers and cooks; for printing, advertising, commercial newspapers, and use of telephones; for temporary buildings, cellars, and other means of protecting subsistence supplies (when not provided by the Quartermaster's Department); for providing prizes to be established by the Secretary of War for enlisted men of the Army who graduate from the Army schools for bakers and cooks, the total amount of such prizes at the various schools not to exceed $900 per annum; for other necessary expenses incident to the purchase, testing, care, preservation, issue, sale, and accounting for subsistence supplies for the Army; in all, $7,000,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, and accounted for as "Subsistence of the Army," and for that purpose to constitute one fund: Provided further, That officers of the organized militia who may hereafter be furnished, under proper authority, with funds for the purchase of coffee, or other components of the travel ration for the use of their respective commands, shall not be required to furnish bonds for the safe-keeping and disbursement of the same.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to say just one word of explanation. The Commissary-General called attention to one or two things that are new. The main part is the same, except he rearranged the language so as to provide in the first part of the paragraph the language covering all matters of purchase, in the last part all matters of payment. One thing new is in regard to the advancement of moneys for competitive rifle shooting. It does not increase the expense, but authorizes the advancement of certain money to expedite the work. It is now provided for by law, but can not be paid until after the times for assembling. This provides they can get pay in advance of the meeting. There is another new thing in the very last part which has regard to the advancement of what is called "coffee money" to the officers of the militia. Under the present law they have got to put up a bond when anything is advanced. The regulars do not have to put up a bond; the officer's commission is supposed to be sufficient.

It amounts to very little, but when troops are ordered to an encampment—that of course does not mean a State encampment, but any encampment Congress authorizes to be held outside of their States—the militia officer is deprived of the power to purchase small supplies necessary for their subsistence, in the way of rations, en route to the encampment. If they advance it out of their own pockets, the Government repays. The Regular Army officer gets this advanced to him. This simply avoids putting the militia commissioned officer on a bond for this amount.

There is an increase, which is a supplemental estimate sent us when the President of the United States under authority of law increased the price of the ration some two and seventy-seven thousandths of a cent for each ration to be purchased.

Mr. MANN. What is the commutation now?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is for the regulation ration. It is not quite 25 cents. It is just a mere fraction under 25 cents. The commutation part is provided, I believe, the same as the law has been for many years.

Mr. MANN. I do not quite understand that. The gentleman says that the President has increased the price of the ration.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; he has changed the component parts of the ration and increased its cost to the Government.

Mr. MANN. Well, he fixes what the ration shall be?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Under the law now, within certain restrictions.

Mr. MANN. And they estimate it will cost more?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Two and seventy-seven thousandths cents additional to each ration.

Mr. MANN. Then that accounts for the supplemental estimate.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That accounts for the supplemental estimate.

Mr. MANN. What is the amount of this coffee money?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is a very small amount to each company.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says a small amount! Of course a million dollars is a small amount at times.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not to us.

Mr. MANN. Why, a million dollars was a very small amount to certain gentlemen here just a few minutes ago.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the gentleman will let the point of order remain pending, I will find out exactly; but it varies according to the distance traveled. A man traveling 400 miles with a company would spend more for what is called "coffee money" than he would if he traveled only 200 miles; but it is only a very small amount for each one.

Mr. TAWNEY. This proviso at the bottom of page 23 is new, is it not, appropriating $12,000 to be expended to defray the cost of furnishing food, and so forth, in subsisting enlisted men of the Regular Army and the organized militia who may be competitors in the national rifle match?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We pay all that expense now, and the only change in that is that this authorizes it to be advanced, to enable them to get ready before the men get there, while in the other way they have to get there and make their preparation and go into camp afterwards.

Mr. MANN. Is not all of page 23, after line 14, new matter?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think not. I think you will find most of the language in the old law, scattered through it at different places, because it was not properly divided so that you could keep control, or follow exactly what was for purchases and what was for payments, unless you analyzed it sentence by sentence.

Mr. MANN. What is this provision for sales to enlisted men of the Army, in line 15, and where is that in the current law?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We have always sold to officers and enlisted men of the Army, commissary stores, ever since the Army has been in existence.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I understand we furnish them commissary supplies at something less than cost, but where is this provision in the current law?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would have to go to the current law to find out, but it has been the law ever since we had an Army. The regulation adopted under the law has always been to sell to officers at cost, with 10 per cent added; not the cost of transportation, but the original cost, and it has been held that it was absolutely just to do that, for the reason that a man located at Chicago would buy his goods at the real cost, with 10 per cent added, while if a man stationed in Alaska had to pay the cost of transportation, in addition to the cost of the goods, he would be absolutely prohibited from living there, where he was compelled to live under his orders. Now, the enlisted man, of course, gets a certain amount of rations free, but an officer has the advantages of the commissary when he is in the neighborhood of any place where commissary supplies are kept.

Mr. MANN. I understand what the situation is, and the gentleman may be correct in saying that is in the current law. I do not profess to know the current law, but I was not able to find this, and I do not see what the object is in putting it in the law now unless the Department wants to do something different from the present regulations.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. My impression is that there is nothing of that kind contemplated, but I will say to the gentleman that it is late, and I will move that the committee rise, and we will get full information on that subject, so as to be able to present it in the morning. It is a very difficult matter to be able to refer to the details of all these complicated provisions at a moment's notice.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Iowa does not need to make any apology for the way in which he handles his bill in this House. Nobody ever does it any better. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17288—the Army appropriation bill—and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 16051. An act to authorize the Cahaba Power Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Alabama, to construct a dam across the Cahaba River, in said State, at or near Centerville, Ala.;

H. R. 16955. An act to extend the time for building a bridge across Red River at Shreveport, La.;

H. J. Res. 102. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish three condemned cannon to the mayor of the city of Detroit, Mich., to be placed on the base of the statue of the late Maj. Gen. Alexander Macomb, United States Army; and

H. J. Res. 120. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to apply the unexpended balance of the donation made by the citizens of Dallas, Tex., under the provisions of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1905, to work in construction of Lock and Dam No. 2 in section 1 of Trinity River.

CLERKS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following report from the Committee on Accounts and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution if so desired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution in lieu of House resolutions Nos. 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, relative to the services of clerks of committees whose jurisdiction is defined in clauses 42 to 52, inclusive, of Rule XI.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia, from the Committee on Accounts, submitted the following report (to accompany H. Res. 268):

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred House resolutions Nos. 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 182, 184, 185, and 186, authorizing the appointment of clerks, respectively, to the Committees on Expenditures on Public Buildings, Expenditures in the Interior Department, Expenditures in the War Department, Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor, Expenditures in the Navy Department, Expenditures in the State Department, Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, and Expenditures in the Department of Justice, have had the same under consideration and recommend in lieu thereof the adoption of the following resolution, viz:

"Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House for the services of a clerk to each of the committees whose jurisdiction is defined in clauses 42 to 52, inclusive, Rule XI, compensation at the rate of $6 per day each during the remainder of the present session."

The purpose of this resolution is to give a clerk to each of the so-called "expenditures committees," ten in number. If the resolution be adopted at this time it will involve an estimated expenditure of $5,520 from the contingent fund for the remainder of the present session, if Congress adjourns by the 1st of June.

Six of the committees were created March 30, 1816, namely, on Expenditures in the State, Treasury, War, Navy, and Post-Office Departments, and on Public Buildings; on Expenditures in the Department of the Interior, March 16, 1860; on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, January 16, 1874; on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, December 20, 1889; and on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor, December 11, 1905.

The jurisdiction of these committees is defined in clauses 42 to 52, inclusive, Rule XI, as follows:

"42. The examination of the accounts and expenditures of the several Departments of the Government and the manner of keeping the same; the economy, justness, and correctness of such expenditures, their conformity with appropriation laws; the proper application of public moneys; the security of the Government against unjust and extravagant demands; retrenchment; the enforcement of the payment of moneys due to the United States; the economy and accountability of public officers; the abolishment of useless offices; the reduction or increase of the pay of officers, shall all be subjects within the jurisdiction of the nine [ten] standing committees on the public expenditures in the several Departments, as follows:

"43. In the Department of State: to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department;

"44. In the Treasury Department: to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department;

"45. In the War Department: to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department;

"46. In the Navy Department: to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department;

"47. In the Post-Office Department: to the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department;

"48. In the Interior Department: to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department;

"49. In the Department of Justice: to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice;

"50. In the Department of Agriculture: to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture;

"51. In the Department of Commerce and Labor: to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor; and

"52. In Public Buildings: to the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings."

The foregoing rule was adopted in the revision of the rules in the Forty-sixth Congress. This rule more briefly comprehends all of the matters contained in the old rule of the House, 106, which follows:

"106. It shall be the duty of said committees to examine into the state of the accounts and expenditures respectively submitted to them, and to require and report particularly—

"Whether the expenditures of the respective Departments are justified by law;

"Whether the claims from time to time satisfied and discharged by the respective Departments are supported by sufficient vouchers, establishing their justness, both as to their character and amount;

"Whether such claims have been discharged out of funds appropriated therefor, and whether all moneys have been disbursed in conformity with appropriation laws; and

"Whether any, and what, provisions are necessary to be adopted to provide more perfectly for the proper application of the public moneys, and to secure the Government from demands unjust in their character or extravagant in their amount.

"And it shall be moreover the duty of the said committees to report from time to time whether any, and what, retrenchment can be made in the expenditures of the several Departments, without detriment to the public service; whether any, and what, abuses at any time exist in the failure to enforce the payment of moneys which may be due to the United States from public defaulters or others, and to report from time to time such provisions and arrangements as may be necessary to add to the economy of the several Departments and the accountability of their officers." (March 30, 1816.)

"It shall be the duty of the several committees on public expenditures to inquire whether any offices belonging to the branches or Departments, respectively, concerning whose expenditures it is their duty to inquire, have become useless or unnecessary; and to report from time to time on the expediency of modifying or abolishing the same; also, to examine into the pay and emoluments of all offices under the laws of the United States, and to report from time to time such a reduction or increase thereof as a just economy and the public service may require." (February 19, 1817.)

In times past the committees on expenditures in the various Departments, either upon their own initiative or by direction of the House, have made many important and far-reaching investigations and have made reports and recommendations to the House resulting in wholesome and salutary legislation and in the correction of abuses. At such times those committees have been equipped with all necessary and proper clerical aid. To illustrate:

The following investigations, inquiries, and reports were made:

BY THE COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT—

Investigations of Hot Springs Reservation, Ark. (House Report 1846, 1–48);

Other matters—
Cost of carriage hire; expenditures in Indian Department; claim of Kentucky Central Railroad; pay and emoluments of officers in War Department; enlargement of Sioux Reservation in Dakota; sale of post traderships.

River and harbor expenditures (House Report 4093, 2–50).

The most recent investigation of the expenditures of a Department was made under authority of the following resolution, adopted by the House May 9, 1906 (RECORD, 1–59, p. 6573), to wit:

"Whereas no examination of the expenditures in the Department of Agriculture has been made by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture for a number of years, and such an examination is now necessary in the interest of the public service; and

"Whereas said examination can not be had by said committee unless authority therefor be conferred upon said committee: Therefore

"Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture is hereby authorized to examine, so far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned, all of the matters referred to in paragraph 42 of Rule XI of the House of Representatives, and for that purpose it may send for persons and papers, and said committee is authorized to employ a competent stenographer while conducting said examination and to sit during the sessions of the House and to report the result of its examination with any recommendations to the House.

"Any expenses incurred hereunder to be paid from the contingent fund of the House on the certificate of the chairman of the committee and approval of the Committee on Accounts."

The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, pursuant thereto, conducted investigations, the hearings in connection therewith covering 1,179 printed pages, including the index. The report of the committee (H. Rept. 8147, 2–59) covers 64 pages. To these hearings and the report of the committee, brief as was the time at its disposal for the conduct of an investigation, we invite the attention of the House as showing the possibilities for the exercise of the functions of the several committees on expenditures as originally intended by the House when their jurisdiction was defined by the rules. This report points out where savings may be effected in the mere matter of printing and binding alone of the Department's statement of expenditures, and it treats of other expenditures by the Department of Agriculture made in the discretion of that Department's officials, which illustrates the extent to which a Department may go in expending moneys for objects not specifically authorized or contemplated by Congress, but which may not constitute unlawful expenditures. It demonstrates the necessity for greater care in granting authority for the expenditure of lump sums of money and the desirability, if not necessity, for the segregation of large appropriations into specific authorizations, leaving as little as possible for the exercise of discretion on the part of departmental officials, who from zeal, however honest and well-meaning their purposes, are prone to resolve whatever doubts there may be as to their authority of law to expend appropriations for certain purposes in favor of making the expenditure. Moreover, it shows the lengths to which it is possible to go when the law and the appropriation for an object go hand in hand instead of the law preceding the appropriation and the latter conforming strictly to the former.

The several committees on expenditures in the Executive Departments, with the exception of the committee last mentioned, have, it must be admitted, been of no practical value for a long time. They have been looked upon as committees with nothing to do. Dormant, innocuous, it has been generally accepted that they were shorn of their powers and functions. Even in the case just referred to it will be noted that a resolution of the House was deemed necessary in order to vitalize the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, notwithstanding the wide scope of the jurisdiction conferred upon it by Rule XI. That it was the inherent right of the committee to make the investigation it did can hardly be questioned, requiring authority only for its clerical needs. And, as further showing the extent to which the committees on expenditures have been rendered inactive and ornamental, we will refer to the investigation of charges made in the report of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General on the investigation of the Post-Office Department concerning Members of Congress. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, by authority of a resolution of the House of December 3, 1903 (RECORD, 2–58, p. 51, etc.), considered the report of the Fourth Assistant Postmaser-General and made a report to the House, and on March 11, 1904, a special committee was authorized and appointed to consider alleged relations of Members of the House with the Post-Office Department, which committee also made a report. When these several actions were taken, it was attempted by the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department to have the subject-matter of the resolutions considered by that committee, but to no purpose.

Thus it will be seen that when charges of irregularity in a Department made it possible for one of the committees on expenditures to exercise its functions, the House itself denied it that privilege. It is not to be wondered at then that we have to-day ten committees of the House classed as more ornamental than useful. And the denial to these committees of facilities such as clerks has been additional evidence that the House did not expect them to do any work. But it is proposed to change such conditions, and to galvanize these committees, and make them a living, working force instead of mere meaningless fictions; instead of furnishing a "dumping ground," so to speak for Members of the House who could not be taken care of otherwise in committee assignments the Speaker of the present House, in his appointments upon the expenditure committees has made their personnel such as to be a guaranty that they will perform the duties with which they are charged and for which they were created by the rules; and the Committee on Accounts believes that, provided with clerical aid, the committees on expenditures will render the House and the country service which will result in economy and the better administration of the Executive Departments. We verily believe that with these committees fully equipped for work and steadily pursuing their prescribed duties they would render unnecessary, not to say impossible, the creation by Executive order of commissions, such as the Keep Commission, and the Waterways Commission, and the promulgation of departmental regulations without authority of Congress. That such orders and regulations when issued were deemed necessary in the interest of the public service there is no doubt; that they were made possible by the inertia of Congress there can also be no doubt. Likewise, with the expenditures committees alive to every possible contingency and with intimate knowledge of the workings of each Department and its expenditures such creation would be impossible, except by Congressional action.

The present time has been selected for the resuscitation of the expenditures committees when no charges are pending to invite public attention or excite the public mind and to arouse partisanship. There is no particular head which an investigation or inquiry is aimed to hit. But it is proposed that these committees shall steadily and diligently, without clamor or partisanship, carefully look into the manner in which the vast amount of money appropriated is expended. It will not be the work of a session, but constant and unremitting vigilance; economies and reforms will be expected to result, and will result; useless offices be abolished, law respected, public money properly applied, the Government secured against unjust and extravagant demands; retrenchment, claims of the United States satisfied, stricter accountability of public officers, and salaries reduced or increased on just and equitable principles. These are the duties of the committees on expenditures as defined by the rule. Furthermore, and what is of paramount importance to the House itself, the dignity of the House and its rights under its own rules can be preserved by restoring to the expenditures committees their proper functions. It is within the experience of the younger Members of the House in point of service that the House has been forced into the acceptance of provisions placed upon an appropriation bill elsewhere or accept the consequence of the failure of such bill to pass in a short session of Congress or the prolongation of a long session indefinitely. How often has the House been required, reluctantly, to acquiesce and yield to another body when the provision in disagreement between the two Houses would, if offered to an appropriation bill in the House, have been obnoxious to its own Rule XXI!

Rule XXI, clause 2, provides that:

"No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto."

Notwithstanding this rule, it is a matter of common knowledge that bills when reported from committees having jurisdiction of appropriations contain appropriations not previously authorized by law, and provisions changing existing law, and that amendments are offered thereto equally in conflict with the rule. Also it is well known that such provisions and amendments, when the point of order is made (and usually it is made), are ruled out and kept out of the bill then under consideration, unless by a special rule from the Committee on Rules the House makes such matters in order. So that an appropriation bill goes to the other body comparatively clear of legislation. (For illustration, see proceedings on Army appropriation bill February 27–28, 1908.)

Different rules and customs prevail in the other body. Its Rule XVI follows:

"All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except the following bills, which shall be severally referred as herein indicated; * * * and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments."

Under this rule an amendment to an appropriation bill may be and is considered by the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and if favorably reported therefrom, even though it be not recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, may be offered upon the floor of the Senate and the point of order will not lie against it. Thus general legislation and matters which would have been, or were, obnoxious to the House rule find their way into appropriation bills as "riders," and the House has presented for its consideration propositions which itself was precluded from entertaining in the first instance, and which can now only be disposed of by concurrence with or without amendment or nonconcurrence, courtesy to the other body forbidding its exercise of Rule XXI (see Parliamentary Precedents, pp. 1336 and 1337). And while the House may consider such amendments in Committee of the Whole, as in the case of the original bill, as often happens, it more frequently, for want of time, especially in a short session, nonconcurs in the amendments at once and in gross and sends the bill to a conferees committee. Its conferees may hold out a long time, and in many instances they have done so; they may be "instructed" to "insist" on disagreement and not to "yield;" and though these methods prevail occasionally, it is notorious that in most cases it is the House that finally gives in, for the House would be the greater sufferer by the consequences to follow the failure of an appropriation bill. These conditions have brought about some notable legislative battles and tests of endurance, and the end has generally been the humiliating defeat of the House.

It may be urged that some legislation on appropriation bills is desirable and can only be enacted as "riders;" that if it took the usual devious course prescribed by the rules it would not find its way to the statute books. This may or may not be true. The House has rules for its guidance and the conduct of its business, and if it does not do certain things, pass certain bills, it is because it has not the wish so to do. It does pass enough bills of a general nature in an orderly, regular way as evidence of its freedom to act when it has the will to act. But it is forced to do indirectly what it denies itself the power of doing directly under its Rule XXI, and it is this state of abject subserviency from which it should liberate itself. Rule XXI has been demonstrated through nearly a half century of practice to safeguard the Treasury from raids. Appropriation bills were intended to appropriate for objects previously authorized by law, and not to be the vehicles of general legislation. Restore to the committees on expenditures in the various Departments their functions, properly equip them, let them go to work methodically and systematically within the very wide scope of their jurisdiction, refer to them estimates and recommendations for appropriations not previously authorized by law or which change existing law; refer to them bills pertaining to their jurisdiction as has been done during the present session to some extent; then see to it that their functions are not usurped by other committees and are guarded against encroachments. This done, it is our judgment that the House will soon find itself possessed of ten committees, with a total of seventy members, or about one-fifth of the House, all busily at work keeping watchful eyes on expenditures, exacting careful stewardship on the part of Departments, and restoring to Congress, and particularly to the House, some prerogatives long ago cherished, but long since lost.

Your committee, in its humble way, are willing and glad to assist the efforts of the Speaker and the expenditures committees in this good work, and therefore report the accompanying resolution favorably.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 29, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 247.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House for the services of an assistant clerk to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds compensation at the rate of $1,800 per annum, until otherwise provided for by law.

With the following committee amendment:

Amend, in line 4, by striking out the word "eight" and inserting the word "two," so that it will read $1.200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

CLERK TO COMMITTEES UNDER RULE XI.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I now desire to call up House Resolution No. 268, which has been printed in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 268.

In lieu of H. Res. No. 175, H. Res. No. 176, H. Res. No. 177, H. Res. No. 178, H. Res. No. 179, H. Res. No. 182, H. Res. No. 184, H. Res. No. 185, and H. Res. No. 186.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House for the services of a clerk to each of the committees whose jurisdiction is defined in clauses 42 to 52, inclusive, Rule XI, compensation at the rate of $6 per day each during the remainder of the present session.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I now yield, Mr. Speaker, five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL].

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, little can be added to the full and interesting report made by the chairman of the Committee on Accounts. This much, however, may be added thereto. A statement of the history and powers given under the rule to these committees should be sufficient for the information of the House. In other words, these committees have fallen, during recent years, into a condition of desuetude that, in the opinion of those who have looked into the matter, is anything but innocuous.

They first were established in 1816 when Henry St. George Tucker, of Virginia, brought in a resolution providing for these standing committees of the House with power provided in the resolution. On the debate on that resolution, which is contained in the Annals of Congress, volume 14, part 1, page 1298, Mr. Smith, of Maryland, in opposing the resolution, said:

Mr. Smith of Maryland did not believe that much good could flow out of the measure. There were already, he said, an accountant of the War and an accountant of the Navy Departments, and a comptroller over them, and now we are to appoint committees of Congress over the whole, to inspect accounts after the money has been paid away. Furthermore, he thought it would be impracticable for the committees to act efficiently unless they sat all the year. Mr. Smith said he remembered that a gentleman of this House [Mr. Randolph] once moved a similar investigation into what was called the Augean stable; the inquiry was ordered; the gentleman went into it; $5,000 were spent in printing documents, etc., and, after all, there was not even a resolution or any other proceeding predicated on the examination.

The motion was advocated by Messrs. Tucker, Desha, Stanford, Wright, and Lowndes, by whom it was argued that the experience of other States, particularly Virginia, proved the utility of such committees; that they were also found extremely beneficial and useful in England; that clamors and suspicions had gone abroad, and though they might not be well founded, still they rendered the inquiry necessary; that if anything was wrong in the public accounts, the Government ought to know it and the evil be corrected; that if the committees only entered into a general, and not a minute and detailed investigation, of these accounts much good would still result from it, as it would tend to correct frauds, or errors, if any; that it was the duty of this branch of the Government to inspect the money concerns and see that they were correctly and faithfully conducted.

The resolutions were then agreed to, establishing these committees on expenditure in the Department of State, the Department of the Treasury, the Department of War, the Department of the Navy, the Post-Office Department, a Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings.

In 1860 the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department was created, and in 1874 the Department of Justice, and in 1889 the Department of Agriculture, and when the Department of Commerce and Labor was established a committee was provided for that Department.

Now, let me call the attention of the House to the powers given to these committees under the rules of the House. In Rule XI, section 42, it is provided that: All proposed legislation shall be referred to these committees on expenditure relating to the examination of the accounts and expenditures of the several Departments of the Government and the manner of keeping the same. The economy, justice, and correctness of such expenditures; their conformity with appropriation laws; the proper application of public moneys; the security of the Government against unjust and extravagant demands; retrenchment; enforcement of the payment of moneys due the United States; the economy and accountability of public officers; the abolishment of useless offices; the reduction or increase of the pay of officers, shall all be subject within the jurisdiction of the nine standing committees on the public expenditures in the several Departments, as follows——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I grant five minutes more time to the gentleman.

Mr. BOUTELL. It will be seen, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the scope and functions of these committees are as important and as large as those of any of the standing committees of the House. I have not served long enough in this House to know when these committees cease to act as organized working committees. I know that in this session I found myself placed for the first time upon the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, and I found upon examining the rules what the powers of that committee were. I found also that the committee had never in recent years been organized and no work had been done by the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOUTELL. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Unless I am mistaken, in another branch of the Government, at the other end of the Capitol, some time ago the statement was made that the Federal Government had upon its rolls 3,000 special agents of various sorts—a sort of detective force. Does that not fall within the scope or authority of these committees, to examine whether or not these various special agents are being paid under any law of Congress, and whether their appointment has been authorized by any law of Congress, and whether the money used to pay them is properly paid or not?

Mr. BOUTELL. That would fall specifically within the letter of clause 42, of Rule XI, describing the functions of these expenditure committees, and it is information which this House and which this country ought to have. In other words, Mr. Speaker, I found out that so far as the committee to which I was appointed was concerned, it was an unorganized committee and not doing any work. Upon looking up the history of these committees I found not only the account given of their origin that I have read, but that under previous Congresses these committees exercised a powerful influence in this House on legislation and on the conduct of the Departments.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BOUTELL. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman tell us whether, because of the great work which these committees have done and can do in this House, the Senate has recently created like committees in the Senate?

Mr. BOUTELL. My impression is that the creation of like committees in the Senate proceeds from the same spirit that has animated, I may say, the leaders of this House to put these committees on a working basis to properly scrutinize the expenditures of various Executive Departments, and to examine and report to this House the reasons for the rapidly increasing appropriations and expenditures.

Mr. MANN. My understanding is that the Senate has recently created corresponding committees in the Senate, to each of which is assigned a clerk at $2,240 a year.

Mr. BOUTELL. Continuing, Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to allude to one instance of the important work done by these committees. In 1876, when William R. Morrison, of Illinois, was the leader of this House, then in control of the Democratic party, a report was made to this House on a number of resolutions which had been referred to the Ways and Means Committee, asking for a report on the expenditure of the various Departments of the Government. These committees were authorized to employ such clerical and stenographic help as was necessary; examinations were made, and upon the report of one of those committees, namely, the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, a state of things not at all creditable to the Department was shown in the expenditures of that Department, and upon that was based the impeachment of the Secretary of War.

Mr. Speaker, as I said before, I do not know what influences have led to these committees falling into a condition of inaction. I do say, however, that so far as I am personally concerned, I do not care to serve upon any committee of this House which has vested in it the powers contained in the rule which I have read, and not have that committee organized and prepared to do work. I sympathize fully with the desire of the Speaker of the House to have these committees placed upon a working basis. The way to place a committee upon a working basis is to give it the clerical force necessary to attend to the business of the committee. There are scores of bills relating to the expenditures of money in the various Departments, to increases in salaries, which are now referred to other committees, simply because these committees are unorganized committees.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that these committees have quite a large jurisdiction and are capable of doing a great deal toward improving administration if they become active. I was a member of one of these committees during my first term of Congress. I never found out where the committee room was. We never had a meeting, but perhaps that was the fault of the committee. If I can feel assured that these committees are sort of having a general revival along the right lines, I think they ought to have the clerks, and I understand that the committees are taking hold of their work and are investigating along lines that perhaps need investigation. I may assume that from what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] says, and that being the case, I think the committees ought to have the clerks, and if any committee is assigned a clerk and never has a meeting in the future, why the Congress can rescind the order, I suppose.

Mr. BOUTELL. I think I may safely say in reply to the gentleman from Indiana that the principle of noblesse oblige would influence every member of these committees in the conduct of the business; but, sir, you can not expect members of a committee unorganized from whom bills which belong to it are taken will show any great interest in the work of the committee, but if these committees are recognized by the Speaker of the House in the reference of bills and are given the clerical help necessary to do the work I think we may expect great benefits to result from the scrutinizing of the accounts of the Departments and proposed legislation to increase salaries, instead of allowing them to be taken up on appropriation bills where they are subject to points of order. The revitalization of these committees, I may say, would be of great relief to all the appropriation committees of the House.

Mr. ADAIR. I just want to ask the question whether or not the fact this committee has been inactive and has never performed any service was due to the fact that it had no clerk? You have stated this committee has been inactive. You have also stated this committee has power to act, but has not acted. Now, was it due to the fact you had no clerk to this committee?

Mr. BOUTELL. As I stated, this is my first service on one of these committees, and during my eleven years' service in the House these committees have never been active committees. Whether you say the committees have been inactive because of the fact they have had no clerk, or whether they have no clerk because they were inactive, it is difficult to say. The reason is one which some of the older Members of the House may be able to give, but which I can only surmise, and therefore do not care to state. These committees have fallen into a condition of inactivity, and there have been no auditing or examining committees active in this House for many years, and therefore, contrary to the wording of the rule, bills which should go to these committees have been referred to other committees.

Mr. ADAIR. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that this is a very important committee, and I believe that it should have a clerk, and I believe the sum asked is reasonable. I am heartily in favor of the resolution because I believe that all of these bills on these questions should go before these committees before they are acted upon by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. May I ask the gentleman a question? I want to ask the gentleman a question to see if my memory is correct. I recollect that in the Fifty-eighth Congress, when there was a great deal of scandal reported in the papers in the Post-Office Department, a number of resolutions were introduced providing for inquiries.

Mr. BOUTELL. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. And those resolutions were referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, and were subsequently, by action of the House, taken from that committee and referred to another committee. That is correct, is it?

Mr. BOUTELL. I think the gentleman from Mississippi is correct; but, as everyone in the House felt at that time, those resolutions, with the entire investigation made at that time, should, under the rule, have been in charge of the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, and it was just on account of the reasons I have stated—that these committees have fallen into inactivity—that matters which rightfully and logically belonged to that committee were taken up and passed upon by a committee to which they did not logically belong, namely, the committee that appropriated the very funds about which the investigation was asked. I quite agree with the gentleman.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois, first, whether any bills have been referred at this session of Congress to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, I can not say how many other bills have been referred that have not reached this committee, but as showing the scope of this committee's work as understood by the House I will refer to House resolution No. 13, introduced on the first day of the session by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], which is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department is hereby authorized and directed to examine, so far as the Navy Department is concerned, all of the matters referred to in paragraph 42 of Rule XI of the House of Representatives, and for that purpose it may send for and examine persons and papers and administer oaths; and said committee is authorized to employ a competent stenographer while conducting said examination, and to sit during the sessions of the House, and to report the result of its examination, with any recommendations, to the House.

That resolution was introduced before the House was organized or the committees were appointed and shows clearly a desire on the part of some gentlemen on that side of the House to have this investigation done, and that resolution has been referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman this: Is it his conception of the rules that all expenditures in reference to the Department shall come before these committees on expenditures? In other words, that the fixing of salaries in the Navy Department, or the increase or the reduction of salaries in the Navy Department, should come before his committee; it that his conception?

Mr. BOUTELL. They come before the committee, under the rules, specifically.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman if the reason why this class of legislation has not come before the committee in years past is that it has been legislated for on appropriation bills? Is that the case?

Mr. BOUTELL. As I say, it needs an older man in service in the House than I am to give the reason; but I can, at least, surmise that that was one of the reasons.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman this: If we give these committees the clerks they ask for, so that they may go into action and perform their duties as fixed by the rules, I want to know whether these committees are going to protect their own jurisdiction and stop all legislation on appropriation bills in the future that belongs to the jurisdiction of these committees on expenditures?

Mr. BOUTELL. I think I can well assure the gentleman from Alabama, from my knowledge of the membership of this House, that these committees, if given the opportunity to work, will do their work well.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, I would like to ask my friend from Illinois, for whom I have the utmost respect and in whom I have the highest confidence, that if he is given jurisdiction of this matter, and the House recognizes it by giving him a clerk and actively commissioning his committee, he intends to protect the jurisdiction of that committee?

Mr. BOUTELL. Absolutely.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I will vote for his proposition.

Mr. BOUTELL. One of the first measures we will consider, and one I am very sure that my colleague [Mr. Foss], the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, would be glad to be rid of, is the bill H. R. 16959, equalizing certain salaries in the Navy Department.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that I think one of the most vicious practices that exists in the House of Representatives to-day is general legislation on appropriation bills, especially in reference to increasing salaries. There has never been any decrease that I ever heard of, but, I think, in increasing the salaries the question of decreasing salaries should be considered, too. That never comes on an appropriation bill, and if these committees will assume the jurisdiction that belongs to them and prevent this legislation on appropriation bills, I think they will do a great service to the House of Representatives and to the country.

Mr. BOUTELL. I am very glad to hear that expression from the gentleman from Alabama, who has had such long experience in this House. The revitalizing of these committees is expressly for that purpose—to take care of these legislation bills and of this auditing and examination business.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to a question?

Mr. BOUTELL. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. Is the gentleman from Illinois familiar with the other committees affected by this proposed resolution, as to the number of bills referred to them?

Mr. BOUTELL. I simply know in a general way that probably an equal or greater number of bills than are pending before the committee of which I am the chairman are pending before these other committees. Or, if not pending, I will say to the gentleman from New York, will be pending before those committee re-referred from other committees if these committees are given power to act.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman answer another question?

Mr. BOUTELL. With pleasure.

Mr. GOULDEN. Is the gentleman familiar with the work done by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, and whether that was not good work and well done by the committee presided over by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD]?

Mr. BOUTELL. My understanding is that most excellent and valuable work was done by that committee, and the report made to this House was of great assistance to the membership of the House.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of the Fifty-ninth Congress I had the good fortune to be assigned to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor, and I immediately began an investigation of the history and duties of all the committees on expenditures in the various Departments.

During the first session of that Congress the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, introduced a resolution authorizing that committee to send for papers and all necessary witnesses. That resolution was referred to the Committee on Accounts. The Committee on Accounts reported favorably and an investigation was begun. Immediately thereafter the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor introduced a similar resolution, and for some reason it was referred to the Committee on Rules, which committee never favorably reported the resolution. Then I introduced resolutions empowering all the other committees on expenditures in the various Departments to make similar investigations, and those resolutions were referred to the Committee on Rules. These resolutions were all permitted to lie in the Committee on Rules and were given no favorable consideration. I reintroduced them on the first day of the present session.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What is the explanation of the reference of the resolutions to the Committee on Rules?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I can not see any explanation. You would have to consult the Speaker as to that. The probability is that no investigation of these Departments was desired.

Mr. DALZELL. Let me ask the gentleman if he is talking about this Congress or a previous Congress?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Fifty-ninth Congress. The resolution was permitted to go through for the investigation of the Agricultural Department, that resolution having been referred to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, I will say to the gentleman that these resolutions were not reported, not because of any disinclination on the part of the committee, but because they were not pressed. Resolutions that go to the committee and nobody says anything about them thereafter do not usually come out. The committee is not like the ordinary committees, having regular meetings once or twice a week. It meets when somebody wants it to meet.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of the short session of the Fifty-ninth Congress I addressed the House on this subject and made a plea for the restoration of these committees. Many Members who are around me now will recall the appeal I made to the House at the beginning of the short session for the revival of these committees and the restoration of their powers, and I think the attention of the Committee on Rules was sufficiently directed to the matter. The chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor [Mr. FOSTER of Vermont] made a vigorous effort to have his resolution considered. There are no committees in this House which can be of greater service to the House and the people than the committees for the investigation of the expenditures of the various Departments. Not only ought they to have clerks, but they should be permitted to send for persons and papers and to have the necessary stenographers and power to examine witnesses. The expenditures of the Government are getting beyond our reach. The estimates are for hundreds of millions beyond the revenue, and there is no way in which this House can obtain an understanding of Federal expenditures more effectually than through a revival of these committees.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman explain why it is necessary to have a resolution referred to either the Committee on Accounts or the Committee on Rules for a committee to transact its business?

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the committee is to do the work effectually they will have to have judicial powers.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; not at all. Every officer of the Government is subject to a call by any committee of Congress. We maintain committee stenographers to do that work, and no resolution is necessary to get a stenographer. Any committee can call upon the committee stenographers and get them at any time they are needed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Whenever committees are appointed by this House to investigate they are given power to send for persons and papers and to examine witnesses. These committees on expenditures have powers different from those of other committees. If they have any powers at all they should have the power to investigate the records and power to examine witnesses, and unless you give such powers to them by special resolution they would not be able to carry on the investigations.

Mr. MANN. Why, Mr. Speaker, I have been on committees in Congress for ten years that have examined witnesses continuously and never asked the House for any power—the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on Elections and the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Have they power to administer oaths?

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly they have.

Mr. SHEPPARD. And power to compel the attendance of witnesses?

Mr. MANN. When it comes to the compelling of witnesses that is a different proposition. These committees have power to compel the officials of the Government to appear before them; and whenever any of them shall find an officer declines to appear before that committee, I apprehend there will be no difficulty in obtaining a resolution of the House to compel attendance. All that is necessary is for one of these committees to notify the officer in advance that he is wanted, and they do not need the power to compel any one of these officers to appear before the committee. So that is not an answer and it is no argument. Every committee secures the attendance of officers of the Government before it. In these committees which the gentleman wants to revivify—I do not know whether he is a member of one of them—all he would have to do would be to introduce a resolution which would preferably be referable to that committee, and it could proceed to use that power.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will ask the gentleman why the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] considered it necessary to have a resolution of this kind before he could make the necessary investigation? He is one of the ablest lawyers in this House or in the country.

Mr. MANN. He did not consider it necessary before he made the investigation. He did not bring in the resolution until after he had commenced the investigation, and did it then only because, as I take it, he wanted to have a special stenographer for the use of his committee, and there was not any good reason for that.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The gentleman from Maine is here, and I will ask him why it was he wanted this power?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I was going to answer the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. SCOTT. I will yield to the gentleman from Maine for that purpose.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture did not begin his investigation until all the resolutions introduced by the chairman of that committee were adopted by the House, and the chairman of that committee introduced a resolution authorizing that committee to conduct its examinations by the administering of oaths to the witnesses because he felt that it was a matter of considerable doubt under the rules whether he had any authority to administer an oath to a witness that came before him; and, in order to be sure about it and know that he had the authority, he thought it was necessary to get the resolution through; and after getting it through the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture proceeded with its investigations. I think that answers the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois. I will not say, as an absolute legal proposition, that it was necessary, but I thought it was a necessary and a wise precaution.

Mr. SCOTT. Since I have been a Member of this House the only committee on expenditures which has exercised its functions has been the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, and my membership on the Committee on Agriculture has placed me in a position to testify to the effectiveness and the good results that followed that work. I think I can say that the Department of Agriculture is managed with as excellent business judgment as any Department of our Government, and that the Committee on Agriculture exercises as careful scrutiny over the expenditures of that Department as any general committee of this House is likely to exercise over any Department of the Government. And yet the work that was done by the committee so ably presided over by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] was such as to result in very important changes for the better in the management of the business of the Department of Agriculture, and to make important and valuable suggestions to the Committee on Agriculture. I am thoroughly of the opinion that no committee in this House could be of greater business value to the country than the committees on expenditures in the various Departments if they would actively and effectually exercise the functions which the rules give them.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I wish to yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SPERRY] to offer an amendment.

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend as follows:

"That the chairman of the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic is hereby authorized to appoint a clerk to said committee to serve during the sessions of the Sixtieth Congress, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $6 a day."

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I wish to say, with reference to that amendment, that I hope the House will not adopt it. In considering the resolution that we brought in here for clerks to the expenditures committees, the Committee on Accounts have made an investigation and feel that those committees are entitled to this service. There is a resolution, I think, pending before the Committee on Accounts in reference to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, but that resolution has not been considered or the needs of the committee investigated, and therefore I hope the House will vote down this amendment. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. SPERRY. I wish the gentleman would yield to me to make a statement in reference to this amendment.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. How much time does the gentleman require?

Mr. SPERRY. Only a few minutes.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that we have a committee, although it has not been organized, and there is plenty of business before it. There was a great deal of business before it last year; over 200 letters were received which had to be answered by somebody, and I was obliged to allow my private secretary to answer them. Now, it rests with the Members of the House to say whether the business before that committee shall lie there without being attended to or whether we shall have this clerk, organize the committee, and attend to the business that is legitimately before that committee.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] five minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I want first to call attention to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SPERRY]. It provides for a clerk to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic "for the sessions of this Congress." The Committee on Accounts has reported a resolution giving a clerk to these ten committees on expenditures in the various Departments of the Government for this session only. The provision for the clerk made by the resolution will expire by law on the 1st of June, unless Congress adjourns earlier. If we adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut, you will give him and that committee a clerk for a longer time than you do all these other ten committees. I do not see the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM], who is chairman of the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics; but I have no doubt if he were present, he would offer an amendment to give that committee a clerk; and when you have done that, all the committees of the House will be provided with a clerk during the sessions of Congress.

I do not know that I can add anything to what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] has so well stated in reference to these committees. I have no doubt that there will be one or two of the committees to which clerks are assigned that will do some work. We have evidence of that by the fact that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Agricultural Department, and that committee have done some very valuable work. We have the word of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] that the committee of which he is chairman will begin to do work, and we know from the gentleman's reputation and character that that work will be well done and will be valuable. Beyond that I do not see anybody that proposes to do any work. As far as I am concerned, as long as I have been a member of the Committee on Accounts I have endeavored to see that the money of the Government was not needlessly wasted; and at the same time I have endeavored to see that the necessities of the House and the necessities of the members of the committees and the chairmen of the committees in the discharge of their work should be well supplied from the contingent fund of the House where it is not otherwise supplied.

Now, I have not made a minority report, and I am not here to resist the adoption of the resolution, if the House wants in its wisdom to pass it, but I do not believe that all ten committees are to do the work that one of them has done or that one or two more may do.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor is anxious that his committee should begin work, and the members of the committee are anxious to begin work.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. That is the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER]. Well, I will include that committee. I have no doubt the gentleman from Vermont will proceed, for I know that he is interested and appeared before the committee.

I have no doubt that if the committees would do the work that it was intended for them to do, it would be of great service to the House and to the country. In the impeachment of Secretary Belknap it started from an investigation of a committee over which Senator Blackburn, then a Member of the House, presided. His examination into the affairs of the expenditures of the War Department developed a condition of affairs which resulted in the impeachment and forced resignation of the Secretary of War. I have no doubt that if the committees of the House and the committees of the Senate on the expenditures of the Government in the various Departments would go to investigating the expenditures of the Government, it would save millions and millions of dollars a year. But it has not been done, as a great many other things have not been done in this almost universal conduct of the Government by the Republican party since 1860.

I am not here to oppose the resolution, and I do not desire to put my will or my views in the way of the accommodation of the House. I shall not vote for the resolution as it is, nor shall I vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut; because if you are going to put the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic on this resolution, you might as well put the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics on too. It is not justice to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM], who is not present, to take care of this Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic and not take care of the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics. I certainly shall not vote for this amendment, which provides a clerk for both sessions of Congress, when the resolution simply provides for clerks of these other committees for this session.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MANN. Two or three minutes.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word with reference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SPERRY], the chairman of the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic. In the course of the investigation which I have had to make in reference to the different committees and the moving of the committees I learned that a very large share of the public at large assumes that the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic had control of the bills relating to that subject in the House, and we all know that during the last two years there have been some bills pending before Congress which have excited a lively interest on the part of many of the people in the country. The result has been that the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, as was shown to me, has been flooded with letters and various communications relating to the legislation before the House. The result of this is that the chairman of that committee is at present compelled, with the clerk that he has given to him personally, not only to attend to his personal and official correspondence relating to his own work, but required in addition to attend to the correspondence concerning the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic relating to the work of Congress. It seems to me that that is an injustice to him. He is one of the oldest Members of the House, not quite so lively and spry as my friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] and many others of the House, and it seems to me that if we are increasing the number of clerks to committees at this time, which we may well do in the interest of the public service, we might also give to that committee, for the purpose of helping to do the work which the public, at least, assumes that the committee does, and carrying on the correspondence which the chairman of the committee is obliged to carry on by reason of his chairmanship—that we might also give to the senior Member of the House, as it were, that additional clerk.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say for the information of the House that the resolution reported from the Committee on Accounts, No. 268, provides for a clerk at $6 a day to these different committees on expenditures in the Executive Departments from the time of the passage of the resolution to the end of the present session of Congress, and that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SPERRY] provides for the employment of a clerk to his committee for the sessions of the Sixtieth Congress; his amendment seeks to do more for his committee than does the original for the expenditure committees, and on this account I hope that this amendment will be voted down.

Mr. SPERRY. But he would have to be attending to all of that business, and he ought to be paid for it.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. That may be true; but the more orderly procedure would be to consider the gentleman's proposition separately and on its own merits, apart from the pending resolution, to which the Committee on Accounts has given very careful consideration. Resolution 268, which we have offered, provides for a clerk at $6 a day from the time of the passage of the resolution to the end of the present session. We limit its operation to this session, believing that before adjournment the several committees on expenditures will have had time enough in which to demonstrate or not their usefulness. The Committee on Accounts were convinced that those committees intend to perform their proper functions if given this clerical assistance. There has been no evidence of that kind before us with respect to the few other committees, including that of the gentleman from Connecticut, which are regarded as inactive committees. I move the previous question on the resolution and amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the resolution and amendment to its final passage.

The question was taken and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia) there were—ayes 61, noes 42.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

REPRINT OF BILL.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to Mr. MARSHALL for a reprint of the bill (H. R. 17824) for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or unlabeled paint, turpentine, or linseed oil.

ESTABLISHING A MONETARY SYSTEM.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. PRINCE rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I yield for the submission of a report, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PRINCE. If the gentleman from Iowa will yield to me I will make a report.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The trouble is I have had five applications to hold the motion back, and if I yield to one—however, I am perfectly willing to yield to the gentleman to make a report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois desires to ask unanimous consent, as he informed the Chair, touching a report.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have no objection.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I desire to file his report in favor of the bill H. R. 12677. It was agreed by the committee, Mr. Speaker, that the minority should have ten days in which to file their views, and I ask that they be permitted that length of time in which to file their views.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the minority, as indicated, may have ten days' leave in which to file the views of the minority. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DISTRIBUTION OF HOUSE ROOMS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Select Committee on Distribution of House Rooms.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa withhold his motion?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I withhold it until the report is presented.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the following privileged report, the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

From the Select Committee on Distribution of House Rooms.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman desires to have this report printed in the RECORD. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

House resolution 269.

Mr. MANN, from the Committee on Distribution of House Rooms, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the following assignment of rooms be, and the same is hereby, made, to wit:

For the use of the police in the House Office Building, the room north of and adjoining room permanent No. 185.

To the Committee on the District of Columbia, rooms in the House Office Building permanent Nos. 375, 377, and 377a.

To the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, the room in the Capitol formerly occupied by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

To the Committee on Military Affairs, the room heretofore occupied by the Committee on the District of Columbia and the room in the Capitol formerly occupied by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, said rooms to be properly connected.

To the Committee on Ways and Means, the room heretofore occupied by the Committee on Military Affairs.

To the Committee on Printing, the rooms in the Capitol formerly occupied by the Committee on the Territories and the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, said rooms to be properly connected.

To the Committee on Indian Affairs, as additional room, the space heretofore occupied by the Committee on Printing.

To the Journal index clerk, the room in the Capitol formerly occupied by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Resolved further, That the small room at the end of the corridor, heretofore occupied by the Committee on the District of Columbia, be abolished and the space restored as part of the corridor.

House report 1127.

Mr. MANN, from the Select Committee on Distribution of House Rooms, submitted the following report to accompany H. Res. 269:

The special committee which was directed to report to the House plans for the distribution of rooms in the House Office Building and the redistribution of rooms under the control of the House in the Capitol building, beg leave to make a further partial report and to recommend the adoption of the following resolution, to wit:

Resolved, That the following assignment of rooms be, and the same is hereby, made, to wit:

For the use of the police in the House Office Building, the room north of and adjoining room permanent No. 185.

To the Committee on the District of Columbia, rooms in the House Office Building permanent Nos. 375, 377, and 377a.

To the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, the room in the Capitol formerly occupied by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

To the Committee on Military Affairs, the room heretofore occupied by the Committee on the District of Columbia and the room in the Capitol formerly occupied by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, said rooms to be properly connected.

To the Committee on Ways and Means, the room heretofore occupied by the Committee on Military Affairs.

To the Committee on Printing, the rooms in the Capitol formerly occupied by the Committee on the Territories and the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, said rooms to be properly connected.

To the Committee on Indian Affairs, as additional room, the space heretofore occupied by the Committee on Printing.

To the Journal index clerk, the room in the Capitol formerly occupied by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Resolved further, That the small room at the end of the corridor heretofore occupied by the Committee on the District of Columbia be abolished and the space restored as part of the corridor.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JAMES R. MANN.
JOSEPH H. GAINES.
H. O. YOUNG.
JAMES T. LLOYD.
W. C. ADAMSON.

Mr. CRAIG rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CRAIG. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I can not yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I declined to yield to my colleague from Illinois for that purpose and I can not yield now.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Then, on motion of Mr. HULL of Iowa, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 17288, the Army appropriation bill, with Mr. SHERMAN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose last evening a point of order had been reserved.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I stated yesterday sales to officers and men ought to have 10 per cent added to price of commissary stores, and I desire to correct that statement. The law which was approved July 5, 1884 (23 Stat. L., p. 108), provides "that hereafter all sales of subsistence and supplies to officers and enlisted men shall be made at cost price only." So it is now sold at flat cost price. The gentleman from Illinois requested that I would give him information about how much this so-called "coffee" money would amount to. It amounts to exactly 21 cents a day per man while en route, and of course the amount could be only figured by the number of men and the distance they traveled; but it is fixed at 21 cents per day per man. There is a new provision in here that I did not call attention to yesterday in regard to extra-duty pay to cooks, on page 25 of the bill. That is only at four recruiting stations. The men are now issued their rations, and the only money they have to employ cooks is out of what they can save from their rations, and at these recruiting stations it has been found impossible for them to keep cooks with what amount they can save; so the Department asks for this in order that the recruit may have his food properly cooked and served until he is assigned to his command. Another new provision that I did not call attention to yesterday is found on page 23, "for issuance of toilet kits to recruits upon their first enlistment."

The Department requires every recruit to provide himself with what is called a "toilet kit," combs, hairbrushes, toothbrushes, and the usual toilet articles that the regulations require every soldier to have. Heretofore they have furnished this to the recruit, and when he went to get his first payment from the paymaster he found that he was in debt about $4 for what the Government had compelled him to get. This will provide for the Government issuing it to him in the first instance, and then under the regulations require him to keep the kit up from his own earnings. These, I think, are all the new provisions in this paragraph to which attention has not been fully called heretofore.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] withdraw his point of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the explanation made by the gentleman from Iowa is quite full, but I would like to ask him about one more matter in reference to it. The existing law provides "for other necessary expenses incident to the purchase, testing, care, preservation, issue, sale, and accounting for subsistence supplies for the Army." I do not find any other provision.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is under the present law.

Mr. MANN. That is the present law. I did not find any other provision for the sale to officers of the Army. Now, in the bill you have a provision for sales to officers and enlisted men of the Army. Can the gentleman say whether that is intended to change the law and to permit new regulations, or whether that is solely in the rearrangement of this paragraph for the purpose of carrying out the existing provisions of law and the existing regulations?

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is a law both for the officers and men.

Mr. TAWNEY. Has the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] examined the current military appropriation bill to ascertain whether or not that language is not carried in the current law under another paragraph or in another part of the bill?

Mr. MANN. It is carried——

Mr. HAY. It is in the current law.

Mr. TAWNEY. I find it is in the current law, on examination.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now, here is the law as it stands upon the statute books as to both officers and men:

The officers of the subsistence department shall procure and keep for sale to officers and enlisted men at cost prices, for cash or on credit, such articles as may from time to time be designated by the Inspector-General of the Army. An account of sales on credit shall be kept, and amounts due for the same shall be reported monthly to the Paymaster-General.

Mr. MANN. What is the date of that law?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is 1884.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] that the very same words in this bill are in the current law.

Mr. MANN. I wish the gentleman would show me where they are.

Mr. TAWNEY. They are not at the same place?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No.

Mr. MANN. I can assure the gentleman this authority under subsistence supplies and this authority under quartermaster's supplies do not cover the same ground at all. This provision is in the portion as to quartermaster's supplies and not as to subsistence supplies.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is in.

Mr. HAY. I hold in my hand the original appropriation taken from the current law, and in the first part of the law the words will be found "and for sale to officers and enlisted men of the Army"—sales under the subsistence department.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. What I wanted to emphasize was, even if that had not been in before under the law, it would be in order now. But it is in the present law and has always been carried in appropriation bills.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether this change in the location of this language is recommended by the Department in the estimate submitted to Congress?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; and set out fully in the estimate.

Mr. TAWNEY. Can the gentleman state why the law requiring the Departments to submit their estimates in the form of the current appropriation bill is not observed by the Department so that we may be able to make comparisons? I find a great many changes in this bill, and in the estimate as submitted do not agree at all with the current law. Now, we have a law which requires the Departments to submit their estimates in the form in which the current law has been written.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; and I want to say to the gentleman that on this very paragraph within the very recent past the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] found great fault because they mixed their items up, and went from payments to purchases and from purchases to payments, so that you had to look all through everything in order to know what it applied to. In this they have grouped all the purchases in the first part and all the payments in the second part of the paragraph; and the effect of it is that it marvelously simplifies the ability of Members of Congress keeping track of what they are.

Mr. TAWNEY. Provided that the estimates are sent in in that form next year.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They will be. The committee were all pleased with this change, and when we come to the Quartermaster's Department you will find that there is a rearrangement of a very large number of items, for the reason that we put a proviso in the Army bill last year which segregated what had been in one lump sum of fourteen or fifteen millions. We have divided up in half a dozen different sums, so that we might know what was done with each sum.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer some amendments simply to correct the punctuation, such as to add an "s" and change the punctuation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the clerical corrections suggested by the chairman of the committee? The Chair hears none, and the correction will be made.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 23, line 2, after the word "observation," a semicolon should be inserted; on same page, line 6, after the word "observation," a semicolon should be inserted; and on the same line the word "issue" should read issues; on line 19 the word "chest" should read chests; on page 24, line 17, after the word "orders," a semicolon should be inserted.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

Regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, including their care and protection, consisting of stoves and heating apparatus required for heating offices, hospitals, barracks, and quarters, and recruiting stations, and United States military prison; also ranges and stoves, and appliances for cooking and serving food at posts and on transports, and repair and maintenance of such heating and cooking appliances; of fuel and lights for enlisted men, including recruits, guards, hospitals, storehouses, and offices, and for sale to officers, and including also fuel and engine supplies required in the operation of modern batteries at established posts; for post bakeries; for ice machines and their maintenance where required for the health and comfort of the troops and for cold storage; for the construction, operation, and maintenance of laundries at military posts in the United States and its island possessions; for the necessary furniture, text-books, paper, and equipment for the post schools and libraries; for the tableware and mess furniture for kitchens and mess halls, each and all for the enlisted men, including recruits; of forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen of the Quartermaster's Department at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field, and for the horses of the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; and nothing in the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1908, or any other act, shall hereafter be held or construed so as to deprive officers of the Army, wherever on duty in the military service of the United States, of forage, bedding, shoeing, or shelter for their authorized number of horses, or of any means of transportation or maintenance therefor for which provision is made by the terms of this act; of straw for soldiers' bedding, and of stationery, including blank books for the Quartermaster's Department, certificates for discharged soldiers, blank forms for the Pay and Quartermaster's departments, and for printing department orders and reports, $9,000,000: Provided, That no part of the appropriations for the Quartermaster's Department shall be expended on printing, unless the same shall be done by contract after due notice and competition, except in such cases as the emergency will not admit of the giving notice of competition, and in cases where it is impracticable to have the necessary printing done by contract the same may be done, with the approval of the Secretary of War, by the purchase of material and hire of the necessary labor for the purpose. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, whenever the ice machines, steam laundries, and electric plants shall not come in competition with private enterprise for sale to the public, and in the opinion of the Secretary of War it becomes necessary to the economical use and administration of such ice machines, steam laundries, and electric plants as have been or may hereafter be established in pursuance of law, surplus ice may be disposed of, laundry work may be done for other branches of the Government, and surplus electric light and power may be sold on such terms and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the funds received from such sales and in payment for such laundry work shall be used to defray the cost of operation of said ice, laundry, and electric plants; and the sales and expenditures herein provided for shall be accounted for in accordance with the methods prescribed by law, and any sums remaining, after such cost of maintenance and operation have been defrayed, shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation from which the cost of operation of such plant is paid.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order on that. I would like to ask the gentleman if this is the same provision as the current law?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is the same provision as made in the current law. There is no change at all in this paragraph.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question. I observe that the appropriation in its total in the current law for the fiscal year 1908 is $6,500,000, and the proposed appropriation for the same purpose is $9,000,000, or $2,500,000 in excess of the current law. Will the gentleman explain the necessity of this very great increase?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. One necessity is because of the increased expenditures as shown by the Quartermaster-General of the Army.

Mr. TAWNEY. Increased expenditures in what respect?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The larger number of posts that are to be heated; the larger number of persons that are to be maintained; the larger purchases of feed and the larger amount of expenditures in all lines, and about, I will say, the amount that was appropriated, with the deficiency the gentleman himself said was necessary for this year.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to ask the gentleman another question; whether the appropriations or increase in this item is made upon the theory which was presented to his committee and to all other appropriation committees, at the time the estimates were made, that the prices had increased so much, and whether the committee took into account the fact that on these various items the prices have very greatly decreased, and in all probability will continue to decrease for the next fiscal year?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman understands that purchases were dealt with by the Quartermaster-General, and he wanted almost a round million more than this. We tried to cut it down as close as we could to the deficiencies and what we had appropriated this year. Our idea was, after the Committee on Appropriations had passed upon it and stated that they must have this additional amount, we could not go much below what had been given this year. We cut off nearly a million of dollars in the estimates for this one item.

Mr. MANN. I want to ask the gentleman a question. I see there is a provision in here at the top of page 27, endeavoring to construe an act of last year. What is the purpose of that, and why?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There was a provision made here, which, I think, covers all Departments, that the horses were not to be used for anything but Department work. Under the permanent law—now, I may be mistaken in this, but I am giving my impression, and if I am in error members of the committee may correct me, for I am not infallible in these things. Under the permanent law every officer, from a major to a major-general, is entitled to so many horses and entitled to forage for so many horses, graded according to rank. A major, I think, has two.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Captain, major, and colonel.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. A brigadier-general, three; a major-general, four. Now, they do not keep that many, but if they do keep horses here at all, the permanent law that gives them the right to keep horses would be void unless they are exempt from the provision of what is known as the "Landis amendment." If the latest order is to be carried out, it will be absolutely necessary for every officer of the Army in Washington and every other city to keep horses for his private use, or he is liable to be mustered out for not being able to ride.

Mr. MANN. The Landis amendment is not in the current year's appropriation law.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, no.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is permanent law.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman mean that an Army officer must be able to ride on account of the order that was recently issued?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. He goes before a court-martial if he is not able to ride.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean to say that a major assigned to staff duty up here gets a horse and forage at the expense of the Government?

Mr. TAWNEY. The law says two horses.

Mr. MANN. I have been trying to find out for a long while what Army officers did get. This is a new lead to me.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Every mounted officer has rations issued to his horse.

Mr. MANN. Does every major?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Every major that keeps a horse.

Mr. MANN. But take the case of a brigadier-general or a major-general here in Washington on staff duty. Does he get a horse and an allowance of forage?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They buy their own horses, but as a matter of fact very few of them keep horses. Some of them do, but very few. They do not want to keep them, as a matter of fact, because it is an expense to them even with the allowance the Government gives them; but if they are compelled to practice riding so many hours a day, the gentleman can see that they will have to keep horses, no matter where they are located. If they have got to take a 90-mile ride every year, the gentleman will see the necessity for their practicing up between times.

Mr. MANN. I am told that some of them practice now during every afternoon, which gives them an opportunity to have a pleasure ride while they ought to be working in the Department. That does not apply to all of them, of course.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is something that this bill has nothing to do with. My understanding is that it does not include the captains or the lieutenants, but all field officers are compelled to take these annual rides, and that they are let off duty, I think, so many hours per week for the purpose of practicing in horsemanship; but it is a regulation.

Mr. MANN. Do these officers get compensation for forage, bedding, shoeing, and shelter?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; they get nothing at all unless they keep a horse. There is no commutation of rations for a horse.

Mr. MANN. Do they keep the horse and then get paid the amount, or how is that done?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No.

Mr. MANN. Does the Government keep the horse?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the Government keeps the horse, it keeps him in a Government stable. There are several quartermaster stables here, and they have the amount of forage provided by the Army Regulations, as the feed for a cavalry horse or an artillery horse, issued for the care of that horse, but they get no commutation whatever.

Mr. CAPRON. Just fodder.

Mr. MANN. I have a great deal of sympathy for those fat officers who are required to take a military ride because our strenuous President believes in it.

Mr. MADDEN. The officers are not furnished the horses at the expense of the Government, are they?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They are not supposed to be.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the fact?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If they are furnished at the expense of the Government, of course the Government simply feeds its own horses, and the officer has nothing to do with that.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the fact?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think the Government furnishes a good many horses.

Mr. TAWNEY. We appropriate no money for that.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would say to the gentleman that I would be in favor of reorganizing this thing.

Mr. MADDEN. Reorganizing it up or down?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Cutting off the extra pay for this reason: When we separated the Coast and Heavy Artillery, one branch went into the unmounted service and the other into the mounted service, and I understand every officer of Field Artillery gets $200 a year more, if he is a captain, on account of being a mounted officer. I think he ought to have something more, because his extra expense is a little more; but I think it is too much as it is to-day. When they go to the Philippines, every mounted captain gets $200 more than an infantry captain.

Mr. MADDEN. Why?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Because that is fixed by law.

Mr. MADDEN. What was the idea of it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Because he is supposed to own his own horse and care for one horse outside of rations.

Mr. MADDEN. Does he not detail a member of his company to take care of his horse?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I understand not, but he does employ a member of the company very frequently at much less than $200 a year.

Mr. MANN. Is he required to employ him?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Another reason why I think it is unfair to an infantry officer is because we give 10 per cent additional pay in the Philippine Islands, and a mounted officer gets 10 per cent additional on the $200, not only on the flat pay, but on the $200. And yet no officer mounted in the Philippine Islands does furnish his own horse. The Government furnishes all and saves money by it, because you take your horse over and pay the expense, and then they are not allowed to come back on account of the regulations of the Agricultural Department prohibiting the importation of animals from the Tropics.

Mr. MADDEN. As a matter of fact, does not the Government furnish all the horses not only in this country, but in other countries?

Mr. MANN. Does not this bill carry an item or items under which various horses are purchased for various officials of the Government?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. No.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman shakes his head, but he ought to be better informed, because it does—not only to Army officers, but to other officers of the Government, and if it were known how many they did furnish——

Mr. MADDEN. I want to ask the gentleman a further question. Is there any provision in the bill, or any regulation of the Army, requiring the officers to take automobile rides; and if so, who furnishes the automobiles and drivers?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I know of no provision on that subject.

Mr. MADDEN. Are there any automobiles in the service?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not know of any; they have used automobiles at the grand maneuvers, but the officers paid for them out of their own pockets.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, before offering a formal amendment on another subject, I want to say a word about the question of horses. It is considered in every army a very important thing that mounted officers in the field should own their own horses. An officer ought to have the best horse, and ought to have a pride in it. It has always been the regulation that they should own their own horses and ride their own horses. For this there was always allowed a difference of $200 a year. The $200 a year represents partly the cost of the horse which has to be bought every now and then, every two or three years; and, second, it represents the expense of keeping the horse, for every officer, whether he has a Government horse or his own private horse, must pay $7 a month, which is the average price for taking care of that horse, or $84 a year.

And, thirdly, it represents an item that is rather hard to estimate, but the value of which everybody will see is considerable—that is, the wear and tear upon the saddle, saddlecloth, bridle, boots, and clothes. The infantry officer is not required to furnish riding breeches, riding boots, or spurs, or gauntlet gloves, or other equipment used on horseback, which, all together, including the saddle, would come to a cost of $100 or $150, and which are used up, when there is constant saddle work, very fast, as anybody knows who has been in the saddle three or four hours a day for nearly a week.

Now, the $200 is not an exorbitant allowance for all these things. It is rather under than over what the officer has to expend.

The difficulty, however, is that for the officers that are in the Philippines the Government has had to provide horses, and in many cases it has become the custom to allow an officer to use an Army horse. Under these circumstances this allowance ought to be reduced. It should not be taken away, because the wear and tear of the clothes and equipments and the payment of $7 a month to the man to take care of the horse remains. But it ought to be reduced.

On the other hand, an officer who lives here in Washington or elsewhere, and who gets mounted pay, ought either to own and ride a horse suitable for use in all respects by the Government or else he ought not to have mounted pay.

I will say that this is only one of the questions that will arise if the question of the pay of officers comes into the House. If the increase of pay of officers is taken up in the House, I shall offer a provision which will take care of this subject, and do it fairly to the men in the field and to the men at home.

I make this explanation only because there seems to be some confusion on the subject, and naturally so, as it involves so many items.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. If there be nothing further to be said on this subject, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 26, line 10, insert, after the second word "and," the words "for and."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would like to have some explanation. It looks to me that this is mixing things up awfully.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Let me read it as it would be if the amendment were adopted:

Of fuel and lights for enlisted men, including recruits, guards, hospitals, storehouses, and officers, and for and for sale to officers, etc.

Mr. Chairman, the reason for this is this, that up to last year lights in the garrisons and various posts were always paid for by the officers. Last year a proviso was introduced into the bill which said:

Provided, That hereafter heat and light actually necessary for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men shall be furnished at the expense of the United States under such regulations as the Secretary of War may provide.

Mr. MANN. It is the intention of the gentleman to furnish these free to the officers?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. To that extent only, as given by the law last year, and I don't care whether—well, you might put in for enlisted men and officers. Part of it they pay for and part they do not. What is furnished as necessary is not paid for. If they take more, they have to pay for it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the present appropriation bill carries provisions making permanent law of the issuance to officers for their fuel and lights, but it also, under the regulations, limits it to each rank for so much. An officer going beyond that has to buy what he gets. Under the present law, with the language we have here, they have carried out that provision by issuing them free up to a certain amount, according to each rank, and selling them any surplus heat or light they may want to use.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there any difficulty under this language?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have never heard of any. I have no objection if the gentleman thinks that this makes it clearer.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Last year there was an express provision that it should be supplied to officers free.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is permanent law.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. This year it ought to provide for the expense of furnishing lights to officers.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. On the statute books the same provision that is now carried in this bill last year is now permanent law, and permanent law must be construed, I should imagine, with this, although if the gentleman thinks his language makes it clearer I have no objection.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that this language is the language submitted by the Department, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey is avowedly for the purpose of giving something more to these officers in the way of fuel, etc. The committee has gone over this very carefully, and I think we better stand by the committee. We don't know what the effect of this amendment will be. I don't.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not know exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making an inquiry. Since passing page 20, line 21, I have received from the Department a decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury which I think changes the meaning that the committee intended to give to the law. Line 21 on page 20 is as follows:

For subsistence, mileage, and commutation of quarters to officers of the National Guard attending service and garrison schools, $10,000.

Now, as I understand, it was the intention of the committee and of the House when that paragraph was incorporated in the bill of 1903, and it has been so construed up until recently, that this gave to the officers of the National Guard the same pay and allowance that was given to officers in the Regular Army of similar rank, and it was the understanding that the term "and commutation of quarters" included allowance and commutation for heat and light. That was the ruling of the Judge-Advocate-General. Under this interpretation, holding that it did include allowance for heat and light, the officers in those schools received the pay. Now, within the past few weeks the Comptroller of the Treasury has rendered an opinion in which he holds the words "commutation of quarters" do not include allowance for heat and light, and he has accordingly called on the officers who have been attending these garrison schools and who have received this allowance to pay it back. Of course we can not relieve them from this, but I want to ask the gentleman if he would not be willing now to revert to this section for the purpose of amending it so as to make it read, "for subsistence, mileage, and commutation of quarters"——

Mr. MANN. Tell us where that is.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Page 20, line 21—so as to make it read, "for subsistence, mileage, and commutation of quarters, to include allowance for heat and light."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will ask the gentleman to wait until we get through with the bill. I think if we insert right after the word "quarters" "including fuel and light," that would cover it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I am perfectly willing to wait, if that can be done. The reason I ask it now is I thought if we could not return and put it in its proper place, it would not be subject to the point of order if offered now as an amendment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It would be subject now, but we can go back when we conclude the bill. I think the gentleman is right, that it ought to include fuel and light. If you are going to send them to these schools at all, you ought to provide for them as other officers of the Army.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman from Iowa would not object to returning to that section at the conclusion of the reading of the bill?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would like to look into the question a little more and see this decision of the Comptroller.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I have the decision here.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It does not increase the amount?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It does not carry any additional appropriation whatever. The same appropriation will cover it that has covered it.

Mr. MANN. It would cost more money.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; it does not.

Mr. MANN. If nobody gets any money now under the language, it would.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It would not carry a larger appropriation, I will say, but it will, of course, cost more money. The officers of the National Guard who are attending these schools are now obliged to pay for what was heretofore paid by the Government and what we intended the Government should pay. Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe there is no branch of the service that is more entitled to a liberal appropriation than the Medical Corps of the Army.

It has been our experience and it has been the experience of all people in all wars that more men die of disease than die on the battlefield, and one of the things we learned from the recent war between Japan and Russia, and the thing that is best worth remembering, is that three out of four who made up the death list of the Japanese army died of wounds received on the battlefield, whereas in the civil war three out of four men whom we lost died of disease in the hospitals. It is impossible for any man, any physician, any medical officer in the Army to take charge of raw recruits and conduct the medical arm of the service in an efficient manner unless he has had the proper training and the proper experience, and believing this, we have provided these schools where these National Guard officers may attend and get this training.

But as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said a few days ago—and I think I could get unanimous consent to the proposition that he is more accurately informed on all details of legislation here than any other man in the House—he did not believe any man on earth knew what the pay of an Army officer was, and that statement was agreed to by my friend from Virginia [Mr. HAY], one of the ranking Democrats on the committee. When Congress passed this law we believed we were making provision for all these allowances and commutations, and so forth, but the Comptroller of the Treasury has by construction decided that we did not, and my proposition is simply to put into the law now what we thought was there all the time and what we intended to put there when that law was enacted.

As there seems to be some doubt of my securing unanimous consent to return to the paragraph, I think I will say now what I have to say on this subject and in amplification of what I suggested yesterday on the Foster amendment.

We ought to do all in our power to encourage the medical officers in the National Guard to attend these schools. We have proceeded, ever since the formation of this Government, upon the idea that "a well-regulated militia is necessary to the security of a free state."

So insistent indeed were our fathers upon that proposition that the very first Congress which assembled under the Constitution proposed that it be written into the organic law of the land, and so it was. There can be no well-regulated militia which is not provided with an efficient medical corps. This is the sine qua non.

The experience of all people in all the wars of history has put this beyond the pale of controversy.

Mr. CANDLER. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. CANDLER. I agree fully with all my friend has said, and we all recall the sad experiences of the Spanish war, when our boys died like sheep in the hospitals. Now, does not the gentleman think that it would be greatly to the advantage of the whole service if the National Guard were permitted to go into encampment with the regulars and thereby enable their surgeons to reap the benefit of experience in camp with Regular Army surgeons?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Most assuredly, Mr. Chairman; and I will say further that I believe that that alone would have been worth the appropriation asked for by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] in the amendment which he offered yesterday and which was voted down. My colleague and myself can both lay the flattering unction to our souls, however, that we voted for the proposition, and that it failed through no fault of ours.

Mr. CANDLER. And does not the gentleman also think that the service might also be improved by giving the Regular Army surgeon an opportunity to associate with and observe the methods of administration of the medical corps of the Mississippi National Guard?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I most heartily concur in that statement, too, Mr. Chairman. I stated in the course of the debate yesterday that the State of Mississippi took a special pride in the efficiency of her medical corps, and I meant all I said. It is a source of much satisfaction and pride not only to the members of our guard, but to the whole State, and since the subject has been broached I will state that Major Dowdy, of the Regular Army, who was sent to attend the annual encampment of the Mississippi National Guard in 1905, reported to the governor of Mississippi that the hospital service at that encampment was more nearly perfect than any he had ever seen in the National Guard or in the Regular Army.

Reference to our experience in the Spanish war was made just now. Of course conditions were not normal in that war, because so few of our troops were ever actually engaged in battle; but the sad fact remains that in that war we lost fourteen men by disease to every one who was killed by a bullet. We were willing to spend the money, to hire the surgeons, and to buy the equipment, but we had been practicing this foolish economy before that war, and of course it found us lamentably unprepared, and nowhere was this unpreparedness more glaring and nowhere so frightful in its consequences as in the Medical Corps of the Army. Surgeons were employed and put in the hospitals who were thoroughly competent to manage a ward at Bellevue, but it was quite a different matter to administer a field hospital at Miami or Chickamauga. In a very interesting article read by Lieut. Col. Homer I. Jones, A. S. G., Indiana National Guard, before the Association of Military Surgeons at the Jamestown Exposition, he said, among other things.

Speaking of the medical corps of the volunteer troops in the Spanish war:

It is but just to all to admit that the medical officers generally were men of medical and surgical ability—capable of doing whatever might have been demanded of them in the care of the sick and injured; but I believe, with few exceptions, they were lacking in all knowledge of military subjects and incapable of performing the military part of their duties.

Trained diagnosticians, trained clinicians, and thorough physicians they were, but trained military surgeons in all which that term implies, too often they were not.

And again:

If it should be the lot of this country to be engaged at some future time in war, it is my opinion that her greatest need would be thoroughly trained medical officers—thoroughly trained, not only in medicine and surgery, but also in sanitation and hygiene, in military correspondence, reports, hospital corps work, and all other things which may come to them in the discharge of their duty.

To teach officers their duties after they are given their commissions necessarily prolongs the task of making an army, and, if possible, such delay should be avoided. It can be avoided to some extent if the medical officers of the State forces are efficient.

Every day during those sad months in the hospitals we watched the struggle between—

Weary war with the bated breath;
Skeleton boy against skeleton death.

Never a day that we did not hear bitter imprecations called down upon the head of our Medical Corps, and yet it was not their fault. It was the fault of the Congresses which had preceded that war and which had failed to make proper provision for the training of the Medical Corps; and if grim-visaged war shall come again, as come it surely will, the sin of unpreparedness will rest upon our heads if we fail now to provide for the necessary training of our surgeons.

I am opposed to a large army. It is unnecessary and unwise to maintain a large military establishment in times of peace. When war comes a volunteer army can readily be put into the field, but it will be too late then to train surgeons. While they are learning the details of administration, or army hygiene, of camp police; while they are delving into the manuals and endeavoring to equip a field hospital, the brave boys who answered the call to arms will be dying with preventable diseases in the insanitary hospitals, all for the lack of proper medical assistance. We can call out and equip an army of 200,000 men on very short notice.

We can do more. We can equip an army of 500,000 men, brave, patriotic, and intelligent, but when their hands are tied by the muster-in oath they are as helpless to care for themselves as babies.

In a memorandum which he prepared for the President in 1904 the Surgeon-General of the Army, among other things, said:

In the Spanish war the country was scandalized by a monthly death rate from disease, which rose from 2.15 per thousand in July to 4.08 in August, but fell again to 2.15 in September.

He stated further that 600 wounded soldiers were permitted to lie on the battlefield for more than ten days after the battle of second Bull Run in August, 1862, and that many of them died of starvation. Proceeding, he said:

That this was not one of the unavoidable horrors of war, but was, as stated by the Surgeon-General, due to defective medical organization is evidenced by the fact that after the organization of the ambulance service of Letterman such occurrences ceased in the Army of the Potomac. After the battle of Fredericksburg, December 13, 1862, and Chancellorsville, May 2, 1863, although the Army was defeated the field was cleared of wounded without confusion.

It has been more than fifty years since Florence Nightingale, a ministering angel, went to relieve the suffering soldiers in the hospitals of the Crimea. Men were dying in one camp for the want of medicine, which was piled in heaps in another camp not 20 miles away. The medicine was bought and shipped to the army in ample abundance, just as we would be willing to pour out money to relieve the suffering when war is upon us. But there was that lack of administrative ability which can come only from experience and training, and that nobody had. Change the names of men and places, and this extract from McCarthy's History of Our Own Times, giving an account of the conditions in the Crimea, would pass anywhere as a daily news item in our papers during the summer of 1898:

The hospitals for the sick and wounded at Scutari were in a wretchedly disorganized condition. They were for the most part in an absolutely chaotic condition as regards arrangement and supply.

In some instances medical stores were left to decay at Varna or were found lying useless in the holds of vessels in Balaklava Bay, which were needed for the wounded at Scutari. The medical officers were able and zealous men; the stores were provided and paid for so far as our government was concerned; but the stores were not brought to the medical men. These had their hands all but idle, their eyes and souls tortured by the sight of sufferings which they were unable to relieve for want of the commonest appliances of the hospital. "One man's preserved meat," exclaimed Punch with bitter humor, "is another man's poison."

Fifty years later the British soldier was sent to war again, into the Transvaal country. Let me give a few figures which I quote from official records. In the two years of that war 63,644 soldiers were invalided home on account of disease, and 8,221 on account of wounds. Deaths from disease in that same army were seven times more than deaths from wounds.

Longmore's tables based on records for the past two hundred years, and which are accepted as the most accurate and reliable, show that there has rarely been a war of any great duration in which four men have not died from disease to every one who died from a bullet.

In the Russo-Turkish war 80,000 men died from disease and 20,000 from wounds. In the Crimean war the allied forces lost 50,000 men from disease and 2,000 from bullets. In the war with China in 1894 the sick in the Japanese army were eight times more numerous than the wounded. In the recent war with Russia the sick and the wounded in the Japanese army were exactly equal in numbers.

In the Chinese war the Japanese lost three men from disease to every one who was killed in battle or died from wounds received in battle. When the Chinese war ended Russia stepped in and robbed Japan of the fruits of her dearly bought victory. Russia was great and powerful and Japan was forced to yield. She went home, however, and determined to prepare for a death struggle which she realized must come with Russia. We all know the result. The world has rung with the praises of the generals who commanded her victorious armies and the admirals who swept the Russian fleet from the face of the ocean; but, Mr. Chairman, was the victory theirs? Let us look again at the figures.

I have done a little arithmetic which I believe will be interesting. On the 1st of May, 1905, the Japanese had lost in killed during the war to that date 43,892 men. Suppose her death rate from disease had borne the same ratio to her killed as England's had in the Boer war—that is, 7 to 1. Her deaths then would have reached the appalling figure of 307,044. To whom, then, shall we give the glory of the victory at Metre Hill and Mukden? To the general who commanded or to the surgeon who had preserved from death the men who composed this mighty army of 253,152 fighting men who, but for the skill, but for the masterful administration of a matchless hospital system, would then have been sleeping upon that silent field—

The bivouac of the dead.

We are training our militia so that we may not be unprepared when the tocsin of war shall be sounded. We will then send them out to do battle against two foes. One they will meet upon the red field of battle amid the pomp and glorious circumstance of war. Of every thousand whose lives must be sacrificed then, this proud foe will claim 200, while the other 800 will fall before that silent reaper who will stalk through the camp at nighttime unseen by the sentinel and unmarked by the victim, the grim, gaunt specter of disease.

Who then is the hero? The general who leads his battalions against the panoplied army with banners and loses 200 men or the surgeon who out of the lime light of the world's vain glory makes ceaseless and successful warfare against that real enemy whose sickle is claiming the other 800? His name is not blazoned in the headlines of the daily papers; no holidays are made to his honor; no triumph is awarded him upon his home-coming; but somewhere to-day in the Flowery Kingdom, unless he has already passed from the scenes of this turbulent earth, there is the hero who reorganized and administered the medical corps of the Japanese army and who, by reversing the figures of all preivous wars and returning a loss of only one by disease to four by bullets, has won and deserves, though he will never receive, the crowning glory of that war. All honor to the army surgeon. None of the stern joy is his. None of the glamour; none of the pomp and glorious circumstance. The bugle's blare and the cannon's roar may fire the soul upon the battle's crest, but far to the rear, where the dying are, with no sound but the groans of the wounded, he sees the bleeding business that is done and sets about to smooth war's wrinkled front.

We ought to have more colonels; yes, we ought to create more generals in the Medical Corps, and endeavor thereby to attract men of genius into the service. We have officers now sufficient for an army of 100,000 men, but we have surgeons sufficient only for an army of 42,000. I tremble when I think of the price our soldiers will pay for our folly when war again shall come upon us.

I see my time has expired, Mr. Chairman, and I will ask therefore that I may revise my remarks before they appear in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Incidental expenses: Postage; cost of telegrams on official business received and sent by officers of the Army; extra pay to soldiers employed on extra duty, under the direction of the Quartermaster's Department, in the erection of barracks, quarters, and storehouses, in the construction of roads and other constant labor for periods of not less than ten days, and as clerks for post quartermasters at military posts, and for prison overseers at posts designated by the War Department for the confinement of general prisoners, and for noncommissioned officers of the United States military prison guard: Provided, That hereafter no part of the moneys appropriated for use of the Quartermaster's Department shall be used in payment of extra-duty pay for the Army service men in the Quartermaster's Department at West Point; for expenses of expresses to and from frontier posts and armies in the field, of escorts to paymasters and other disbursing officers, and to trains where military escorts can not be furnished; expenses of the interment of officers killed in action or who die when on duty in the field, or at military posts or on the frontiers, or when traveling under orders, and of noncommissioned officers and soldiers; and in all cases where such expenses would have been lawful claims against the Government, reimbursement may be made of expenses heretofore or hereafter incurred by individuals of burial and transportation of remains of officers, including acting assistant surgeons, not to exceed the amount now allowed in the cases of officers, and for the reimbursement in the cases of enlisted men not exceeding the amount now allowed in their cases, may be paid out of the proper funds appropriated by this act, and the disbursing officers shall be credited with such reimbursement heretofore made; but hereafter no reimbursement shall be made of such expenses incurred prior to the 21st day of April, 1898; authorized office furniture, hire of laborers in the Quartermaster's Department, including the hire of interpreters, spies, or guides for the Army; compensation of clerks and other employees to the officers of the Quartermaster's Department, and clerks, foremen, watchmen, and organist for the United States military prison, and incidental expenses of recruiting; for the apprehension, securing, and delivering of deserters, including escaped military prisoners, and the expenses incident to their pursuit, and no greater sum than $50 for each deserter or escaped military prisoner shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be paid to any civil officer or citizen for such services and expenses; for a donation of $5 to each dishonorably discharged prisoner upon his release from confinement, under court-martial sentence, involving dishonorable discharge; for the following expenditures required for the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of light artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, the authorized number of officers' horses, and for the trains, to wit: Hire of veterinary surgeons, purchase of medicines for horses and mules, picket ropes, blacksmith's tools and materials, horseshoes and blacksmith's tools for the cavalry service, and for the shoeing of horses and mules, and such additional expenditures as are necessary and authorized by law in the movements and operations of the Army, and of military posts, and not expressly assigned to any other department, $2,200,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to the fact that the language on page 29, under the proviso, "that hereafter no part of the moneys appropriated for the use of the Quartermaster's Department shall be used in payment of extra-duty pay for the Army service men in the quartermaster's department at West Point," is now permanent law. It is carried in the appropriation bill of last year and it makes it very difficult for Members of Congress and people keeping track of legislation to do so, and by keeping these permanent provisions of the law in the appropriation bill, besides padding it out, it makes it much more difficult for the committee, and I suggest to your committee that it might as well be stricken out.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I can see no objection whatever to striking it out. It was put in last year because we provided extra-duty men for West Point and relieved the Quartermaster's Department of that expense.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 8, 9, and 10, and line 11, up to and including the word "Point."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 29, beginning with line 8, strike out lines 8, 9, and 10, and line 11, including the semicolon, after the words "West Point."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Horses for cavalry, artillery, and engineers: For the purchase of horses for the cavalry, artillery, and engineers, service school and staff colleges, and for the Indian scouts, and for such infantry and members of the Hospital Corps in field campaigns as may be required to be mounted, and the expenses incident thereto, $514,678: Provided, That the number of horses purchased under this appropriation, added to the number now on hand, shall be limited to the actual needs of the mounted service, including reasonable provisions for remounts, and, unless otherwise ordered by the Secretary of War, no part of this appropriation shall be paid out for horses not purchased by contract after competition duly invited by the Quartermaster's Department and an inspection under the direction and authority of the Secretary of War. When practicable, horses shall be purchased in the open market at all military posts or stations, when needed, at a maximum price to be fixed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for breeding purposes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman what is the necessity for this new language, "including reasonable provisions for remounts?"

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is a very strong statement which was given to the committee, that the life of a horse that is purchased now is only three or four years, while if they had the privilege of purchasing younger horses and properly breaking them and keeping them in the camps of the Army until the time they were fit for use in the cavalry, the life of a horse would be as much as ten years, as I remember now. It was also believed that they wanted a little authority for starting some breeding stations, and the committee believes that the Government of the United States should not go into that business. In the hearings it was said by the Quartermaster-General frankly that they should purchase some studs and distribute them around near the different posts, and select certain mares that were properly formed for breeding the kind of horses the Army wanted, and furnish them free, with the option of the Government to buy the colts when they reach the age of 2 years.

But the committee was, I think, unanimously opposed to going into that business, and so the last provision was put in the paragraph. We give them the authority to buy the younger horses and have them properly handled and broken and kept for a year or two. It will make a less cost for the horse at the beginning and a greater cost to the Army, in my judgment, when the horse is brought into active service, but if you extend the life of a horse several years you have made a great saving to the Government.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to say to the gentleman that the purpose as expressed by the gentleman, if it was embodied in appropriate language, would be entirely satisfactory to me and to everybody else, but the language is so general that they can purchase any kind of horses and any number of horses and at any time, provided they are called remounts.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Only for remounts.

Mr. TAWNEY. Including reasonable provision for remounts.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; they could not go beyond the actual necessities or the present wants of the Army unless you put this language in, because the law now limits them absolutely to the number of animals provided for by law for the different branches of the Army. This would allow that. The hearings are very full on the subject.

Mr. TAWNEY. This is changing the existing law to that extent?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. A remount, to be properly construed, seems to me would mean a horse capable of doing the work for which it is purchased.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is making a reasonable provision for the remounts. The hearings make it so clear as to what is wanted to be done that I can not imagine an abuse of it. It is simply a question of whether it is good policy to go into that or not.

Mr. MADDEN. The proposition of the chairman of the committee, however, is to give authority to the War Department to buy a lot of young horses that are not capable of being used, and would not be capable of being used for several years after they are purchased.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Six months to a year.

Mr. MADDEN. How old are they when they are capable of being used?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. A horse ought to be 4 years old before being used.

Mr. MADDEN. Do you expect to buy them when they are 2 years old?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. And then it would take all the time from two years to four years.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would suggest to the chairman of the committee that he can find General Ainsworth's statement on pages 142 and 143 and along there.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] to read the reason for carrying out this provision. My only thought was that the language is so general that you could do almost anything—purchase any kind of a horse under this provision.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I should imagine the Department would be bound by the reasons they give in construing this language, and I can not, with the large number of animals that we have got to have within the next year, see how it is possible to abuse it. The committee was opposed to the part as to breeding.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to make this suggestion to the gentleman, which has been suggested to me by a member of the committee, if it would not meet his approval to insert the word "necessary" after the word "for" and before the word "remount," so as to read "reasonable provision for necessary remount?"

Mr. HULL of Iowa. "Reasonable provision for remount" I think is just as good as far as the language is concerned as that suggested by the gentleman. As to the number which would be necessary, the War Department would be the judge of what would be necessary.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, let it go. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Military post exchange: For continuing the construction, equipment, and maintenance of suitable buildings at military posts and stations for the conduct of the post exchange school, library, reading, lunch, amusement rooms, and gymnasium, to be expended in the discretion and under the direction of the Secretary of War, $400,000: Provided, That not more than $40,000 of the above appropriation shall be expended at any one post or station.

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. I wish to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7 on page 33, after the words "lunch and amusement rooms," insert the following: "wherein the sale of light wines and beer may be permitted."

The paragraph, after being amended, to read:

"Military post exchange: For continuing the construction, equipment, and maintenance of suitable buildings at military posts and stations for the conduct of the post exchange, school, library, gymnasium, reading, lunch, and amusement rooms, wherein the sale of light wines and beer may be permitted, $400,000, to be expended in the discretion and under the direction of the Secretary of War: Provided, That not more than $40,000 of the above appropriation shall be expended at any one post or station."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I raise the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman raise the point of order or reserve it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We had debate on that a few days ago. The gentleman made a very excellent speech; and I am anxious to finish this bill to-day if possible. I will just make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no doubt that it is subject to the point of order; and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Transportation of the Army and its supplies: For transportation of the Army and its supplies, including transportation of the troops when moving either by land or water, and of their baggage; of recruits and recruiting parties; of applicants for enlistment between recruiting stations and recruiting depots; of persons on their discharge from the United States military prison to their homes (or elsewhere as they may elect), provided the cost in each case shall not be greater than to the place of last enlistment; of supplies furnished to the militia for the permanent equipment thereof; of the necessary agents and other employees; of clothing and equipage and other quartermaster's stores from Army depots or places of purchase or delivery to the several posts and Army depots, and from those depots to the troops in the field; of horse equipments and of subsistence stores from places of purchase, and from the places of delivery under contract to such places as the circumstances of the service may require them to be sent; of ordnance and ordnance stores, and small arms from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and Army depots; for payment of wharfage, tolls, and ferriage; for transportation of funds of the Army; for the payment as provided by law of Army transportation due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds, $3,697,561.65.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There are about $9,000,000 paid out of the public Treasury for transportation for the various branches of the Government, but the bulk of it, I understand, is for the Army. I was informed a year or two ago by one who was investigating the subject somewhat that the method of the administration of that branch of the service was, in his judgment, unbusinesslike and exceedingly wasteful. He said that requests for transportation of officers and troops and bills of lading for transportation of supplies for long distances were made in installments or fragments. For instance, if a carload of supplies for the Army were shipped from New York to California, there were always two bills of lading, involving unnecessary accounting. The accounting officers were required to do the classification; and he said that it was a burdensome and unnecessarily expensive system; that mistakes were often made; and he claimed that it cost the Government a great many thousand dollars a year. It would seem that if his statements were true—and I made the motion to get information—the method or system ought to be corrected.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Do I understand you to say that the gentleman who gave you this information stated that on freight shipments made from New York to San Francisco two bills of lading were made?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Almost universally.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And they were shipped to some intermediate point and reshipped?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. They were shipped to an intermediate point and reshipped, and always from New York to Ogden and from Ogden to San Francisco.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Thereby implying that they did not get the benefit of a through rate, but took two local rates, perhaps?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That might be. His complaint was it involved accountings of different sets of accounting officers. He said that there were fourteen officers scattered all over the United States disbursing these accounts of the Quartermaster's office of the War Department.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Did he say whether or not these shipments were over bond-aided and land-grant roads?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Some were, and some were not; and he said it did not make any difference. The Comptroller of the Treasury had called the attention of the War Department to the unbusinesslike character of the system and had suggested improvement. It is just as easy to apportion the cost of freight and division of receipts between ordinary roads and land-grant and bond-aided roads. Every bill of lading is from New York to Ogden, and they have the accounts upon that bill adjusted and the payments made at Omaha, and they have them audited and examined and payments made by the disbursing officer at San Francisco for the other end of the route. These reports have all to go to the War Department. It involves a double investigation, and the classification has to be made, it seems, by a disbursing officer or by some officer in the War Department. Where the goods are miscellaneous, they do not agree on the classifications; mistakes often occur, and a great deal of money is lost in that way. It is true in relation to transportation of officers and troops likewise. Requests are made for a through trip, and the transportation is given for a certain portion of the route and then another for the remainder of the route, and in some instances the trip is broken up into three different fragments.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Did he suggest why, in his opinion, that was done in that way?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It was an old custom that had originated years ago, and it had never occurred to anyone to improve it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And that it was adhered to because it was an old custom?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It never had occurred to anybody that the system might be improved. Now, I had this question in mind, and I should like to know from the chairman of this committee if he knows anything about the method of transportation of officers and troops and supplies for the Army?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman that in place of being expensive to do what he suggests, it has been a great saving. The Government gets the benefit of a large reduction on all land-grant roads, such a reduction that even if it were a little farther around it would be economy to ship over a land-grant road. As a matter of fact, in less than eight months more I think this question will be entirely eliminated so far as the freight charges apply on the debt. The Union Pacific is already out, and the Southern Pacific will pay its entire debt in the very near future, and then there will be nothing to do except pay these roads whatever we owe them for freight instead of taking it out of their indebtedness to the Government, so that inducement to use those lines will be removed.

[The time of Mr. CRUMPACKER having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended five minutes.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say in addition that the language of the bill formerly was much fuller than it is now with reference to shipping over these land-grant roads. I have no information beyond what the gentleman has, but I can not believe that the Department, for the last forty or forty-five years, has been shipping material in the most expensive way it could. The question has never been brought to the attention of the committee in any way, except that as the roads were eliminated from the restrictions heretofore the restrictions have been dropped out.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I send to the Clerk's desk a statement prepared by a gentleman who was connected with the Department. I think his business was to investigate this question, and I ask to have it read in my own time. It explains the method under which they do business pretty fully, and it is at least quasi-official.

The CHAIRMAN. The communication will be read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

SIR: I have the honor to present to your notice a few facts concerning a system in issuing for a single movement two separate bills of lading and requests for freight and passenger transportation in certain sections of the United States. This system causes a great deal of extra work and confusion, and in a number of cases overpayments in the settling and auditing of transportation accounts, which should be corrected. There is a habit throughout the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, of issuing two, and sometimes more, requests and bills of lading for transportation of the Army and its supplies. There is a regulation which provides that separate bills of lading and requests shall be issued where bond-aided service is involved. As a rule, this occurs on what is known as transcontinental business—that is, the service that passes through either El Paso, Tex., Mojave, Cal., or Ogden, Utah. I can find no good reason from the Government standpoint for this system. I do find that it causes a great deal of confusion, uncertainty, overpayments to railroads, and a duplication of work in this office.

For an example, I will illustrate one shipment of freight, from New York to San Francisco, Cal. The quartermaster in New York ships a carload of miscellaneous supplies to San Francisco. He issues two bills of lading, one for the service east of Ogden and one west. That portion east of Ogden is paid by some quartermaster, say, at Omaha, Nebr. His account passes through the Quartermaster-General's Office, Washington, D. C., and is acted upon by that office, then it is sent to the Auditor for the War Department for audit. The quartermaster's division of this office passes upon it. Thus three sets of clerks have handled the eastern portion of the shipment. Each clerk must figure out the lowest net cash rate, classify each article, and subdivide the earnings on Ogden, Utah, in order to pay that portion which is due east of Ogden.

The second bill of lading is handled by the quartermaster's office at San Francisco and finally sent to the Quartermaster-General to be transmitted to this office to be settled by the civil-claims division. The clerks in this division must go through the same procedure and cover the same identical ground that was covered in the settlement for the east of Ogden portion. This is clearly a duplication of work in this office, also in the Quartermaster-General's Office.

This system of dividing a shipment is harmful to the Government. It increases the work in the Treasury and War Departments twofold. Errors are more liable to occur, such as the wrong division of earnings, which cause overpayments to the railroads. The system now in force, of issuing two sets of bills of lading and requests to railroads for transportation, compels the Government to make two distinct settlements and relieves the railroads of the necessity of hiring clerks to make the settlement with their connections. In other words, the Government is using its clerks to do the work that should be done by the railroad companies themselves. If this system of dividing settlements can be stopped and through bills of lading and requests issued for the transportation from starting point to destination, the work now done on this business will be reduced one-half and settlements will be expedited in this office, errors less apt to occur, and the clerk will have more confidence in each settlement, as he will have the whole transaction before him, and will know for a certainty that the through rate is not exceeded and is the lowest that can be made, and not overpay the claimant, and a uniformity of classification will exist.

The way to correct this system is simple. A clause should be added to the appropriations that are available for transportation as follows:

"That hereafter no part of this appropriation shall be available to pay for transportation performed upon fragmentary requests or bills of lading."

In other words, a single bill of lading for freight, and request for passenger transportation, shall be issued for the entire distance, from starting point to destination.

Respectfully, ——— ———.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman of the committee. I understood him to say that the Government has no reduced rates over these railroads after their bonded indebtedness to the Government is paid.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, yes; it has. But while they are owing the Government the amount of the whole shipment is taken out and applied on the debt. When the debt is canceled they then have a preferential rate by putting it in this law; but not, if we do not. The court has held in the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe case, where that road brought suit (the decision will be found on page 215 of the hearings), that the company is entitled to recover. That was before this provision was carried in the Army bill; but in 1891 it was put in, providing for the transportation of the Army and its supplies. I will read the provision:

That aided railroads having claims against the United States for transportation of troops and supplies shall only be paid out of the moneys appropriated by the foregoing provisions (that is, the amount appropriated for transportation) on the basis of such rate for the transportation of such troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property as the Secretary of War shall deem just and reasonable, such rate not to exceed 60 per cent of the compensation for such Government transportation as shall at the time be charged to and paid by private parties.

Since that it has been cut down to not to exceed 50 per cent, and it has been carried in here from year to year, and it is important to keep it in here if we are going to get that reduction.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So that the bond-aided and land-grant-aided railroads do give to the War Department these preferential rates of about 50 per cent.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Aside from any payments on obligations that are still remaining. Now, I should like to ask the gentleman whether the railroads competing with these land-grant-aided railroads also give the Government the same rate?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I can not answer that from my own personal knowledge. The gentleman from California says he understands that, in order to get a part of the business, they do.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase and repair of ships, boats, and other vessels required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for garrison purposes; for expenses of sailing public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific oceans; and for the purchase and repair of harbor boats, and repair of boats for the seacoast artillery service, $5,000,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph. This seems to be a very large sum of money appropriated here. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee how far it is the current law providing the same items for the purchase indiscriminately of harbor boats for transportation, etc.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I can only answer that the estimates given us were for a very much larger sum and included boats for the Seacoast Artillery. We struck out all the provision for the seacoast with the exception of repairs. The repairs for the Seacoast Artillery are made by the Quartermaster's Department, and to have stricken that out would have prevented the Quartermaster's Department from making repairs.

My understanding is that these items were all covered in other language employed heretofore, not specifically, and that was one of the reasons we put in a proviso last year requiring specific appropriations on these different items. Last year we could not tell what was done; it was an innumerable list of things aggregating $15,000,000. With the consent of the House the committee put a provision on requiring them to make more detailed estimates. The Quartermaster-General says that these appropriations were all carried under one head of transportation of the Army and supplies.

Mr. MANN. It may be that the Department had the authority. The bill is all rearranged this year and it is difficult to make a comparison between this bill and the bill of last year. Here is an appropriation of $5,000,000 which might be used, as far as the terms of the bill are concerned, for the purchase of vessels. No one objects to the repair of Army transports, but how many Army transports do they propose to purchase out of this provision?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not understand that they propose to purchase any; they propose to repair them and propose to buy four harbor boats for the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. MANN. At what expense?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Two hundred and twenty-eight thousand dollars for the four.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has had charge of looking that up and he can probably give the gentleman more detailed information than I can.

Mr. KAHN. The Department asked for $5,224,437 under this item and included in it three boats for the seacoast defense. Those were to be used principally for towing targets for target practice. We struck that from the bill.

Mr. MANN. That was a matter that the Committee on Military Affairs had no jurisdiction of.

Mr. KAHN. So we understood.

Mr. MANN. But you included it in the general language so that it can be used for the same purpose.

Mr. KAHN. We think not.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; oh, no.

Mr. KAHN. We struck out the language submitted by the Department which covered these boats; we struck that from the bill.

Mr. MANN. What was the estimate?

Mr. KAHN. Five million two hundred and twenty-four thousand and some odd dollars.

Mr. MANN. You struck out these boats and put in $5,000,000.

Mr. KAHN. We struck out the boats which cost $147,000 and struck out the language covering the boats.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We left in simply the language covering the repairs, but for the purchase of boats for the seacoast artillery we struck that out.

Mr. MANN. What are the harbor boats that cost so much?

Mr. KAHN. The harbor boats are not so very expensive. There are some that cost $12,000 apiece.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that four of them would cost $228,000.

Mr. KAHN. That is a different kind of a boat. It is used by the artillery service in carrying men to different forts for practice and instruction. They are quartermasters' boats, but they have nothing to do with the seacoast defense. They are absolutely necessary for the purpose of giving the artillerymen proper instruction.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it the purpose, as the gentleman understands it, for the Coast Artillery to use these boats in connection with their target practice for the purpose of towing their targets to sea?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; the boats for the seacoast artillery service were said to be for that purpose, and we struck that item from the provisions of the bill and left it for the Fortifications Committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then what is the necessity of including the language here, "and repair of boats for the seacoast artillery service?"

Mr. KAHN. That is repairing.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is repairing.

Mr. KAHN. That is not the construction of new ones.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If a boiler bursts the Quartermaster's Department does the repairing, and it was thought that if you had to go to the seacoast artillery entirely for repairs it would be at least a very inconvenient method of administration.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction and maintenance of military and post roads, bridges, and trails in the district of Alaska, to be expended under the direction of the board of road commissioners described in section 2 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction and maintenance of roads, the establishment and maintenance of schools, and the care and support of insane persons in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved January 27, 1905, and to be expended conformably to the provisions of said act, $250,000, to remain available until expended.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to the language on line 18, "to remain available until expended."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After "dollars," in line 18, insert:
"To remain available until the close of the fiscal year 1910."

Mr. MADDEN. I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say if this work was done by contract there would be no use of this, but it is done by day work largely, and it is impossible to complete the work under one fiscal year without lapping over somewhat, on account of the shortness of the season and the great distance from the source of supplies.

Mr. MADDEN. It is all for Alaska?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to ask if the committee has considered the necessity of making this appropriation immediately available, the same as the appropriation for the Geological Survey is made immediately available in order that the officers of the Government may begin work at the time that they can, about the first or the middle of May, or two months before the end of the fiscal year, being two months before this appropriation will become available? Have they money enough to go on with the work as soon as it is possible for them to go to work and continue the balance of this fiscal year?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have the impression that they have enough to go on, because I think it was available until expended before.

Mr. TAWNEY. The reason I ask is because the appropriation made for the Geological Survey is carried in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, and is made available for the purpose of enabling the Survey to begin its work at the beginning of the season, when work is possible in that section.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. My impression is that they have funds enough for that, that the last appropriation lapped over, that there is enough over to keep the work going.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word in this connection upon the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. One moment, before the gentleman begins. Has this amendment been agreed to?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not. The amendment is pending and the gentleman from Indiana is recognized to debate the amendment.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] a couple of days ago made a point of order upon a similar provision in the bill, a provision authorizing the expenditure of money for the maintenance of the Washington-Alaska Cable Telegraph Line, and providing that the appropriation should be available until expended. The gentleman based the point of order upon the constitutional provision that authorizes the Congress of the United States to raise armies and to maintain them, and further provide that appropriations for that purpose shall not be for a longer period than two years at a time. The point of order was made against the provision contained in the section under consideration now, I infer, upon the same ground.

I do not want to allow this occasion to go by with the inference that might be raised from the condition the RECORD will be in—that is, that the point of order was sustained on the constitutional ground. The provision is clearly subject to a point of order under the rules of the House, because it does not limit the appropriation to the fiscal year for which this bill provides. The construction of military roads, of cables, and telegraph lines for purposes of common defense is in no sense the raising or maintaining of an army within the meaning of the Federal Constitution. An army is defined to be an organized band of armed men for purposes of offense or defense. This Government may spend money in the construction of military roads and forts and for purposes of common defense without having any army at all. I simply want to get my view in the RECORD in respect to this constitutional provision—that it does not apply to military roads and telegraph lines that are simply means of common defense and do not have reference to the Army in the sense of the constitutional limitation upon appropriations for the Army.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it not the gentleman's understanding that a military road and cable and telegraph lines are essential to the support of an army?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. They are not essential to the support of an army, but they are regarded as a proper means of common defense, and they are proper in connection with the army for the purpose of increasing its efficiency.

But the Constitution gives Congress power to raise and support an Army, and provides that no appropriation of money for that use shall be for a longer term than two years, and the question now is, Has Congress the power to make an appropriation for a longer term than two years for the purpose of constructing military roads and military telegraph and cable lines? This proposition is academic. I simply want to put myself right in the RECORD in connection with the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will.

Mr. MANN. Under what provision of the Constitution do we derive authority to build these military roads in Alaska?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is an incidental power.

Mr. MANN. Incidental to what?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. To the common defense—to the public defense.

Mr. MANN. What provision does the gentleman find for the public defense?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is all through the Constitution.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman put it under the public welfare clause?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; I do not. I put it under the inherent power the Government has to provide for common defense. If there was no provision in the Constitution respecting the raising and maintenance of armies, does the gentleman pretend to say this Government could not defend itself? I say it could.

Mr. MANN. I claim distinctly the power to raise and support armies authorizes the Government to transport an army, and the authority to transport an army carries with it the means of transporting the army. It may be a military road, and without that provision there would be no authority to build these roads, unless you put it under the public-welfare clause, and if you put it under the public-welfare clause this committee has no jurisdiction of the subject.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am not discussing the question of jurisdiction; I am simply planting myself right upon the general proposition that this kind of an appropriation is not limited by the two-year Army clause; that is all. That is my judgment.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, for the moment I am glad to see the gentleman planting himself, although I think he is planting himself wrong on the proposition. Now, I do not undertake, and no one else will undertake, to say any appropriation expended by the War Department can not be made available for a period longer than two years, because the river and harbor appropriations are made available until expended, but they do not come in as a matter of support of the Army at all, whatever may have been the original theory, and as I said the other day and say now, here is a military committee reporting a privileged bill under a provision in the Constitution providing that appropriations for the raising and support of armies shall not be paid for a term longer than two years, and they entitle that bill "A bill for the support of the Army for the ensuing fiscal year." I do not know but we might put an item in that clearly would not be for the support of the Army. It would still have been subject to the point of order. Of course the provision the gentleman refers to was subject to the point of order in a number of different ways, and I suggested the other day, and suggest now, that it is very inappropriate in making an appropriation under the title for the support of the Army to put in a provision in violation of the clause of the Constitution authorizing an appropriation.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And that is the reason I took the floor, Mr. Chairman, to state that this particular provision was not in violation of the Constitution; that is all.

Mr. MANN. I am sorry to differ with such an able constitutional lawyer as the gentleman. I do not pretend to be his equal in that respect, but I have my own views.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the academic question between the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Indiana now having been settled, I want to say a word on this amendment by way of explaining the amendment which I propose to offer to this paragraph when the committee has acted upon the pending amendment. The conditions in Alaska in respect to employment of labor are peculiar and very unusual, unlike any conditions under which labor is employed anywhere else in the United States, and especially in reference to the work of constructing these military roads. This work is in the nature of exploring work. These roads are constructed in an uninhabitable and uninhabited wilderness, and during that season of the year in which the work is usually done they have daylight for practically twenty-four hours in the day. Under a recent decision of the Attorney-General the officers of the Army in charge if this work have been prohibited from allowing their men to work more than eight hours or from paying them for any time beyond the eight hours. Therefore, they have sixteen hours of idleness in a wilderness, and as I was told by one of these laborers who resides in my home city, last summer, who was employed on work in Alaska, at times the men almost go crazy for the want of something to do. It is not possible for us to fully comprehend the conditions under which these men work.

They are willing and anxious to work overtime, but are not allowed to do so. I do not propose by the amendment I intend to offer to change the existing law, except in so far as, in the opinion of the Attorney-General, that law prohibits the payment of wages to men when they work more than eight hours up in that country. Under the present law, as construed by the Attorney-General, this is impossible. As an act of humanity to the men employed in the construction of these military roads, the men who brave all of the dangers and hardships they must endure in that new and unexplored section of the country for the purpose of making these roads, we ought to give them the opportunity of making all that they can while they are there, and not compel them to waste so much of their time. When they are idle there are no amusements, nothing to occupy their time or their minds. They have nothing to do sixteen hours every day except to lie in black tents—the only tent that they use up there—loaf, and waste their time.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is another side to this question, in addition to the advantage and comfort to the men employed on the building of these roads. To give them the opportunity would be economy to the Government.

We send these parties up into that wild country for the purpose of constructing these roads. They can not start until very late in the spring. They must travel for hundreds of miles before they reach the point where they will begin work. Then they are allowed to work only one-third of the time while there, and have nothing whatever to do when not at work. The season closes early, and they must return, so that if they could work as they want to and receive compensation for their overtime, as other men in the States receive compensation for their overtime, it would not only be an advantage to the men but it would also be a great advantage to the Government in securing the completion of this work in much less time than otherwise will be required. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I propose to offer this amendment: "That during the period between May 1 and October 1 each year it shall be lawful for laborers and mechanics employed upon the public works of the United States in the district of Alaska to work and receive compensation for work in excess of eight hours a day." This will not affect the eight-hour law or any laboring man in Alaska except those employed on the Government work herein authorized. It will not compel any man to work more than eight hours. It will merely permit him to do so and also permit him to receive pay for his overtime.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not now pending.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want the other amendment disposed of, but I wanted to explain the purpose of the amendment before the point of order was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Insert after line 18, page 35, the following:

"That during the period between May 1 and October 1 each year it shall be lawful for laborers and mechanics employed upon the public works of the United States in the district of Alaska to work and receive compensation for work in excess of eight hours a day."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to reserve a point of order and hear from the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. CALE] on that.

Mr. CALE. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise with the intention of objecting to the amendment at all. But I wish to put the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] right on one or two statements which he has made and which I do not believe represent the real facts as to that country. So far as the eight-hour system is concerned in Alaska, and my experience covers about eleven years in that country in working on the Government roads and on the roads and trails that we built before we had any Government to help build them, and also my experience in the mines, you can get equally as much service out of a faithful man in eight hours as you can get in ten. I will say as to my experience in employing men within the last three years in the mines, that our original method was to work our men ten hours a day; we finally changed from ten hours to eight hours, and I can assure you that we receive equally as good or better success from the eight-hour day than we did from the ten.

I think the gentleman is also mistaken in his remarks concerning people who are there during the sunshiny season of the year, and that there is so much time that there is daylight and that they are suffering on account of wanting to work, for the reason that any good man can do all the labor with pick and shovel, and that character of work, in eight hours that any reasonable man ought to expect him to do.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. CALE. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the gentleman know what the sentiment of the laboring men up there is, whether they desire to work longer than eight hours on public work?

Mr. CALE. I know the sentiment very well.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I would like to hear the gentleman on that question.

Mr. CALE. I know the sentiment is entirely against it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Against what?

Mr. CALE. The ten-hour system, or anything over the eight-hour system. They are in favor of the eight-hour system universally.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. And opposed to increased hours of work?

Mr. CALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Even for increased pay?

Mr. CALE. Even for increased pay they are opposed to it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, may I offer an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. A point of order is pending now. The amendment can be read for information.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to have it read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. CALE] yield for that purpose?

Mr. CALE. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That eight hours shall be considered a day's work, and that payment for time in excess of eight hours shall be at a rate per hour equal to that paid per hour during the regular day.

Mr. CALE. I do not know that I caught the whole of that amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. It simply provides that eight hours shall be considered a day's work, and for any excess of that time the work shall be paid for at a rate not less than that paid for the regular day.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman from Alaska has the floor, and I ask that the gentleman may be allowed to proceed.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. CALE. Certainly.

Mr. ADAIR. I wanted to ask you whether the laboring men in Alaska were not only opposed to ten hours a day, but whether they would be willing to work ten or more hours if they were paid for the excess of time that they worked. What is their wish in that respect?

Mr. CALE. Their wish is for an eight-hour system and eight hours' pay. There will be exceptions to that, of course.

Mr. ADAIR. But as a rule?

Mr. CALE. As a rule they favor the eight-hour system and eight hours' pay.

Mr. ADAIR. And do not desire to work longer?

Mr. CALE. They do not desire to work longer.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman refers to the laboring classes of Alaska. The gentleman is aware of the fact that this proposed amendment does not apply, and will not apply, to any laboring men except those employed by the Government there for the construction of these telegraphic lines and in the building of these military roads in these interior districts.

Mr. CALE. I understand that.

Mr. TAWNEY. It does not at all, and it will not tend to change the law in any particular except as to these men who are employed outside of the mines, who are employed outside of civilization, who are employed outside of the settlements, where there is nothing whatever for them to do except work and spend sixteen hours a day in doing nothing.

Mr. CALE. I understand it.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman from Minnesota answer a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have not the floor. The gentleman from Alaska has the floor.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I hope the gentleman will be permitted to proceed.

Mr. ADAIR. I just wanted to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question, if the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. CALE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ADAIR. I wanted to ask him if he had any personal knowledge as to whether the men employed on the Government work desire to work longer than eight hours?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have, so far as the Government work provided for in this bill is concerned.

Mr. ADAIR. From whom?

Mr. TAWNEY. From men employed in that work.

Mr. ADAIR. I would like to ask the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. CALE. Mr. Chairman, I might say in connection with what I have already said, and which has been referred to here, as to the long season that work is being performed, that depends largely upon the particular part of the Territory that you are in. Alaska, as you are aware, is a large Territory. In some parts of it we have nights every twenty-four hours. In the interior we have two or three months that is all daylight, and practically continual sunshine. So that the season that they begin work upon these military roads depends largely upon the particular territory in which the work is being performed. And the laboring people there, in the Government roads, favor an eight-hour system, for the reason that it gives a greater number of people employment. That is one of the particular reasons. Most of the people that go there do not go to work for wages. They are naturally prospectors and miners, and they have got to earn grubstakes and get supplies to go into prospecting. Whenever they get a sufficient amount earned for a grubstake they leave the road and everything else and go to prospecting. This system permits the Government to employ a greater number of men. That is probably all that I desire to say.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clothing, and camp and garrison equipage: For cloth, woolens, materials, and for the manufacture of clothing for the Army, for issue and for sale at cost price according to the Army Regulations; for altering and fitting clothing and washing and cleaning, when necessary; for equipage, and for expenses of packing and handling, and similar necessaries; for a suit of citizen's outer clothing, to cost not exceeding $10, to be issued upon release from confinement to each prisoner who has been confined under a court-martial sentence involving dishonorable discharge; for indemnity to officers and men of the Army for clothing and bedding, and so forth, destroyed since April 22, 1898, by order of medical officers of the Army for sanitary reasons, $7,000,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the preceding paragraph, entitled "barracks and quarters," which was read as I stepped to the door, I wanted to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill——

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to this discussion at this time? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not consent to going back for the purposes of amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The unanimous consent is to allow the gentleman from Minnesota to address the committee on this paragraph.

Mr. TAWNEY. I now ask unanimous consent that we may recur to the paragraph preceding the one which has just been read.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I shall have to object to that until I know what the gentleman desires.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to get some information from the gentleman.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Reserving the right to object——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa reserves the right to object.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that I intended to offer an amendment to strike out the appropriation of $271,000 for the purchase of land in the islands of Luzon, Mindanao, and Vizcaya. My attention was diverted for the moment and I did not notice that the paragraph had been concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to recur to the paragraph ending with line 13 on page 36, for the purpose of offering the amendment which he has indicated. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. YOUNG. I object.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not proper for me to move to return to the paragraph preceding the one that has just been read for the purpose of offering an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. That can not be recognized at this time. The gentleman can only obtain permission to return by unanimous consent.

Mr. HULL of Iowa addressed the Chair and was recognized.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have received unanimous consent to ask the gentleman from Iowa some questions in regard to this transaction.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did have that at one time. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has now been recognized by the Chair.

Mr. TAWNEY. The consent has not been withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. Another request was substituted, and objection was made to that request.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have no objection to the motion to strike out. I desire simply to say that the estimate for additional land at Fort McKinley was in another estimate and not included in these provisions. It has not been recommended so far by the committee, although the War Department wanted us to recommend it.

Mr. MADDEN. It is not included in this paragraph?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; this is the usual language, and simply provides for acquiring sites at places where it is necessary to place troops.

Mr. TAWNEY. But the total amount appropriated covers the estimate for the purchase of that land.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I beg the gentleman's pardon. He is right about that. The Department decided that they had the authority to buy the land if the appropriation was made.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the necessity for the purchase of the land which is proposed to be purchased?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is simply an informal discussion, although, so far as I am concerned, I am willing that the committee should pass on it. The options on the lands there will expire in a very short time, and they claim that they hold the land under this option at a better price than they can ever hereafter get it for. On page 241 of the hearings, Secretary Taft recommended this purchase and gave his reasons therefor.

Mr. SCOTT. Can the gentleman tell us how much is to be paid for this land?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is for the enlargement of Fort William McKinley, near Manila. We have an option to acquire the land at what is regarded as a very low price.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is the gentleman aware that the same estimate was submitted to the Committee on Appropriations in the last session and refused?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; I did not know anything about it.

Mr. TAWNEY. It was.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. But Secretary Taft says that—

It will make Fort William McKinley one of the best posts that we have in the Army. It is within 6 miles of Manila and connected with it by an electric railway and by river. The original purchase was not large enough. The original purchase is now filled with the post buildings, and this 6,000 acres next to it has been leased, with the privilege of purchase, which privilege, as I recollect correctly, expires some time in June. I think the cost is $185,000.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. How much land have we now at Fort McKinley?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I can not answer. He says that the land now is entirely occupied by buildings and that there is no place for drills.

Mr. SCOTT. Does the gentleman know at what price per acre this land is to be purchased?

Mr. KAHN. The whole is to cost $185,000.

Mr. SCOTT. At how much per acre?

Mr. KAHN. I can not tell that.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in the hurry of looking at this I was in error. I want to say that the gentleman from Michigan calls my attention to the fact that we did not put that in. We give the exact amount asked for in the estimates, which does not include Fort McKinley, and the $185,000 is not included at all, but I think should be.

Mr. TAWNEY. But the committee does include the amount estimated for the purchase of land in the department of Luzon, $211,000, and also for the purchase of land in Mindanao, $40,000, and in Vizcaya, $20,000, making a total of $271,807, which added to the amount they want for rentals and repairs and new construction, makes a total of $731,022.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We do include the purchase of lands, but not for Fort McKinley. It is all set out in the hearings by the Quartermaster-General.

Mr. TAWNEY. I did not say for purchase of land adjacent to Fort McKinley; that was a statement by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is for many different posts scattered around throughout the islands. The gentleman from Minnesota is reading from the Quartermaster-General's report.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They set out what they want, but it is absolutely necessary that the Philippine Islands should have that right, or else it will be impossible to get posts located. If they have to send here in advance each time to have proper specific appropriations for the purchase of land, it will indefinitely delay the work.

Mr. TAWNEY. How many posts is it the policy of the Department to establish there?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They have had about 400, but they are reducing them. Under the conditions of peace in the islands they will gradually reduce them and have larger camps and larger concentration of troops.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to call attention to the fact that for the same purpose the current appropriation this year is $400,000, and that this is $731,000, the exact amount estimated, including the purchase of new land, or $331,000 in excess of the appropriation for the current year.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If we strike out this provision, the right to purchase new land, you might as well cut out the larger part of the appropriation for barracks and quarters.

Mr. TAWNEY. They would have the same facilities they have now.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not at all. They are establishing new posts, and they must purchase new land upon which to place them.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Iowa stated that there were 400 posts in the Philippine Islands. Can he state the number where the Government owns the land?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I suppose in a great many of the outside places, but as concentration goes on there will be fewer posts but more purchases.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are many of them on leased lands?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There are small posts scattered everywhere where there happens to be necessity for troops; as that condition disappears they are concentrated in larger units. That is shown in the pay for officers of the scouts. We have had to increase the officers for scouts. When they were in companies scattered all over the islands they did not have any majors, because they were not in battalions. But now they are organizing them into battalions, and so we have had to increase the number of officers, and it is necessary, according to the Department, to secure ground upon which to place the forts and also to erect the barracks and properly house the troops in the Philippine Islands.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That not to exceed the following sums may be used in the erection and completion of modern sanitary hospitals at the posts named: Thirty-five thousand dollars at Boise Barracks, Idaho; $50,000 to enlarge the hospital at Fort Sam Houston, Tex.; $40,000 to enlarge the hospital at Fort Slocum, N. Y.; $35,000 to enlarge the hospital at Fort G. H. Wright, N. Y.; $25,000 to enlarge the hospital at Fort Robinson, Nebr.; $20,000 to complete the hospital at Columbus Barracks, Ohio; and $20,000 to complete the hospital at Jefferson Barracks, Mo.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that that paragraph, beginning at line 14, down to the bottom of the page, the proviso changes existing law, and also on the ground that the Committee on Military Affairs has not jurisdiction of the subject-matter of that proviso.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to argue the point of order except simply to say that the hospitals have always been under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can dispose of the point of order without reaching that point.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The permanent law of the country in regard to buildings is found on page 622 of the military laws, which provides:

Permanent barracks or quarters and buildings and structures of a permanent nature shall not be constructed unless detailed estimates shall have been previously submitted to Congress, and approved by a special appropriation for the same, except when constructed by the troops, etc.

The Chair has the law. It is a question that has been thrashed over very often, and my own judgment is that neither the Committee on Appropriations nor the Committee on Military Affairs has the right to appropriate for any building in excess of $20,000 unless it is detailed in an explicit appropriation.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that under the head "military posts, for construction and enlargement at military posts of such buildings as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary," there is estimated for the next fiscal year, to be carried in the sundry civil bill, $1,581,000, and it is impossible for the House or the Committee of the Whole to know what these barracks and quarters and hospital buildings are costing the United States if they are to be carried in two appropriation bills, coming from two different committees. The Committee on Appropriations has always carried these provisions in regard to hospitals, and they are appropriations made to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of War. I insist that both grounds upon which the point of order is made are well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hold that the proviso is in conflict with the statute that the gentleman from Iowa has just read, so that the Chair must sustain the point of order without deciding the question of the jurisdiction of the two different committees.

Mr. MANN. Is that to the proviso?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is to the proviso.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think there should be a very material reduction in the appropriation, if this goes out.

Mr. TAWNEY. The amount of the reduction is the aggregate amount stated in the proviso. I have not had time to foot it up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair might suggest that the Clerk be authorized to modify the title by reducing the amount by the amount named in the proviso.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I ask that that be done.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to that procedure?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Quarters for hospital stewards: For construction of quarters for hospital stewards at military posts already established and occupied, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same, $75,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order on that. Forty thousand dollars is what is carried in the current law, and there is $75,000 in this item. I will reserve a point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the question of quarters for hospital stewards is one that can all be stricken out or much more given than is given here, but as the policy of concentration is being carried on and a number of posts are increased in the country out of the small appropriations heretofore made, the Government has not been able to construct quarters for hospital stewards to meet the demand. The amount for each building is not in excess of $20,000, and it is not near $20,000. It has always been carried in this bill, and the only question is whether the amount carried here is too much or not.

Mr. TAWNEY. Can the gentleman inform the committee as to why the $40,000 carried in the current law will not be sufficient to meet the requirements during the next fiscal year, and where is it proposed to expend the excess over the $40,000 now carried?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman that the Surgeon-General has been wanting us to increase this amount for some years. He tried to have the Secretary of War submit larger estimates last year, but they were cut down. This year the Secretary of War said he felt he could not in justice cut them down. This provision will not complete the construction of quarters for hospital stewards. It will still require additional appropriations next year.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think the Surgeon-General claims he could use to advantage $150,000, if he could get the Secretary to submit the estimate.

Mr. KAHN. The Surgeon-General says that this amount is a necessity.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; and this is a fair proposition, that where noncommissioned officers, like hospital stewards, are to have separate quarters, as provided for by law, and where a large number have, it is the duty of the Government as far and as rapidly as it can to comply with the allowance for hospital stewards and provide them their quarters.

Mr. MANN. Now, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, certainly.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say last year and preceding years the Medical Department, the Surgeon-General's department, asked for more money and the Secretary of War reduced the estimate.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Last year.

Mr. MANN. Has the Secretary of War this year reduced any estimates made by any branch of the military service?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I can not answer that.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman could answer it; he may not be willing to answer it. Is it not a fact that the Secretary of War is so busy attending to public duties away from Washington that he has no opportunity to examine and reduce the estimates, which he has always done heretofore?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the gentleman from Illinois make that request to his friend the Secretary of War.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman says rightly when he refers to him as my friend. I think he is one of the ablest men in the Government, and I have no doubt the genial gentleman at my left, the gentleman from New York, a year or so from now will be addressing him with much grace and suavity as the "President of the United States." [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I certainly shall, I hope, if the gentleman from Illinois is not then addressing my friend Mr. Bryan as "Mr. President." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to just call attention—I do not think the gentleman will press his point of order or that it is good—to where these quarters are to be, in answer to my friend from Illinois. There is to be one double set of quarters at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., to cost $10,000; one double set at the Presidio, costing $12,000, and the total amount that the Surgeon-General asked for in all places, and he insists they should have them at once, amounts to $90,000. The committee recommended $75,000.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] was called away, and he authorized me to withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Shooting galleries and ranges: For shelter, shooting galleries, ranges for small-arms target practice, repairs, and expenses incident thereto, such ranges and galleries to be open, as far as practicable, to the National Guard and organized rifle clubs under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, $406,000: Provided, That $16,324 shall be immediately available for completing the acquisition and construction of the rifle range at Fort Snelling, Minn.: Provided further, That $250,000 shall be used only for the purchase of 6,000 acres of land, more or less, near the city of Washington, D. C., for use as a target range, and for other military uses for regular troops, including field artillery, and for the National Guard of the District of Columbia and contiguous States.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order upon the second proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order as against the second proviso.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Yes; and it seems to me subject to a great deal of objection. Here is a proposition to buy 6,000 acres of land around Washington at $41 an acre. Well, you can buy all the land around here you want at less than half that.

Mr. SULZER. Where?

Mr. MANN. Very close to here, and plenty of it.

Mr. SULZER. Down in the swamp?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon his point of order?

Mr. MANN. I will, unless some explanation is given.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I can not give you an explanation as to price, but I can only give the explanation that is given in the hearings before the committee and the explanation that is given in the document to which the attention of the gentleman has been called, at page 469, where it is very strongly urged that this amount of land be purchased, as there is no place in the Department of the East where the Government owns a rifle range, even for small arms, and no place where a single battery of artillery can fire a gun without firing blank ammunition.

In the Department of the East something over a year ago General Grant secured from the department an organization of a board to examine and report upon a desirable site for this rifle range. That committee discharged its duties in full, and another committee was appointed to supervise and go over all that it had reported. If it is possible to secure land for what the gentleman says—less than half—the War Department ought to do it. I can only say it is exceedingly important for the Department of the East to have a rifle range. As to the possibility of our securing it at the figures the gentleman named, I have no information whatever which would lead me to believe it can be done.

Mr. MANN. Well, I am sorry the gentleman has no information. I know a great many people in this city who have bought land not very far from Washington in the last year or two at $10 an acre, and it looks to me this might be possibly an undue temptation to somebody.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, there are some places around Washington which have been offered for a rifle range at a hundred an acre, and some for a good deal less, and some, according to report of Secretary, for a good deal more than the hundred dollars per acre. It is a large tract, and part of the land would evidently cost more than other parts.

Mr. MANN. Oh, very likely. Perhaps they intend to buy Mr. McLean's beautiful place out here, but I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have no particular objection to the point of order. It is subject to it. If the gentleman has the remotest idea it is liable to be abused, if it is not sufficiently guarded, and would not be sufficiently guarded to insure all the rights of the Government being preserved, then I have not a word to say. I only want to say that in the opinion of the committee and of all parties that are interested in the question of administration of the Army the universal demand for the Government owning its own rifle range is conceded, and the longer it is delayed the more it will cost.

Mr. YOUNG. I wish simply to read a few words from the report of the Secretary of War upon this matter, in which he says:

I am not ordinarly inclined to be insistent, but so much and increasing difficulty has been experienced in getting target facilities that I can not rest content without stating that a range in the vicinity of Washington, D. C., is an imperative necessity. If such a necessity ever arises in administration of military affairs, it exists in this matter, and I feel that I must again, with all my force, urge favorable action to secure a target range in the vicinity of Washington.

Certainly no language can be stronger than that, and I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that this matter will be in the hands of the Secretary of War; that it will be in the hands of a great and honorable Department of this Government, and if this land can be procured for any less money than we appropriate here undoubtedly it will be done. I believe that that matter can be safely intrusted to the Secretary of War, and I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if I thought that the Secretary of War himself would have the time during the next fiscal year to give personal attention to this matter I might feel somewhat differently. His communication to this Congress is dated January 8, and I feel very confident that while he signed that communication he knows nothing about it personally. It is true there has been a lobby urging that this item should pass through Congress, because it is said that there has already been located the place where this money is to be expended. I do not know whether that be the case or not, but I do know that some people have been very much interested in having this item go through.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman permit a statement right there?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. YOUNG. I wish to say to the gentleman that if there has ever been such a lobby they have never approached the Committee on Military Affairs, and we have never heard from anyone upon this subject except the Secretary of War and his subordinates.

Mr. MANN. It is extremely likely, Mr. Chairman, that the gentlemen have at least never approached my distinguished friend from Michigan [Mr. YOUNG], and if they had probably this item would not have been in the bill. But there are a great many ways of reaching the sale of a piece of property and obtaining an appropriation for it, and the most customary is to obtain the support of somebody in some Department beneath the superior officer. I do not say, and I would not charge, that there has been any improper motive on the part of any of the officials here, but it is true nevertheless that they can buy any quantity of land perfectly adapted for use in this connection around the city of Washington for less than half the price proposed to be paid by this appropriation, and under those circumstances it seems to me it would be well for at least another body to consider this, and better still if this committee could have an opportunity to consider it again, and for that reason I must insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I suppose the amount ought to be reduced, and I ask unanimous consent that that change may be made.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, line 11 will be amended by changing the amount, reducing it to $250,000.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Maintenance of the Army War College: For supplying the necessary fuel for heating the Army War College building at Washington Barracks and for lighting the building and grounds; also for pay of a chief engineer, at $1,200 per annum; an assistant engineer, at $900; four firemen, at $720 each; one elevator conductor, at $720, $12,700.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CRAIG] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after line 5 on page 39, the following:

"Encampments of organized militia with troops of the Regular Army: For paying the expenses of regiments, battalions, squadrons, and batteries of the organized militia of any State, Territory, or of the District of Columbia which may be authorized by the Secretary of War to participate in such encampments as may be established for the instruction of the troops of the Regular Army in seacoast defenses, as provided by sections 15 and 21 of the act of January 21, 1903, entitled 'An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes,' $700,000."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order on that. That question was discussed fully.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] raises a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is not germane to this part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman raise the point of order or reserve it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I raise the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

Medical and Hospital Department: For the purchase of medical and hospital supplies, including disinfectants for military posts, camps, hospitals, hospital ships, and transports; for expenses of medical-supply depots, for medical care and treatment not otherwise provided for, including care and subsistence in private hospitals of officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the Army, of applicants for enlistment, and of prisoners of war and other persons in military custody or confinement, when entitled thereto by law, regulation, or contract: Provided, That this shall not apply to officers and enlisted men who are treated in private hospitals or by civilian physicians while on furlough; for the proper care and treatment of epidemic and contagious diseases in the Army or at military posts or stations, including measures to prevent the spread thereof, and the payment of reasonable damages not otherwise provided for; for bedding and clothing injured or destroyed in such prevention; for the pay of male and female nurses, not including the nurse corps (female), and of cooks and other civilians employed for the proper care of sick officers and soldiers, under such regulations fixing their number, qualifications, assignment, pay, and allowances as shall have been or shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War; for the pay of civilian physicians employed to examine physically applicants for enlistment and enlisted men, and to render other professional services from time to time under proper authority; for the pay of other employees of the Medical Department; for the payment of express companies and local transfers employed directly by the Medical Department for the transportation of medical and hospital supplies, including bidders' samples and water for analysis; for supplies for use in teaching the art of cooking to the hospital corps; for the supply of the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.; for advertising, laundry, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses of the Medical Department, $700,000.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In connection with this paragraph, which is in relation to the Medical Department of the Army of the United States, I have recently had a letter from a most excellent physician in my district, calling my attention to a valuable article published in the New York Medical Journal, an old reliable journal, established in 1843. The article contains some suggestions upon the necessity of important changes in the organization of the Medical Department of the United States Army. I know this physician personally, and my experience has been with physicians generally, they take great interest in these matters and sometimes their ideas are exceedingly valuable. I ask permission of the committee, therefore, for the purpose of calling the attention of the Committee on Military Affairs and the War Department to the subject of the article, to print this article in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The article is as follows:

SOME OF THE TRIUMPHS OF SCIENTIFIC MEDICINE IN PEACE AND WAR IN FOREIGN LANDS, WITH SUGGESTIONS UPON THE NECESSITY OF IMPORTANT CHANGES IN THE ORGANIZATION OF THE MEDICAL DEPARTMENT OF THE UNITED STATES ARMY.

[By Louis Livingston Seaman, A. B., M. D., LL. B., F. R. G. S.—New York—Late Major Surgeon, United States Volunteer Engineers.]

If any doubting Thomas questions that the crowning glory of the profession of medicine is the prevention of disease rather than its cure, a visit to the American Tropics should convince him of his error. For centuries the continents, both north and south of the equator, have stood in constant dread of dysentery, bubonic plague, malaria, and yellow fever. Terrible epidemics of the latter have ravaged the coastwise cities in spite of rigid quarantines, for prior to 1902 the nature of its transmission was not understood, and effective quarantine was impossible where the Stegomyia mosquito thrived. Only a few years ago, in the harbor of Santos, thirty-one ships of almost every nationality rode at anchor for months without a living creature aboard, many of their masters and crews having fallen victims to "yellow jack," with little possibility of replacing them.

"Fifteen men on the dead man's chest,
Yo, ho, ho, and a bottle of rum,
Drink and the devil had done for the rest,"

only in this instance the devil was yellow fever, which was of such frequent occurrence as to scarcely excite surprise. The South American coast was dreaded by the mariner more than the Spanish main in the days of the pirate bold and the buccaneer, so much so that the Lloyds often refused to underwrite vessels visiting these hotbeds of infection. But how is it to-day? Through the brilliant discoveries suggested by Finley, of Habana, and proved by the commission headed by Major Reed, the true method of its transmission was established and its eradication became a possibility, although in the prosecution of their experiments the majority of the members of the commission fell martyrs to the disease. What Doctor Wood, Doctor Reed, and Doctor Gorgas accomplished in its extinction in Habana and Santiago, and Doctor Gorgas repeated so effectually in the Canal Zone—as you heard him so graphically describe at a recent meeting of this academy—Doctor Cruz duplicated with even greater success in Bahia, Rio de Janeiro, and Santos, the most prolific culture grounds of the disease in the world, because their sanitary problems were there more difficult. Not until the last-named scientist was given absolute control in his own department, however, were his labors crowned with success. A terrible epidemic of the fever had visited Rio and Santos, the commerce of Brazil was paralyzed, the population of the cities decimated. Foreign capital was deserting, and the outlook was most gloomy. Millions of dollars were required for its extermination, and, after violent political opposition, Doctor Cruz was ultimately given control of his department, with correspondingly fortunate results, for in a comparatively short time the country was free from disease. He established an admirably equipped department of sanitation, with a corps of over 2,300 well-paid, uniformed men, whose sole duty was to fight yellow fever and bubonic plague, and who carried out their orders with almost as much celerity as the members of the fire department do in this city. Horses stood harnessed in their stables, ready to be hitched to ambulances and disinfecting carts, loaded with the necessary equipment for isolating cases and purifying the surroundings, so that the moment a new case was reported it was isolated by double screens, and the spread of the disease was effectually prevented. As a result, desirable immigration is no longer frightened away, foreign capital is flowing in to develop the limitless resources of the land, commercial interests have enormously increased, and the material and financial gains parallel those of humanitarian character. Brazil demonstrated the axiom that prevention is better than cure, and that, as a financial proposition, it pays to give the medical officer adequate authority in his own department.

The splendid work of Cruz in eradicating yellow fever has been equally successful in his campaign against bubonic plague, which for years had ravaged the coast with serious mortality. The final extinction of both these transmissible diseases in South America will soon be an accomplished fact, if the present policy of prevention and sanitation is maintained. In addition, Cruz established a school of experimental medicine in Rio, rivaling similar institutions in Europe and America, which will justly give Brazil an enviable position in the scientific world. A large corps of assistants are constantly occupied in the preparation of the various sera used in the prophylactic or curative treatment of bubonic plague, diphtheria, typhoid, and other diseases, and distributed over the country on the demand of physicians. The stables of the animals used in the prosecution of this work are marvels of cleanliness, and in the operating room asepsis is observed as faithfully as in a modern hospital.

Rio de Janeiro maintains an excellent institution for the preparation of vaccine virus, also a medical college, which is to celebrate its centenary during this coming summer. It is admirably equipped with laboratories, especially for the study of hygiene and sanitation. Its Academy of Medicine is a most select body, and the walls of the lecture rooms of the college are graced with life-size portraits of its leading professors. Aseptic precautions are observed so carefully in some of the hospitals that operating arenas are separated by plate-glass partitions from the remainder of the room, so as to completely isolate them from contaminating atmosphere, where the students are seated.

The most serious defect observed in all the institutions of South America was the lack of trained nurses. Many of the hospitals in these old countries were formerly convents, and the labor of nursing was performed by the members of the various sisterhoods. These women, although often inspired by high motives, lack the skill necessary in the care of serious diseases, or for obtaining the best results in the after treatment of operations. And here I may be pardoned for a moment's digression to pay a word of tribute to my old traveling companion and friend, Dr. Nicholas Senn, whose sudden and lamented death recently shocked the world.

It was my privilege to circumnavigate the continents of Africa and South America with him, visiting the coastwise cities and hospitals en route, and penetrating through the jungle to the interior, wherever railway connections permitted.

While crossing the Peruvian Andes in September, near Lake Titicaca, 12,000 feet high, and La Paz, the highest city in the world, he was seized with the attack of soroche or mountain sickness that hastened his end. In passing from the Pacific Ocean through the Cordillerian and Andean ranges, over the great divide that separates it from the Amazonian slope, we rose to an altitude of nearly 3 miles in fifteen hours. The tremendous tension put upon the circulatory system in this already rarified atmosphere resulted in an attack of acute cardiac dilatation, with its distressing sequelæ, aggravated by bronchitis contracted in the Straits of Magellan.

To dwell upon the achievements of this great man would only be to repeat that with which the scientific world is already familiar. Aside from his remarkable originality in the field of surgery, Senn was a naturalist of deep learning, well versed in the flora and fauna of almost every land in the habitable globe. His fame was world-wide. His capacity for work exceeded that of any man I have ever known. He was a close observer, a conservative operator, an eloquent clinical lecturer, and in the emergency of war served his country faithfully and well. In his death America has lost an honored son, science a distinguished pioneer, and the world a gentle friend, whose fame will linger longest in the short and simple annals of the poor.

You have so recently heard of the brilliant results attained by Doctor Gorgas in the Canal Zone that a rehearsal of them is unnecessary. But the great lesson to be drawn from his splendid work was not pointed out at the time of his lecture. It must be remembered that during the first year of our occupation of the Panama district disease ran rampant, so much so that at one time the abandonment of the entire enterprise was considered. It was then proved that sanitation was the fundamental problem requiring solution, even before the engineering question could be solved. The original Isthmian Commission included no member of the medical profession, but was composed entirely of politicians and officers, ignorant of sanitation and hygiene, who ignored or so limited the authority of the chief sanitary officer as to render the enforcement of his regulations and measures impossible. This officer, Doctor Gorgas, was subordinated to the governor of the Zone, to the chief disbursing officer, to the chief of the bureau of materials and supplies, to a Mr. Grunsky, to the Commission, to the Secretary of War—subordinated, in fact, to the seventh degree from the source of authority—just about as the medical officer of the United States Army is, under the decrepit system under which he is compelled to serve to-day.

The chairman of the legislative committee of the American Medical Association, Doctor Reed, says:

"Here was Doctor Gorgas, recognized as the foremost authority in the world in the solution of the peculiar problems pertaining to tropical sanitation, subordinated to a series of other subordinates, all of whom were confessedly ignorant of the very question with which he was most familiar.

"The working of this wonderful mechanism," continues Reed, "is interesting. Thus, if Major La Garde, superintendent of Ancon Hospital, makes a requisition for supplies, he must make it in due form, take it for approval to the chief sanitary officer, then to the governor of the Zone, then to the chief disbursing officer, whence it goes to the Commission at Washington; then to the Mr. Grunsky as committeeman; then back to the Commission; then, if allowed, bids are advertised for; awards are made; the requisition is filled under the supervision of a purchasing agent notoriously ignorant of the character and quality of medical and surgical supplies; the material is shipped to the Isthmus, consigned to the chief of the bureau of materials and supplies, who notifies the disbursing officer, who notifies Colonel Gorgas, who in turn notifies Major La Garde, who applies to the quartermaster—the boss of a corral—for transportation, and, so much of the stuff as in the judgment of, first, the governor, next the chief disbursing officer, next the Commission, next, and more particularly, Grunsky, the committeeman, ought to be allowed to the superintendent of Ancon Hospital, finally arrives, or does not arrive at its destination, where the necessity for its use has probably ceased."

This is no fanciful picture; it is exemplified in practically every requisition that went forward and illustrates the tortuous course of the regular military channel as it now exists in the United States Army.

And what was the natural consequence of this wretched system of Panama? A costly epidemic—the death of some members of the Commission and of many laborers—a stampede of the remainder that threatened the success of the entire canal scheme and caused a delay of nearly a year in its completion, and the loss of interest on its heavy investment, that would have paid for the sanitation of the Zone for years. Not until the imminence of failure dawned upon the Washington authorities was a medical officer made a Commissioner, with authority to carry out his sanitary measures. The success resulting from this power being conferred upon our honored colleague again demonstrated the wisdom of making a medical man supreme in his own department; a truth Congress was for once forced to recognize.

Foreign governments foster their medical discoverers; ours does not. When Pasteur made his brilliant discovery of the microbic origin of disease and found the magic key that unlocked the secrets of infection, the French Government recognized his great work by placing him at the head of an institution under governmental patronage that enabled him to more successfully prosecute his experiments and researches. When Koch discovered the bacillus of tuberculosis, he was a comparatively unknown country practitioner, but his Government placed him at the head of a department with abundant means to continue his work; it sent him to Africa to investigate the rinderpest, and after the successful solution of that problem sent him once more to the dark continent, where for the past two years he has been conducting a heroic battle against those dreaded diseases of the African Tropics, sleeping sickness and malaria.

In Africa I met Doctor Ollwig, Koch's chief assistant, who, in his scientific battle with malaria, is carrying out the two policies suggested from an ætiological point of view: (1) The destruction of the anopheles by ridding the surrounding jungle as far as possible of its breeding places, and (2) the neutralization of the plasmodian parasites by hypodermatic and internal administration of quinine, continued for many months. Favorable results have thus been obtained, although the difficulties of exterminating the mosquito have not yet been overcome. The period during which the infected Stegomyia continues as a source of danger in the transmission of yellow fever is limited to fifty days, whereas the infected anopheles retains its power of infection for three years, thus making the task of eradicating malaria far more difficult.

The results of Koch's investigations of tripanosomiasis are already well known to the medical profession. The infected tsetse fly is undoubtedly the most dangerous enemy of man and beast, where it exists, as up to the summer of 1906 the bite of an infected fly was invariably fatal. Its ravages in a belt of territory near Victoria Nyanza in the year we were there resulted in a fatality among the natives of over 200,000, many districts being almost depopulated. Horses, mules, cattle, antelopes, zebras, and wild buffaloes died in countless numbers. The zone of these depredations was rapidly increasing, and for that reason the German Government sent Professor Koch to study the habits of the fly and discover, if possible, a method for its extermination.

How does the Japanese Government look upon the health of its citizens? When Kitasato, after careful research and experimentation, discovered the bacillus of bubonic plague, the Government promptly rewarded him by placing him in charge of a great institution for the study of infectious disease, where the sera are made for the prophylactic and curative treatment of the most deadly disease of the country, and where much original investigation is being conducted.

In England every little town has an officer of health, appointed by the General Government to guard its citizens against disease.

Lister, Pasteur, and Koch opened the door to scientific research; but long before their day smallpox had been brought under control by the immortal Jenner. This loathsome disease would long ago have disappeared from the earth forever but for the ignorant attacks of fanaticism. As has been truly said: "Nothing has tended more to retard the advance of science than the disposition in vulgar minds to villify what they can not comprehend."

Cholera and hydrophobia have been conquered by Pasteur, and Lister and Koch pointed the pathway to victory over the death-dealing microbes of transmissible diseases. Through their instrumentality disease has become the slave rather than the master of mankind. No longer do diphtheria, tetanus, septicæmia, typhoid, cholera, puerperal sepsis, hospital gangrene, erysipelas, and wound infection hold the world in dread.

Notwithstanding that in 1904 the victims of bubonic plague in India numbered 1,022,000, and in the first six months of 1907 reached the appalling number of 1,060,000, a scientific campaign of prophylactive sanitation would soon stamp out the last vestige of its existence were it not for the superstition of the natives which renders such a course impossible.

If scientific medicine has won these gigantic victories over disease, and in methods of prevention, in the last twenty-five years, what wonders of discovery may not be divulged in the coming centuries. Let us for a moment see what results have recently been accomplished by an intelligent application of scientific medicine in the field of war. Its last and most noteworthy application was in the great oriental conflict just concluded.

General Tarauchi, Japanese minister of war, stated on November 23, 1905, in an address before the Red Cross Society of Japan, that "the total number of soldiers dispatched to the front during the war amounted to over 1,200,000, 80,000 of whom died and 300,000 fell sick. Of this vast number only about 9,300 died from wounds and 20,000 from sickness." This would leave the total from killed and battle casualties about 60,000; and from disease 20,000, or about one from sickness to three from casualties of war.

In April, 1906, a year after the last great battle had been fought, and when the totals were completed, Doctor Lynch (our military attaché in Japan during the war) in his report to our War Department published the following official figures:

TABLE I.

Killed in battle and died from wounds	58,887
Died from disease	27,158
Total died	86,045

or more than twice as many from battle casualties as from disease.

The records of extended campaigns for the past two hundred years, as shown in the Standard Tables of Longman and elsewhere, are that four men have died from disease to one from bullets. These figures of the Japanese army, therefore, constitute the most remarkable series ever published in the history of wars. Almost similar figures have been unwarrantably contradicted by officers of the United States Army, but the report of Major Lynch, our own medical attaché, just published with official records down to April, 1906, can not be challenged.

In another table our military attaché states that in the Japanese war with China, in 1894, for every man who died from wounds 12.09 died from disease. In the war with Russia, ten years later, for every man who died from wounds, 0.46 died from disease, or one twenty-seventh as many.

In their titanic conflict the Japanese kept over 600,000 men in the field for over a year and a half; they fought some of the greatest battles of history, one of twelve days of incessant conflict and another of sixteen days; skirmish fighting went on constantly during the entire period of hostility. In their campaigns the soldiers had their camp kettles, water boilers, blankets, and mosquito nets, and every man was protected by a net during the mosquito season. Their casualties have been nearly 40,000 in a single battle, or twice the entire number of soldiers we sent to Cuba, and yet every man was promptly, carefully, and scientifically cared for. They fought through a country where unsanitary conditions prevailed, often camping on the germ-infested sites of their enemies, and yet, by the incessant precautions of a numerically adequate medical corps, with power to enforce sanitation and hygiene, the army was enable to make a health showing unheard of before in the annals of war.

In contrast to this picture let me for a moment invite your attention to the Porto Rican expedition in that opera bouffe performance known as the Spanish-American war, for nowhere in history is there found a more illuminating instance, a graver lesson, or a more terrible warning than is here portrayed. For our country is the "Mene, mene, tekel eupharsin," the handwriting on the wall, so easily decipherable that he who runs may read, and yet, in the glory of victory and the enjoyment of prosperity, its lesson has passed unheeded.

The story of the expedition is brief. About 20,000 American troops landed in Porto Rico, while the Spanish on the island numbered about 17,000. Several skirmishes occurred, in which, according to the Surgeon-General's report, three men were lost from the casualties of war. The object of the war, the breaking of the chains of Spanish despotism and spoliation, which for centuries had held a race in shameful moral serfdom, was soon accomplished, and the war—from the strictly military standpoint—was over. From our first arrival, the natives of the island welcomed our battalions with vivas of applause, strewing our advancing march with flowers, and their masses were prepared to joyfully second our efforts for their more complete emancipation.

That is the beautiful story that history presents. Lest we forget, as a nation, and lie supine in the easy content of this picture, let me invite your attention for a moment to a further study of the report of the Surgeon-General for that war. It states that although three men only fell from the casualties of battle during that entire campaign, 262, or nearly one hundred times as many, died from preventable causes. It fails, however, to state that the number of hospital admissions nearly equaled the entire strength of the invading army, and that the camps of the army from one end of the island to the other were pestiferous hotbeds of disease before they had been occupied a month, so that had the bugle sounded for action only a small percentage of the units would have been in a condition to respond to the call. Nor was this state of affairs confined to Porto Rico. In the invading armies of the Philippines and Cuba the same conditions prevailed. The official figures, as shown in Table II, were furnished by the Surgeon-General of the Army on the 10th day of October, 1905, and cover the vital statistics of the United States military expeditions for the year 1898.

TABLE II.

	Deaths from—
	Battle casualties.	Disease.
In the Philippine Islands	17	203
In Porto Rico	3	262
In Cuba	273	567
In the United States home camps, etc		2,649
Total deaths	293	3,681

or about one from casualties to fourteen from disease.

The report further shows that while the average mean strength of the Army enlisted for the Spanish war was about 170,000, the total number of admissions to the hospitals was on September 10, 1898, over 158,000, or 90 per cent. This in a war of less than three months' duration, and in which more than three-fourths of its members never left the camps of their native land. The Japanese army for the same period had about 4 per cent hospital admissions, or one twenty-second as many.

The vast difference in the Japanese figures illustrates the value of a medical and sanitary department properly equipped to enforce practical sanitation, dietary, and conservative surgery.

The splendid achievements of scientific medicine in civil life in the prevention of disease should be even more effectually obtained in the Army, where only healthy men are accepted, and vigorous outdoor camp life should keep its units, who are subject to strict military discipline, in perfect physical condition. Health alone, however, is no guaranty against the insidious attack of the silent foe that lingers in every camp and bivouac. It is this foe, as the records of wars for the past two hundred years have proved, that is responsible for four times as many deaths as the guns of the enemy, to say nothing of the vast number temporarily invalided or discharged as unfit for duty. It is this dreadful unnecessary sacrifice of life from preventable disease that constitutes the hell of war. In every great campaign an army faces two enemies. First, the armed force of the opposing foe, with its various machines for human destruction that is met at intervals in open battle; and, second, the hidden foe, always lurking in the camp, the specter that gathers its victims while the soldier slumbers in barrack or bivouac—the far greater, silent foe, disease. Of these enemies the history of warfare for centuries has proved that in extended campaigns the first or open enemy kills 20 per cent of the total mortality, while the second or silent enemy kills 80 per cent. In other words, out of every hundred men who fall in war, twenty die from the casualties of battle, while eighty perish from disease, most of which is preventable.

TABLE III.

	Battle casualties.	Disease.
In the Russo-Turkish war the deaths were	20,000	80,000
In the six months of the Crimean campaign, as is asserted on eminent authority, the losses of the allied forces were	20,000	50,000
In our war with Mexico the proportion was	1 to 3
In our civil war about the same proportion	1 to 3
In the French campaign in Madagascar in 1894 of 14,000 sent to the front, 29 were killed in action and over 7,000 perished from preventable disease	29	7,000
In the Boer war in South Africa the English losses were about	1 to 10
In our war with Spain 14 lives were needlessly sacrificed to ignorance and incompetency for every 1 who died on the firing line or from the result of wounds, the figures being	293	3,681
In the Russo-Japanese war the figures were[a]	58,887	27,168

[a] Or more than 2 from battle casualties to 1 from disease, thus reversing the records of all wars for the past 200 years.

The difference between the martyr and the victim, between the soldier who falls on the field of honor and the man who meets a miserable death from preventable disease, for which his government is criminally responsible, is as wide as the celestial diameters. The one meets death compensated in the thought that his life is given in the protection of his country's flag and honor; the other is ignominiously forced to his grave through the neglect of the government that shamefully fails to protect the life he offered in its defense.

That the monstrous sacrifice of 80 per cent is almost totally unnecessary has been abundantly proved in the records of the Japanese war, where 1,200,000 men were sent to the front, in a country notoriously unsanitary, and only 27,000 men died from disease, to 59,000 who fell in the legitimate line of duty on the field of honor. In the Army of the United States in 1898 2,649 picked soldiers died in three months, without leaving the country, in the pest camps of this, their own native land.

Unless an army maintains a thoroughly organized sanitary corps, prepared to fight germs and diseases in advance of the fighting forces, testing the water supplies, and avoiding the dangers from contagion and infection, the medical department might as well be abolished. If the Japanese had not realized this before their last war and taken measures to prevent disease, their army would never have won their brilliant and uninterrupted series of victories. If they had sustained the same ratio of mortality from sickness as in their war with China ten years before, their losses from disease alone in the Russian war would have nearly equaled the total of their entire losses from all causes. This proves the value of the medical and sanitary corps, and illustrates its importance as a factor in the winning of the final issue.

The days of operative surgery on the field of battle or at the front passed with the discovery of asepsis and antisepsis. The Russo-Japanese war taught many lessons and destroyed many ideals in matters military as in matters surgical, where the hitherto accepted idea of the duties of the military surgeon was shown to be erroneous, where asepsis and antisepsis relegated the use of the scalpel to comparative obscurity and demonstrated conclusively that preservation of the army by prevention of disease is the surgeon's duty, first, last, and nearly all the time. In surgical technique, or in the after treatment of the wounded and sick, the Japanese taught the foreigner comparatively little, but in the field of sanitary science and dietetics they demonstrated, what had never been done before, viz, that preventable diseases are preventable and can be controlled and that the great incubus of an army in the field—the presence of crowded hospitals and the large and expensive force necessary to equip and conduct them—can to a large extent be eliminated.

It is a sad reflection on our civilization that, while we regard as essential separate Departments of State, Agriculture, and War in the Executive Cabinet at Washington, and issue bulletins for public distribution on swine cholera, cabbage culture, and crop reports, principally used by speculators, we deliberately ignore the safeguarding of our people from the horrors of infection and contagion. While the rest of the world has been making these splendid advances in the humanities, America—except in institutions fostered by private philanthropy—has stood in stolid indifference, doing little to stem the tide of destruction. We have allowed the wreckage and waste to go on, to cripple the energy with which we must challenge the future.

The relation of our Federal Government to public health has assumed some national importance, and if the efforts of the various medical societies of the country, the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the American Museum of Safety Devices, various insurance, accident, and allied associations, are successful, it may receive a little more recognition. The paramount want is for a national board of health with a secretary in the Cabinet of the President.

If this can not be secured, a more liberal policy toward the national bureau of health connected with the Marine-Hospital Service is much to be desired. Through an extension of the services of this organization the death rate of the country may be enormously decreased—possibly to the extent of one-third to one-half—and the general health of the community benefited by the eradication or amelioration of disease from preventable causes. But, as Doctor Walsh recently stated: "If the millions spent for the extermination of hog cholera during the last decade had been spent for the preservation of the public health, we should be far ahead of where we are to-day."

In the light of modern and sanitary science there is little excuse for the enormous losses by illness and death through typhoid, diphtheria, scarlet fever, cholera infantum, and dysentery, all of which are preventable. The names of these diseases do not inspire the same terror as bubonic plague, yellow fever, cholera, and smallpox, but their victims are just as dead, and their bereaved are just as desolate. And these diseases might be stamped out quite as effectually as the others, with proper enforcement of sanitary precautions.

It is stated that the appointment of a secretary of health in the President's Cabinet and the enforcement of regulations for the public health would interfere with the rights of States, but do the germs of cholera and yellow fever and tuberculosis and bubonic plague and measles respect State lines? And do streams polluted with cholera and typhoid bacilli cease to flow at State borders? Interstate commerce is not considered as an interference with State rights; then why should interstate disease be so regarded?

Prior to the enactment of the pure-food laws, which are now producing such beneficial results in the preservation of the public health, the same argument was advanced, but the passage of the act, instead of restricting the States, has induced them to enact similar or even more drastic laws in the same line; and no one objects—except the manufacturer or seller of adulterated products.

The estimation in which the authorities at Washington hold the only national institution we have for the preservation of the public health was recently evidenced by the efforts of a late member of the Cabinet to abolish or restrict the work of the Marine-Hospital Service on account of its expense. Many kinds of fools are required in the making of a world, but the American who would seriously advise the abolition of this last-named institution combines in his single self the whole "fifty-seven varieties."

Disease is an enemy that causes more fatalities in a year than the combined armies of the world do in a century. As well might a general in an enemy's country abolish his pickets and outposts as for America, with its extensive coast lines, its foreign commerce, and its enormous immigration to do without its Marine-Hospital Service. I have seen these zealous guardians of our public health in almost every port with which we have commercial relations, always watchful lest contagious or infectious diseases might elude them and fasten on our native land, and with a fairly liberal personal experience and knowledge of our Government in its various Departments at home and abroad,

I assert that the United States Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service is the one Department of which Americans have most reason to feel justly proud. Instead of restricting its powers, they should be amplified; instead of cutting down its appropriation, it should be increased. In no Department of our Government does the nation receive better returns on its investment, even though some of the mentally myopic politicians of the present Administration fail to discover it.

And this argument applies with equal force to the Medical Department of the Army. We go on expending nearly half a million dollars a day for the maintenance of our military schools, the education of men in the art of war, and the manufacture of machines for human destruction, and in the plant necessary for putting these machines into execution, while the study of the equally important subject of prevention of disease—the foe that kills four times as many as the enemy's bullets—is left comparatively unheeded. Every death from preventable disease is an insult to the intelligence of the age; if it occurs in an Army, it becomes a governmental crime. The state deprives the soldier of his liberty, prescribes his hours of rest, his exercise, equipment, dress, diet, the locality in which he shall reside, and in the hour of danger expects him, if necessary, to lay down his life in defense of its honor. It should therefore give him the best sanitation and the best medical supervision that the science of the age can devise, be it German or Japanese—a fact of which Congress will do well to take cognizance before it begins another war. For just as surely as the engineer who disregards the signals, or the train dispatcher who gives wrong orders, is legally responsible for the loss of human life in the wreck that follows, so Congress, or the wretched system of the Medical Department of its Army, is responsible for the thousands of soldiers' lives needlessly, criminally sacrificed—not on the glorious field of battle, but in diseased camps—from preventable causes. I believe that if the medical department of the Porto Rican expedition had been properly systematized, with sufficient numbers, with supervisory control over the ration, and with power to enforce sanitary and hygienic regulations, the units of that army would have returned to their homes at the close of the campaign in better physical condition than when they had entered it, improved by their summer outing.

The Medical Department of our Army, whose archaic system almost parallels that of Peking, while falling far below that of Patagonia (and I am familiar with both and speak advisedly), although unequal to cope with the exigencies of the Spanish campaign, is to-day, as the Surgeon-General states, relatively 50 per cent worse off in numbers than at the close of the civil war in 1864 or at the termination of the Spanish-American campaign. The theory upon which it is founded—that the cure of disease rather than its prevention is its objective—still remains in vogue. Although men of brilliant attainments and individual merit are found on its staff, the deplorable system under which they are compelled to serve, and their lack of authority to enforce sanitation and hygiene, render the advisability of the continuance of the Department under present conditions problematical. If it had been totally abolished during the Spanish-American war and the Army placed under the control of the health department of this city, with such an officer as Colonel Waring or its present incumbent in charge, there would not have been such a disgraceful and infamous record. And why? Simply because that department would have had authority to enforce the orders respecting sanitation, diet, and hygiene, and would have assured the safety of the troops.

Under the present system the same old medical regulations remain in vogue, to all intents and purposes, as prevailed before the microbic origin of disease was discovered and the key to sanitation found. So that, if another war were to be declared next summer, our Government would again convert the units of its Army into hospital patients and its veterans into pensioners.

The deplorable collapse of the Medical Department in the Spanish war resulted in the introduction into Congress of a measure to increase its efficiency. The essential features of this bill are merely to increase the commissioned personnel of the medic corps, thereby abolishing the present system of employing contract surgeons, to afford an adequate flow of promotion, and to establish a so-called "medical reserve corps," recruited from recent graduates, who, after examination, may be listed as available for service in time of war. No provision, however, is made for the instruction or training of these reserves.

As a measure of true reform the bill is hopelessly deficient in most essential features. It makes no provision for that most important of all adjuncts, an adequate sanitary department. One keen, up-to-date sanitarian, thoroughly skilled in hygienic, dietetic, and bacteriological knowledge, and armed with the necessary authority to enforce sanitary measures, is worth a hundred so-called "surgeons" to an army in the field, restricted, as they now are, by red tape and lack of authority in matters relating to their special department. No provision is made for an independent transport system, nor are medical officers given advisory authority over the Commissary Department or the soldiers' ration. A regiment may be suffering from diarrhea or intestinal catarrh (and I have seen 90 per cent of an entire command in this condition at one time), compelled to live on a diet of pork and canned beans and fermenting tomatoes until they became hospital cases. Up to this time, the medical officer has no authority to even order a rice diet, which would have prevented the men from becoming invalided. This was one of the principal causes that brought our Army of 170,000 men in the Spanish war almost to its knees in the three months, and sent them home in the shrunken and shriveled condition well remembered by many here to-night.

Under the present system the line officer of the Army is under no obligation to accept the recommendation of the medical officer as to the site or sanitation of a camp. Even in time of peace he has no executive power to enforce sanitation, although he may be convinced that the health of every man is being jeopardized.

I quote from a letter received last week from a prominent medical officer in the Philippines. He says:

"Recently a post commander, without the knowledge of his medical officers, gave permission to a native to dam up a stream on the reservation. The post had been kept free from mosquitos and malaria only by the utmost vigilance. The medical officers protested personally, officially, and by special sanitary reports, but to no purpose. Almost every house soon became infected, one of the surgeons lost his wife, and there were over forty cases. Finally a new post commander tore out the dam. The post was Camp Daraga."

One would suppose that every effort of the medical officers to maintain the health and vigor of the fighting units would be welcomed, and all the authority necessary to keep them so would be gladly accorded by the officers of the line, so in the reality of battle the men would be in the best physical condition. But this is not the case.

The officers of artillery, of cavalry, of infantry, the engineers, and of the signal service, can compel obedience to their orders, but the medical man, whose department fights the foe that has killed 80 per cent in the majority of the great wars of history, can not enforce an order, but can only make a recommendation, which the line officer can accept or reject at his discretion.

The bill ignores the pressing need for medical inspectors and contains no provision for the establishment of a department of pharmacy. This should have at its head a commissioned officer like the late Dr. C. C. Rice, of Bellevue, with commissioned subordinates, as is found in several of the best-organized armies abroad. It should be charged with the purchase and distribution of all medical supplies, the sterilization and care of all surgical instruments, first-aid materials, and the care of hospital records. This would relieve the medical officer of the complicated system of bookkeeping, invoicing, and other similar work that now makes him little more than a property clerk and decreases his value as a physician in ratio to the time he remains in service and wastes the valuable hours he should devote to the legitimate duties of his profession. The civil practitioner gave up the practice of toting his pills and powder when the scientific pharmacist appeared; but Congress, apparently unaware of this adjunct to the medical art, still compels the Army surgeon to peddle his shop wherever he goes, and holds him personally and financially responsible and liable for every item of equipment of the hospital and drug department of which he has charge, be it base, field, or post hospital.

Wherein is the fault of the present system? First and foremost, in the faulty organization of the Medical Department. The rank of Surgeon-General should be commensurate with the importance of the Department of which he is the head. Under a proper system this officer should be responsible only to a national secretary of health, who should be a Cabinet officer, to the Secretary of War, or to the President, and there should be conferred upon him and his subordinates authority in all matters of sanitation and hygiene, except in the emergency of battle, when, of course, all authority should devolve on the officers of the line.

The importance of the medical, as compared with the other staff departments, has never been recognized or appreciated. Until it is realized that the most important function of the medical officer is in the prevention of disease rather than its cure the old custom will prevail. To be efficient, the medical officer must not only be a good physician, but a sanitarian, a bacteriologist, often a chemist, as well as an administrator. Upon him devolves the duty of preventing disease, and his part in maintaining the effectiveness of the units makes him an important factor in the military establishment. His status is essentially military, not in the sense of holding command, but as an integral part of an organization complex in its composition, and whose different members should be so organized as to produce a harmonious and effective whole. Under the existing system he is looked upon simply as a doctor, whose sole function is treating the sick and wounded—whose duties should be confined to the hospital, and whose recommendations should be submitted only when asked for.

In all the wars in which the United States have engaged disease has been responsible for more than 70 per cent of the mortality, more than one-half of which could have easily been prevented had the Medical Department been properly organized and equipped. Preventable disease more than wounds swells the pension lists. Statistics of the Pension Office prove that if this unnecessary loss had been avoided the saving in pensions alone would have paid the cost of the resulting war every twenty-five years. Aside from the sorrow of the homes made desolate, consider the economic value of the 70 per cent of lives now uselessly sacrificed that might be saved as breadwinners in industrial pursuits.

The entire appropriation of the Medical Department for the fiscal year of 1898 was less than $1,000,000; this was increased at the outbreak of hostilities with Spain by something over $2,000,000. Then came the war. As a result of that almost bloodless conflict, the actual hostilities of which lasted only less than six weeks, we paid last year alone $3,471,157 in pensions, with the further assurance of an annual increase for many years to come. The rolls of the Pension Office to-day bear the names of 24,000 pensioners, over 19,000 of whom are invalids and survivors of this war, and over 18,000 additional claims are now pending, although the total of the Cuban army of invasion was only 20,000 men. Last year we paid in pensions a total of $146,000,000; this year the appropriation estimated for has increased to $151,000,000. Are the fatalities of the past to be dismissed from the equation of the future? Instead of repeating our own blunders, why not emulate the successes of others? Possibly the recent action of the Executive in placing a medical officer in command of a hospital, although that hospital chanced to be afloat, may indicate a ray of hope.

It is far from certain, however, that Congress alone is responsible for the deplorable system of our Medical Department. Why does not the Surgeon-General demand from Congress all that is required to make the department really effective, even though the needed appropriation may be increased tenfold? Why does he not marshal his facts and figures and present them in illustration of the suicidal policy of allowing this great waste from preventable disease, thereby demonstrating the value of the medical man as a financial asset? Why does he not show that his department could pay for itself many times over in the annual saving of pensions now resulting from its neglect—that statistics prove this loss amounts every twenty-five years to more than the cost of the war that caused it? Why does he not show the enormous increase in the efficiency of the Army that would result from having fighting men instead of invalids in its ranks? Also the enormous economic value of the lives of the 70 per cent now wasted that might be saved to their families as breadwinners instead of invalids and pensioners? Then let Congress refuse his demand, if it dare assume that responsibility. The liberality and generosity of our nation to its pensioners prove we are not always actuated by base or sordid motives; and if Congress or the American people could be convinced of the necessity for these reforms there would be little difficulty in obtaining their enactment.

Permit a moment's digression to narrate the personal experiences of a soldier, a member of the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States, which occurred within sight of the Dome of the Capitol at Washington. He writes:

"My Dear Seaman: On May 1, 1898, my regiment was sent from our home station to Homestead, L. I., for reorganization from a national guard regiment to a regiment of volunteers for service in the war with Spain. Our hospital corps of trained men was taken from us, as well as our medical supplies and instruments, and the regimental staff of three surgeons was reduced to one, with the rank and pay of a first lieutenant—rather short-handed for a full regiment of 1,333 men. Early in July I was detailed as sanitary inspector of the Army corps to which we were attached, as typhoid fever was breaking out rapidly in every organization attached to the corps.

"My instructions were to inspect all camp sites, sinks, water supply, drainage, food, method of cooking, etc., and report in writing to the chief medical officer of the corps daily. I assumed the duties with great zeal, for sanitary problems had long been a favorite study, as I had been chief medical officer of my home city, with its population of nearly 400,000, for six years.

"There was at that time a young man in my regiment who formerly belonged to my hospital corps, a graduate of Cornell University, who had taken a post-graduate course in analytical chemistry and was well qualified for chemical and bacteriological work; also a private in a hospital corps detachment, encamped near us, who a few days before his enlistment had returned from Germany, where he had been a student and assistant in Koch's laboratory for four years. A valuable microscope was found in the first division of the hospital, which, as it was not used there, we were assured we could have.

"A list of the required material was prepared, with a probable cost of less than $50, and everything looked favorable for a successful inauguration of my plan. I accordingly drew up a communication to the chief medical officer of the corps, outlining the proposed work, showing how we could analyze suspected foods and water, make the Widal test, blood counts, etc., and do such other work as would naturally present itself. I also informed him that all details had been arranged, and the only thing required to inaugurate the work at once was the proper orders from corps headquarters. It is impossible to express my surprise and disappointment when my plan was returned 'disapproved,' giving as the reason that the men whom I had selected to do the scientific work were not commissioned officers, but only enlisted men, and that 'it would violate all the traditions of the Army to do this work in this manner,' and that 'it was useless to establish a bacteriological laboratory in the field, as it could be of no practical benefit.' In vain I pleaded the urgent need of the hour, that the work could be done in my name, or even in the name of the chief medical officer, but all to no purpose. The plan for the scientific work was thoroughly 'sat down on.'

"I then respectfully asked what plan could be substituted, and was informed that application would be made for a detail of contract surgeons, especially qualified, who would aid in the work as outlined. My zeal, acquired as an old national guard officer, subsided, and I plodded on in my work, looking on and seeing preventable disease sweeping away our soldier boys, and nothing, absolutely nothing, being done to find the source of the infection or prevent its spread.

"The summer passed, the war was over, taps had been sounded over the graves of hundreds of brave boys who had never heard the hum of a hostile bullet, and early in September we were ordered to our home station to be mustered out.

"It was a beautiful Sunday morning, and the site where more than 20,000 men had been encamped was practically deserted. I could hear the sound of the drums and bugles coming faintly through the woods as the regiment marched to the railroad. I lingered at the site of the first division hospital with an ambulance to bring the last of our sick away, when my orderly informed me that an officer wished to see me, and pointed to a man seated on a stump near by. I approached him and was informed that he was a contract surgeon, sent by the Department to report for bacteriological work. I told him that I was glad to see him, but that the war was over, that such of the soldiers who had not died of disease were now on their way home to be mustered out, and that I hoped he would stick to his post, so he would be ready for service when the next war broke out."

And there is nothing in the medical bill now before Congress to keep that man on the stump, so he may be ready when the next war does come, or for his substitute in case he, too, may have joined the great majority before that time.

Is the great medical profession—a profession that in one of the bloodiest wars of history has contributed so largely in reducing the mortality of deaths from disease—to remain subservient to the dictates of the variety of judgment just cited, or is its department in our Army to be reorganized upon rational lines, and its personnel empowered to enforce its mandates, so that the medical and moral rights of the soldier may be safeguarded and the country receive the benefit of his protection?

Boast as we may of our national patriotism and philanthropy, our altruism in freeing Cuba from the tyranny of Spain and in elevating the status of that bunch of trouble, the Philippines, our foreign missions, and our great systems of charity at home, the cold, clammy fact remains that the sons of Nippon in their war with Russia treated their prisoners with far more humanity than our nation does its own soldiers.

In the great oriental conflict just concluded not once did the Muscovite win a victory, but from the Yalu to Mukden was driven from the field and often left to his victors the care of his sick, his wounded, and his dead. Sixty-seven thousand sick Russian prisoners were brought to Japan from Manchuria and nursed back to health. And to the eternal credit and glory of Japan let it be remembered that from the first-aid dressing on the firing line to the transport, the subsistence, the medical care, and the gentle nursing in her home hospitals, no difference was made between the treatment of her own soldiers and those of the enemy. Therefore, without minimizing the splendor of her victories on land or sea, at the Yalu, Port Arthur, Mukden, Shaho, Laioyang, or with Togo at Tshushima, the fact remains that Japan's most splendid evolution and her greatest triumphs have been in the humanities of war. By careful preparation and organization the use of simple, easily digested rations for her troops, and the application of practical sanitation by a fully equipped and empowered medical department, she almost obliterated infectious and preventable diseases from her army and saved its units for the legitimate purposes of war, to wit, the smashing of the enemy in the field. She reduced the mortality in her own army by over 80 per cent, and treated her prisoners with a charity and consideration heretofore unheard of in the history of war, and established a standard in the humanities which the rest of the civilized world will do well to attain.

Let us hope that the day is not distant when the true value of the medical man in war will be appreciated in our own land and will be given the authority in his own sphere that will make it possible for our Army in the day of emergency to equal, if not surpass, this splendid record. Braver men never served with the colors than the American soldiers, as we proved on both sides of the civil war, where many battles (in one of which, at Cold Harbor, 10,000 men fell in ten minutes) exceeded anything known in the Orient, and where it was conclusively proved that our soldier deserves every care and protection a generous Government can bestow.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment correcting the punctuation.

Line 8, after the word "disinfectants," insert a comma; in line 12, after the word "hospitals," insert a comma; line 22, after the word "for," when it first occurs, insert a comma.

The amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Engineer School, Washington, D. C.: Equipment and maintenance of the Engineer School of Application at Washington Barracks, D. C., including purchase of instruments, machinery, implements, models, and materials, for the use of the school and for instruction of engineer troops in their special duties as sappers and miners; for land mining, pontoniering, and signaling; for purchase and binding of professional works of recent date treating of military and civil engineering and kindred scientific subjects, for the library of the United States Engineer School; for incidental expenses of the school, including fuel, lights, chemicals, stationery, hardware, machinery, and boats; for pay of civilian clerks, draftsmen, electricians, mechanics, and laborers; for extra-duty pay to soldiers necessarily employed for periods not less than ten days as artificers on work in addition to and not strictly in the line of their military duties, such as carpenters, blacksmiths, draftsmen, printers, lithographers, photographers, engine drivers, telegraph operators, teamsters, wheelwrights, masons, machinists, painters, overseers, laborers; for repairs of, and materials to repair, public buildings, and machinery; for unforeseen expenses, for travel expenses of officers on journeys approved by the Chief of Engineers and made for the purpose of instruction: Provided, That the traveling expenses herein provided for shall be in lieu of mileage and other allowances; and to provide means for the theoretical and practical instruction at the Engineer School by the purchase of text-books, books of reference, scientific and professional papers, and for other absolutely necessary expenses, $25,000.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, on page 42, line 19, after the word "expenses," "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay double salaries to any employee of the Engineer's School."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I reserve the point of order to ask what the object of it is.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The object is to discourage a practice, which I am told does obtain, of paying two salaries to certain employees. For example, one employee is alleged to receive a salary, and quite a large salary to begin with, and as reimbursment for his services in a particular line of work he is assigned to in addition to that, I am informed he receives $25 per month for certain other work, which he does not perform, but which a subordinate does, and this other man gets the salary.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I understand it is done in some of the Departments not covered by this bill. The superintendent gets $300 extra.

Mr. SLAYDEN. This is not the superintendent.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We decline to give it to one.

Mr. SLAYDEN. One was asked for in another school and we declined to give it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. My understanding is that extra compensation is not carried to anyone in this bill. I have no objection to the amendment if there is any danger of somebody getting two salaries.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am told it is an absolute fact, and I believe it to be true.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw the point of order?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction and completion of a building for the post headquarters, engineer school, engineer library, and engineer museum, $350,000: Provided, That no plans shall be adopted for the completion of the establishment of the engineer school and post at Washington Barracks, D. C., in accordance with the general lay out of the post and school which was approved by the Secretary of War on December 22, 1904, that shall require a total expenditure in excess of $767,000, including the sum of $350,000 hereby appropriated.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order on that paragraph, and will ask the gentleman if he will state the reason for the appropriation. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that while evidently the intention of the commitee was to put a limit on the cost of this building there is no such limit in this item.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, there ought to be.

Mr. MANN. The item provides that plans shall not be adopted which will require a total expenditure in excess of $767,000. That is a limitation on the War Department, but not a limitation on future appropriations by Congress at all; and, of course, practically means nothing, because if they adopt plans for a building that costs $2,000,000 and commence the building, and come in here for an appropriation, it would not be subject to the point of order; and while the Department might be guilty of reprehensible practice, they could not tell in advance what possibly the plans might involve. It is customary to put a limit upon the cost of the building.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Very well. I think it ought to be amended in some way to absolutely limit the cost of the building. We thought we had made it so it could not exceed the appropriation. What do you suggest?

Mr. MANN. What is the necessity of this building? As I understand, they have just completed a building at the school already provided for by Congress, and what is the necessity of this?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. What is the necessity of this building?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We have completed the building that has been appropriated for, but not this building, which is provided under the plans adopted by the War Department.

Mr. MANN. Not the building upon plans adopted by the War Department, but plans adopted by Congress.

Mr. TAWNEY. The particular building was the library and museum.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will call the attention of the gentleman to what is contained here in the hearings, and the gentleman, of course, has the estimates before him, which set out the matter pretty fully.

Mr. MANN. I will confess to the gentleman that I have not read the hearings or estimates on this subject, but I have read the report concerning this school, and from that report I can see no excuse whatever for this building.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is not a school entirely. It is also a place where the entire Corps of Engineers that are not on active duty, the enlisted force, and a few officers of the Engineer Corps have their barracks and quarters.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand that this is to provide barracks and quarters for the engineers. I do not know why we should have any large number of engineers here in Washington in connection with barracks and quarters. The engineers of the Army are scattered all over the country and there is a demand for them.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is the officers on river and harbor work, but the men do not go to all parts of the country, and many of the officers are line. We have here an engineer school, training the men in pontooning and the different work of the Engineer Corps, training them constantly. We have only part of the officers here, but part of them are always kept with the troops, and as those that are on river and harbor work are shifted around, their duties changing, they come to take the place of those who are here, so that there are always quite a good many officers here, and necessarily so.

Mr. MANN. I have no criticism to make of the Engineer Department of the Army. I have very great respect for that, and expect to have it as long as I have any river and harbor improvements in my district. [Laughter.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The hearings are quite full here as to the matter. The present engineer school building has had to be torn down, and new staff officers' quarters built there. The library building has been removed, the hospital has been removed, and they are in process of erecting the buildings to complete the plan that was provided at the time the school was moved to Washington, and this is one of the buildings. They wanted double this amount, but the committee believed we could carry on the work just as economically if we only gave part each year. In speaking of this main building, where so many different departments of the school are to be housed, I use the word "school" with the explanation that it is more than a school. There is a large detachment of troops permanently located there. The committee thought this large building was more important than any of the others that they asked for.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's appropriation bill this year carries how many million dollars more than the bill of last year?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It carries about $7,000,000 more than it did last year.

Mr. TAWNEY. Eight million dollars more.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; in round numbers it was $78,000,000 last year and $85,000,000 this year. Of course, it is increased by the action of the House on the pay of enlisted men.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That will make it $90,000,000, will it not?

Mr. MANN. Outside of the increase in pay, for instance, as I understand, you carry about two and a half million dollars in order to get in a supply of clothing.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that under the circumstances, with the large increase in the appropriation, they can wait another year for the commencement of a building which is not absolutely necessary, in view of the present condition of our finances?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman, of course they can wait if we do not appropriate, but Major Winslow, in command of this school here, gave a very good reason in his statement, on pages 59, 60, and 61 of the hearings, why this building at least should be built, and the committee believed it was important to commence its erection now. Of course if the gentleman desires to strike it out, I shall be sorry, but I recognize the absolute right of the Committee of the Whole to do it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to have to differ with the chairman of the committee on any matter, for I believe that we of the Military Affairs Committee all labor in a conscientious and earnest desire to make the needful appropriations, to make them with a view to economy of the public service, and to the saving of the public moneys as far as possible.

But I can not refrain from saying that I believe this engineer school is one of the most expensive, inexcusably expensive, propositions that we have ever had. Two or three years ago I called attention to the manner in which the appropriations were secured. We first made an appropriation of $500,000 under the impression that it would build completely and equip the building, or buildings, that would serve all the purposes of the school.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the gentleman from Texas will pardon me, he ought not to charge that up to the Engineer School; that is the War College and has nothing to do with the Engineer School.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am speaking of the Engineer School. We have spent some hundred thousand dollars on this engineer school and they have eleven students.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman is mixing up the War College with the school for engineers.

Mr. SLAYDEN. How many students have they got in this engineer school?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. All the enlisted men.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Student officers?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Students stationed here, nowhere else.

Mr. SLAYDEN. We have spent $1,010,000. The statement was made the other day that there were nine student officers, and that usually there were an average of eleven. We first made an appropriation of $500,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Major Winslow stated that there were eleven at the War College.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And since then we have appropriated $350,000 to complete it. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa if I am mistaken in these appropriations that I have named, and if they were for the War College?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The $800,000 was for the War College. We started it at $500,000, and supposed that that would finish it. The only thing that has to do with the Engineer School is it is to be located on the same reservation.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What is this Engineer School?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is a collection of buildings, barracks, and quarters for the officers and men of the engineer regiment.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And it has nine student officers at this time.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman is mixing up the school with the War College. The amount appropriated here is for barracks for enlisted men and officers' quarters.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I believe that nowhere else in the world will there be found so costly a proposition as these two institutions—the Army War College and the Engineer School—have been for the Government; they are equally extravagant, inexcusably extravagant, and I think this appropriation can well wait.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman thinks that a strict construction of the rule would make this provision inadmissible. It is true there have been rulings which have stretched the rule almost to the breaking point.

The pioneer decision upon this matter was made by Mr. Cox, of New York, when presiding over the committee, something like twenty years ago, and that decision has been followed in other cases—at one time by the present occupant of the chair in a case that seemed to the Chair at the time was on all fours with the case presented at the time Mr. Cox rendered his decision; and the present occupant of the chair then stated that the decision was based entirely on the ruling of Mr. Cox. The case here presented is not on all fours, it seems to the Chair, with that case presented to Mr. Cox as chairman of the committee. It is going a step further than the rulings have heretofore gone, in the wrong direction, and the Chair thinks we have reached the limit of the elasticity of the rule, and therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Small-arms target practice: Ammunition, targets, and other accessories for small-arms and machine-gun target practice and instruction, and for the military instruction and target practice of students of educational institutions and inmates of soldiers and sailors' orphans' homes to which issues of small arms may lawfully be made; marksmen's medals, prize arms, and insignia for all arms of the service, $1,300,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I would like to ask the gentleman to what extent it is expected to use $1,300,000 in teaching the babies how to handle firearms?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I should say a small amount. We issue these obsolete guns practically to all military institutions, or institutions where they have military instruction, and to soldiers and sailors' orphans' homes. We inserted this at request of Chief of Ordnance so that they could issue ammunition fit for these guns for practice.

Mr. MANN. Is not this a new provision in the bill, "and for the military instruction and target practice of students of educational institutions?" I understand they are talking about giving Government instruction to pupils in the primary schools throughout the States as to how to use guns.

Mr. HAY. I will suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that the Chief of Ordnance stated that he had been issuing these guns heretofore, and that it had been the custom of the Department to do it; but he said there was no law for it, and he would not continue to do it unless it was placed in the bill.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The present law is "ammunition, targets, and other accessories for small-arms and machine-gun target practice and instruction."

Mr. MANN. "And for the military instruction and target practice of students of educational institutions"——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; from the word "instruction," where it appears in line 19, down to and including the words "may lawfully be made," in line 22, it is all new and subject to the point of order, if the gentleman insists upon it.

Mr. MANN. I shall insist upon it, unless the gentleman can give us some information.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have very little information on the subject. They have been issuing it, as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] says.

Mr. MANN. I make a point of order commencing in line 19, with the word "and," down to and including the word "made," in line 22. There is no authority of law for this, and it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

National trophy and medals for rifle contests: That for the purpose of furnishing a national trophy and medals and other prizes to be provided and contested for annually, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, said contest to be open to the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and the National Guard or organized militia of the several States, Territories, and of the District of Columbia, and for the cost of the trophy, prizes, and medals herein provided for, and for the promotion of rifle practice, the sum of $5,000, to be expended for the purposes hereinbefore prescribed under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of line 14, page 46:
"Provided, That the trophies and medals herein authorized shall be contested for only by the enlisted men of the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the National Guard or organized militia of the several States, Territories, and of the District of Columbia."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out in line 12, page 46, the words "the sum of $5,000." They also appear in line 14.

Mr. MANN. It ought to be out of either one line or the other.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would strike it out in the first place.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to striking out the words "the sum of $5,000" appearing in line 12, page 46? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

For range finders and other instruments for fire control in field batteries, $165,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 17, page 46, insert:
"For the purchase of material, equipment, books of instruction, range finders, and fire-control equipment, for the instruction and use of State coast artillery organizations, $25,000."

Mr. TAWNEY. I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this came to us in a supplemental estimate for the use of the militia in connection with the Coast Artillery. If it were for the Coast Artillery proper, it would undoubtedly go to the Committee on Appropriations, but the Committee on Military Affairs has had entire control of all the equipment of militia, both in its field batteries and other matters where it is to go to the militia.

Mr. TAWNEY. I shall not make a point of order on that. As I understand it, the amendment is primarily to enable the Department to furnish the militia with the equipment necessary to the use of the range finders or fire control in the artillery practice.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Everything that makes them more efficient in cooperating with the Coast Artillery.

Mr. TAWNEY. It relates particularly to fire control, does it not?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have no objection to it, and I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whenever proposals are invited for the furnishing of articles of ordnance property the character of which or the ingredients thereof are of such a nature that the interests of the public service would be injured by publicly divulging them, the Chief of Ordnance is authorized to purchase such articles in such manner as he may deem most economical and efficient.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph. I would like to ask the gentleman some questions. It is the most startling provision I have seen for a long time, to permit any Department of the Government to expend almost any sum of money without any safeguards whatever.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to say to the gentleman that I regard that as the most important provision in the bill. To-day the United States Government, experimenting with high explosives has got to go into the market and advertise to the whole world all the material that enters into what we are manufacturing. No other nation on earth does that. This is to enable the Chief of Ordnance to purchase materials that enter into these high explosives without advertising to the world the line of experiment that he is indulging in.

Of course they would not know exactly how he would combine these high explosives, even if they did know what he was buying or what large quantities he was accumulating, but by their own experimentations in the same line they could very nearly duplicate our work; and I think the committee was unanimous on this, at least I have not heard of any dissent, that this one provision in the bill is of the most vital consequence to us in our preparation of high explosives and munitions of war for the national defense.

Mr. MANN. Well, that may be, in a way. I have been listening for a number of days to arguments and hearings on the subject of the transportation of high explosives. We have just reported into the House a bill giving to the Interstate Commerce Commission regulations to govern the transportation of high explosives which may require them to know of what the high explosives may consist; a bill that ought to be passed and a bill that met the approval of the War Department, by the way, as I understand. Now, you do not confine this to explosives at all. You practically say in this provision that the Chief of Ordnance may spend the entire sum of money appropriated in this bill without inviting any proposals or making public in any way what is to be purchased, and leave it solely within his control. It may be true that no other government does it.

It is undoubtedly true that there is no other government on the face of the globe where honesty is so prevalent in the purchase of public supplies as in the United States, for it is a most common thing, as we know, in a great many foreign countries for officers of the government to get a rake-off on this and a rake-off on that in the way of purchase of public supplies, and I do not want to see that occur in our Government.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman makes his point of order, I want to call attention, because it is subject to the point of order, to the language here. It says:

The character of which or the ingredients thereof are of such a nature that the interests of the public service would be injured by publicly divulging them, the Chief of Ordnance, etc.

That does not and can not apply to the matters carried in the bill generally.

Mr. MANN. Who determines that, the Auditor or the Comptroller?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The Chief of Ordnance.

Mr. MANN. And all he has to do in purchasing a gun is to certify that it is not desirable to make known the character or ingredients——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am inclined to think if the gentleman was Secretary of War and an ordnance officer came with such a proposition to purchase a gun he would hunt up a new ordnance officer at once.

Mr. MANN. I do not know that the Secretary of War has authority to hunt up a new officer.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The President has, absolutely.

Mr. MANN. The President may have the right to designate, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, but there is nobody authorized to do it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would like very much to have time granted by the committee to have read simply what General Crozier says in his letter on the subject, and then I am perfectly willing for it to go out on the point of order, if the gentleman desires to make it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

General CROZIER. One of the propositions is with reference to the purchase of material when it is desired to keep such materials secret. Under the statute, as the law now exists, we have to advertise for everything, and if we want to use something of which we think the rest of the world should not know, there is no method of keeping it secret. We must advertise, and publish to the world that we want it. I have here my letter to the honorable Secretary of War explaining the whole matter, which I will insert:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, January 20, 1908.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the fact that this Department, in procuring ingredients for the manufacture of explosives, is at times embarrassed by reason of the fact that in advertising for proposals these ingredients are fully described, and undoubtedly can be furnished by several chemical concerns in this country. Heretofore it has been customary to procure such ingredients for explosives by circular advertisement sent to such parties only as this Department felt reasonably sure would not divulge the uses to which such ingredients might be put by the Government.

2. It has recently been held by the Comptroller of the Treasury that, when such circular advertisements are issued, a copy thereof must be posted in a public place. If such publication is resorted to it might result in the ingredients entering into explosive mixtures and compounds being known and probably foreign nations informed of the character of the explosives used by this Government. This office has in view at present the explosive used as a bursting charge for shells. The mixture of this explosive is confidential, but the ingredients are procured largely from one chemical concern in this country.

3. As the law in such cases does not relieve officers of the Government from resorting to advertisement for proposals, the following legislation is submitted to meet the requirements of the case:

"Whenever proposals are invited for the furnishing of articles of ordnance property, the character of which or the ingredients thereof are of such a nature that the interests of the public service would be injured by publicly divulging them, the Chief of Ordnance is authorized to purchase such articles in such manner as he may deem most economical and efficient."

4. In case the proposed legislation meets with your approval, it is recommended that it be forwarded for the consideration of Congress. As the Committee on Military Affairs of the House now has the Army bill under consideration, it is suggested that this communication be referred to Congress as early as practicable.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brig. Gen., Chief of Ordnance, U. S. Army.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon his point of order?

Mr. MANN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments favorably to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold that for a moment——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will withhold the motion for a moment.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will ask the chairman if he is willing now to return to the item——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman that this will go to another body which has ample power to amend the bill in that way. If there is any question about their not getting the proper pay it will be fixed.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It is not a question of proper pay. The question is, that the Comptroller has put a construction on it which was never intended by this body when the law was passed, and I would like to read the letter now, if the gentleman will yield to me——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I did not recall what the gentleman requested.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The Comptroller simply says this:

The Comptroller of the Treasury has decided, in the case of Gen. Robert J. Bates, First Brigade Michigan National Guard, that allowances for heat and light while attending service and garrison schools were not permissible under the present law—the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat., 1164), providing for subsistence, mileage, and commutation of quarters only.

That is exactly the proposition here—that commutation of quarters did not include pay for allowance for heat and light. I will ask the gentleman, therefore, not to object to our going back and amending that.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, from what I stated to the gentleman before, I will not personally object to going back for this one thing.

Mr. TAWNEY. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] that the committee do now rise.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I have just one request. I would like to have permission to extend the remarks that I made on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the Army appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and the amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the question will be taken on the amendments in gross.

A separate vote was not demanded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INCREASE OF NAVY.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a petition and memorial to Congress signed by certain members of faculties in universities and colleges, and educators of New York City, in opposition to the extravagant demand for $60,000,000 to build four new battle ships, cruisers, and so forth, as an addition to the naval budget of the year.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The petition and memorial are as follows:

To the Representatives and Senators in Congress:

We, the undersigned members of faculties in universities and colleges and educators of New York City, voicing, as we believe, the sentiments of many thousands of American citizens, earnestly protest against the extravagant demand for an addition of over $60,000,000 in the form of four new battle ships, cruisers, etc., to the naval budget of last year, inasmuch as no danger threatens the country not known last April when President Roosevelt told the world: "We are no longer enlarging our Navy. We are simply keeping up its strength. The addition of one battle ship a year barely enables us to make good the units which become obsolete."

Sixty-five per cent of the national income is now expended on war, past and present. The increase of our naval budget has recently been used in the French Assembly as a reason for increasing its own; is largely responsible for the increase of armaments among Asiatic nations, and is well-nigh certain to retard that reduction in the armaments of the world for which we have so long been waiting.

The growing discontent throughout the world at the appalling increase of waste of national resources must be heeded. We feel that this protest is the more necessary inasmuch as there are various new and effective methods now available for promoting international friendship and rationally settling difficulties which these new demands seem to ignore.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR HOMESTEAD ENTRYMEN.

Mr. PRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 14043, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14043) to provide for the extension of time within which homestead entrymen may establish their residence upon certain lands within the limits of the Huntley irrigation project, in the county of Yellowstone, in the State of Montana.

Be it enacted, etc., That the homestead entrymen on lands within the limits of the Huntley irrigation project, in the county of Yellowstone, in the State of Montana, opened to entry July 22, 1907, be, and they are hereby, granted an extension of time in which to establish their residence upon the lands so opened and filed upon until the 15th day of May, 1908: Provided, however, That this act shall in no manner affect the regularity or validity of such filings, or any of them, so made by the said entrymen on the lands aforesaid; and it is only intended hereby to extend the time for the establishment of such residence as herein provided.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if this is a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. PRAY. This is a unanimous report from the Committee on the Public Lands, and it also has the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PRAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

UNLAWFUL OCCUPANCY OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. PRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 3941.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3941) to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act to prevent unlawful occupancy of the public lands," approved February 25, 1885.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of an act entitled "An act to prevent unlawful occupancy of the public lands," approved February 25, 1885, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That any person violating any of the provisions hereof, whether as owner, part owner, or agent, or who shall aid, abet, counsel, advise, or assist in any violation hereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000, or be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, for each offense."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read a third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. PRAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same.

H. R. 17227. An act to authorize the city of St. Joseph, Mich., to construct a bridge across the St. Joseph River at or near its mouth.

BRIDGE ACROSS ROCK RIVER, COLONA FERRY, ILLINOIS.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 17422) to authorize the counties of Henry and Rock Island, in the State of Illinois, to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in said State.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17422) to authorize the counties of Henry and Rock Island, in the State of Illinois, to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in said State.

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Henry and Rock Island, in the State of Illinois, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois if this is a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. PRINCE. It is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the bill is drawn in accordance with the general law governing the construction of bridges across navigable streams?

Mr. PRINCE. It is.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

BIOLOGICAL AND FISH-CULTURAL STATION, SECOND CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT, IOWA.

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from further consideration of the bill H. R. 13659 and that it be recommitted to the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts, by direction of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the consideration of the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report, and that the same be recommitted to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13659) to establish a biological and fish-cultural station in the Second Congressional District of the State of Iowa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

UNPAID HAWAIIAN POSTAL SAVINGS-BANK DEPOSITS.

Mr. DRAPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11560) relating to unpaid Hawaiian Postal Savings Bank deposits.

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever, by reason of the death of any person and the want of an executor or administrator, any demand for moneys deposited in the Hawaiian Postal Savings Bank can not be certified to by the governor of Hawaii as provided in section 102 of "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, the governor may, upon written application, certify to such demand as due to the persons satisfactorily proved to him to be the persons who would be entitled to the personal estate of the decedent by the terms of the laws of Hawaii relating to the distribution of estate of intestates, and his certificate so made, when sealed, countersigned, and approved as provided in said section for other certificates shall have the same force and effect as such other certificates.

SEC. 2. That all claims to moneys deposited in the Hawaiian Postal Savings Bank not presented for certification as provided by law within two years after the passage of this act shall be forever barred.

SEC. 3. That when all claims certified as provided by law have been paid the Secretary of the Interior shall draw his warrant for the balance, if any, of the Hawaiian Postal Savings Bank deposits then remaining unpaid upon the Treasurer of the United States payable to the treasurer of the Territory of Hawaii, who shall thereupon apply the same toward the payment of the public debt of Hawaii, in conformity with the provisions of the "Joint resolution to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States," approved July 7, 1898.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object, I do not precisely understand this. It seems to be a somewhat complicated matter. Is this a payment out of the United States Treasury or is it a payment out of the Hawaiian treasury?

Mr. DRAPER. This relates to a sum of $2,244.74 unpaid deposits in the Hawaiian Postal Savings Bank. This is to authorize the governor to certify to the heirs——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that. How does this money get there?

Mr. DRAPER. Why, it is a balance of money in the Hawaiian Postal Savings Bank.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then why was the money paid into the Treasury from the Postal Savings Bank?

Mr. DRAPER. It was money that was in the savings bank seven years ago when the bank commenced to liquidate, and this is the balance on hand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, what I am getting at is this: This comes out of the funds of the Hawaii Savings Bank and is not paid out of the Treasury?

Mr. DRAPER. That is right.

Mr. DALZELL. It is not public money at all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and being engrossed it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MCLAURIN presented a joint resolution of the legislature of Mississippi, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A joint resolution memorializing Members of Congress to pass a law appropriating cotton-tax fund now in the United States Treasury to pension ex-Confederate soldiers and their widows and orphans.

Whereas there has remained in the United States Treasury for a number of years a sum approximating $60,000,000 illegally collected as a tax on cotton produced and marketed in Southern States during the years 1865, 1866, and 1867 and 1868; and

Whereas after the passage of so many years it becomes impossible to secure the return of this tax in an equalized manner to the greater number of those who paid this illegal tax; and

Whereas recognizing it is the wish and desire of the people of the Southern cotton-growing States who paid this tax and their descendants that this fund now held by the United States Treasury be paid out for the pensioning of old ex-Confederate soldiers, their widows, and orphans, understandingly, by this method would, in a practical way, reach the class of people who bore this injustice: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully memorialized and urged to pass a law authorizing and instructing the Treasurer of the United States to pay over this cotton-tax fund to the treasurers of the different Southern cotton-growing States in the proportion as each State contributed and paid this tax that constitutes this fund for the purpose of distributing the same as pensions to the old Confederate soldiers as the legislatures of the different States may deem proper: Be it further

Resolved, That the Members of Congress from Mississippi are earnestly requested to take such steps as will aid in accomplishing this end.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection the petition will be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and printed in the RECORD, omitting the names.

The petition is as follows:

To the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned, respectfully petition Congress as follows:

1. To enact legislation placing the telegraph systems of the United States under the provisions of an act whereby in any controversy threatening to interfere with or interrupt the telegraph service the Federal Government shall cause an investigation to be made on request of either party to the controversy. President Roosevelt said on this subject in his message to Congress, "the need for some provision for such investigation was forcibly illustrated during the past summer. A strike of telegraph operators seriously interfered with telegraph communication, causing great damage to business interests and serious inconvenience to the general public," etc.

2. To enact legislation compelling telegraph companies to show plainly and accurately on each telegram delivered by them the time such telegram was filed for transmission at the place from whence it came and the time such telegram was received at the office from which it was delivered. (House of Representatives bills Nos. 15123 and 15267 and Senate bill No. 4395.)

3. To enact legislation designed to prevent mailing of telegrams by telegraph companies which are accepted for telegraphic transmission. Telegrams were mailed in every State in the Union during the recent telegraphers' strike, and the evidence is on file at Washington. (House of Representatives bill 15929.)

4. To cause general investigation of the telegraph companies, especially as to justifiability of their joint increase in telegraphic rates to the public of 20 per cent to 60 per cent, the reduction of 10 per cent in salaries of employees, and the conduction of their business during the telegraphers' strike. (House joint resolution No. 126.)

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5473) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy in certain cases to mitigate or remit the loss of rights of citizenship imposed by law upon deserters from the naval service, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

MONONGAHELA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. PILES. From the Committee on Commerce I report back without amendment the bill (H. R. 17220) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Fayette Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River, Pennsylvania, from a point in the borough of Brownsville, Fayette County, to a point in the borough of West Brownsville, Washington County," approved April 23, 1906. I call the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] to the report.

Mr. KNOX. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KNOX. I move that the bill (S. 5367) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Fayette Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River, Pennsylvania, from a point in the borough of Brownsville, Fayette County, to a point in the borough of West Brownsville, Washington County," approved April 23, 1906, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

TOMB OF JOHN PAUL JONES.

Mr. McENERY. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5434) to provide for finishing the crypt of the chapel, United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., as a permanent resting place for the body of John Paul Jones, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 17524) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Dothan, Ala., to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be now considered. It is purely a local measure.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPROVEMENT OF COOSA AND ALABAMA RIVERS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate concurrent resolution No. 42.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The concurrent resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That for the purpose of ascertaining the practicability and cost of improving navigation on Coosa and Alabama rivers by means of storage reservoirs at, near, or above the sites selected for locks and dams Nos. 12, 14, and 15 by cooperation with the Alabama Power Company, or any other corporation duly organized under the laws of the State of Alabama, in the development of water power for industrial purposes, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to cause a survey to be made of that portion of Coosa River above and below the sites selected for locks and dams Nos. 12, 14, and 15, and to submit to Congress as early as practicable a report giving the results of said survey, including plans and estimates of the whole cost of the work and the proportion thereof which should be borne by the United States; and that the cost of said survey shall be paid from funds heretofore appropriated for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, let us have the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIAN ROLLS.

Mr. TELLER. I submit a resolution which I ask be referred to the Select Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes.

The resolution was read and referred to the Select Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to, immediately upon the passage of this resolution, transmit to the Public Printer either the original or a true and correct copy of the original of each and every roll of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians now in the possession and custody of either of said Departments, or of any Bureau, division, or commission thereof or thereunder, prepared by United States officers, agents, or representatives during the years 1830 to 1890, inclusive; and the Public Printer is hereby directed, immediately upon the receipt of said rolls, to print 500 copies of the same, the expenses of printing the said rolls to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and immediately upon the completion of the printing of said rolls the original copies shall be returned to the Department from which they were received.

SEAL ISLANDS OF ALASKA.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish, for the information and use of the Senate, copies of all the reports made by the chief and special agents of the Department of Commerce and Labor in charge of the Seal Islands of Alaska during the years 1906 and 1907, and including all reports made to him by his assistants upon the condition of the fur-seal herd and the conduct of affairs on said islands.

DISPOSITION OF CHICKASAW FUNDS.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask for immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that on the 24th day of June, 1905, a grand jury of the United States of America duly selected, summoned, impaneled, sworn, and charged to inquire fully in and for the body of the southern district of the Indian Territory in the name and by the authority of the United States of America did, upon the oaths of the members thereof, find, present, and charge that one D. H. Johnson, one P. S. Mosely, one George Mansfield, one J. F. McMurray, and one Melvin Cornish, and others to the grand jurors unknown, on certain days in the year 1902, within the southern district of the said Indian Territory, did unlawfully and feloniously commit the crime of conspiracy to defraud (an offense against the laws of the United States) by defrauding the Chickasaw Nation out of the sum of $28,876.90, the exact amounts fraudulently obtained from the Chickasaw Nation and the exact times and places where and when the said fraudulent transactions occurred being set out in said indictment; and

Whereas it is alleged that on or about the 15th day of December, 1905, the Attorney-General of the United States did direct one W. B. Johnson, then United States attorney for the southern district of the Indian Territory, to dismiss, by entering a nolle prosequi in said case, the said indictment; and

Whereas it is alleged that the said W. B. Johnson refused to dismiss the said indictment as directed by the Attorney-General of the United States; and

Whereas it is alleged that the Attorney-General of the United States on or about the 15th day of January, 1905, removed the said W. B. Johnson from office, said removal being by telegraphic communication, and said removal being based upon the refusal of the said W. B. Johnson to carry out the directions of the Attorney-General of the United States; and

Whereas it is alleged that the said Attorney-General of the United States did, on or about the 15th day of January, 1905, by telegraphic communication, reinstate the said W. B. Johnson in the office of United States attorney for the southern district of the Indian Territory; and

Whereas it is alleged that the said W. B. Johnson refused and continued to refuse to dismiss the said indictment against the said persons during his term of office; and

Whereas it is alleged that on or about the 13th day of November, 1907, the Attorney-General of the United States did send a telegram to the United States attorney for the southern district of the Indian Territory, one George R. Walker, directing him to "be sure" and dismiss the said indictment against the said persons "before the Territorial courts pass out of existence and the creation of the new State;" and

Whereas it is alleged that on or about the 14th day of November, 1907, the assistant United States attorney for the southern district of the Indian Territory (the United States attorney being absent at the time), one James E. Humphrey, did cause an order to be entered upon the records of the United States court for the southern district of the Indian Territory, sitting at Ardmore, dismissing the said indictment with the notation "by the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States:" Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate a true and correct copy of the said indictment, all correspondence of every kind and description that has passed between the Department and the United States attorney or attorneys and his or their assistant attorney or attorneys for the southern district of the Indian Territory, and all correspondence of every kind and description between any officer of the United States Government and any other person or persons pertaining or appertaining to said indictment.

That the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate why said indictment was dismissed and whether it is customary for the Attorney-General to interfere with the prosecution of persons against whom an indictment or indictments have been returned in the State or Federal courts of the country, and whether other indictments have been dismissed by direction of the Attorney-General within the past five years, and if so, what indictments, and the cause therefor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GALLINGER. It has been submitted this morning?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think I should like to see it in print. I will ask that it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the resolution will go over.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., HARBOR.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made of Portsmouth Harbor, in the State of New Hampshire, with a view to obtaining slack-water navigation therein by the construction of a dam, and to submit estimates for the same.

RECEIPTS AND DISBURSEMENTS OF PUBLIC MONEY.

Mr. OWEN. I submit a resolution, and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

The resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the following information:

First. A revised statement of Table No. 7, of the Treasurer's annual report, entitled "Receipts and disbursements of each kind of money on all accounts at the subtreasury in New York for the fiscal year 1907," in which statement all the checks or drafts now included in or represented to be amounts of coins or notes shall be entered in a separate column to show the actual receipts and disbursements of each kind of money, as well as the amounts of checks or drafts received and disbursed on all accounts, this statement to be made without delay and transmitted immediately upon completion.

Second. Similarly arranged statements of receipts and disbursements at the Treasury in Washington and at each of the eight subtreasuries outside of New York; that is to say, statements revising and correcting Tables Nos. 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15 of the Treasurer's report for 1907.

Third. All correspondence with and departmental reports to the Secretary of the Treasury or the Treasurer of the United States in 1907, and previously from 1884 to 1907, on the subject of entering amounts of checks or drafts as actual moneys received and disbursed in the tables accompanying the annual report of the Treasurer.

Mr. OWEN. I ask that the correspondence I send to the desk, which is explanatory of the resolution, be printed in the RECORD for the information of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the matter referred to by him be printed in the RECORD without reading. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

322 MARYLAND AVENUE NE.,
Washington, D. C., November 7, 1907.

Hon. GEORGE B. CORTELYOU,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At your request I inclose a memorandum of those false entries of several hundred million dollars in the account of the assistant treasurer at New York, falsifications which, for the fiscal year 1906, amounted to about one thousand millions on each side of the account.

The inclosed letter explaining the sophistication you will remember reading at Huntington in my presence, on August 23. The fraud consists in entering checks as gold certificates, silver certificates, United States notes, subsidiary silver, and minor coin, when no coin or note is paid or received.

Treasury officials have been telling me you would not order the discontinuance of even such deliberate, enormous falsifications and their correction in the account for 1907 soon to be published. Since the entries balance, being equally false as debits and credits, they do not indicate abstraction or diversion of public funds. The only evil intent is to deceive the Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate by making the business done at the subtreasury in New York and Treasury in Washington appear greater than it is in proportion to that of other offices.

These false entries are still being made daily at the subtreasury in New York, where you were recently. Their correction will be an act of honesty entirely yours, due to your individual courage. The Department shows no sense of shame at making a false statement of billions.

* * * * * * *

Very respectfully, JAMES C. HALLOCK.

24 SEVENTH AVENUE,
Brooklyn, N. Y., August 22, 1907.

Hon. GEORGE B. CORTELYOU,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In mine of August 19 I showed by forty years of Treasury circulars the Secretary's power to have disbursements made by checks on banks in Washington, New York, etc.

In this I wish to call your attention particularly to a sophistication of Treasury accounts in which several hundred million dollars of imaginary disbursements are entered as real transactions. This padding is connected with the refusal of bank checks in payment of customs duties at New York. Its complete correction can be easily effected by accepting such checks under a simple rule insuring absolute safety, as will be explained.

Misled by the last annual report of the United States Treasurer (p. 53), I wrote you on July 12 that "in 1906 disbursements at New York amounted to $740,205,722 by United States disbursing agents." The Treasurer gives the total expenditures (p. 7) for 1906 as $568,784,799, or $171,420,923 less than these officers are reported as disbursing. How do they come to disburse more than the entire expenditures of the Government?

Upon investigation I find an error of $352,959,158, which reduces their disbursements nearly half of the reported amount, namely, to $387,246,564. This error is a figment of bookkeeping. It appears in Table No. 7 of the Treasurer's report (p. 53) as "Special customs deposit."

What is this so-called deposit? It is supposed to be money which New York banks deposited during the year with the assistant treasurer to pay duties for their customers. Such deposits are made daily in advance and far exceed the amount of duties paid at New York and elsewhere. A bank, for instance, deposits $50,000 in the morning and gives its importing customers during the day "special customs fund transfers" aggregating $20,000, which the collector of customs accepts in payment and deposits with the assistant treasurer who, at the close of business, enters in his account $20,000 as customs receipts and $30,000 as "special customs deposit." This deposit, then, is the unused portion.

What is done with the balance? First, the cashier of the subtreasury mails the bank immediately a check on the assistant treasurer for $30,000. The next day the bank returns this check with $20,000 in money to make a deposit of $50,000 for that day, and so on through the year. In 1906 the total amount of checks returned to the New York banks daily appears to have averaged about $1,161,000. These checks represented so much money constantly on deposit and undrawn because in excess of requirements.

These cashier's checks were really never cashed, but every morning there was an imaginary cashing: an imaginary presentation of the checks for payment, an imaginary payment of them in gold certificates, etc., and an imaginary deposit of these gold certificates, etc. This imaginary payment and deposit of the real $1,161,000 taking place daily swelled the imaginary "special customs deposit" during the year to nearly $353,000,000. The Treasurer reports this deposit as paid in $352,951,630 of gold certificates which are wholly imaginary, $5,873 of imaginary United States notes (fives), $1,501 of imaginary silver certificates (ones and twos), $133 of subsidiary silver (imaginary halves, quarters, and dimes), and $21 of imaginary nickels and coppers. The cashier is the imaginary disbursing officer of these imaginary deposits; what he imagines he receives on deposit in the morning he imagines he disburses in the afternoon.

The real money deposited (say, $1,161,000 at the beginning of the year with real additions or deductions from day to day) should be considered as collateral to secure the balance carried overnight and not as an ever-recurring daily receipt at the opening of business and a disbursement at its close.

The best way to proceed would be for the Secretary of the Treasury to authorize: 1. The collector of customs at New York to deposit customs receipts in depositary banks there.

2. The collector to accept in payment of duties any certified checks on New York banks which any depositary bank there will place as cash to the credit of the United States Treasurer, giving the collector a certificate of deposit for the same.

3. Disbursing officers to deposit in New York banks, specially designated for each officer, any public moneys intrusted to them for disbursement.

4. No further transfers from regular depositaries in New York to the Treasury or subtreasury of any public money that can be disbursed as well or better by checks on banks.

5. Any excess of deposit over the amount of security held by the Government to be transferred to other regular depositaries that furnish the security.

The Secretary of the Treasury who authorizes all this will do more than any Secretary has done or been able to do for two generations (sixty-one years). And should the Secretary now refuse to have checks drawn on depositary banks in Washington, New York, Baltimore, or any other of the nine subtreasury cities, he would merit the condemnation of every business man, every banker, every woman and child that understands what a check is, and how unbusinesslike it is, instead of paying in checks, to run upon the banks for coin or currency, as the Government does.

Very respectfully, JAMES C. HALLOCK.

MEMORANDUM.

In the annual report of the United States Treasurer for 1906, page 53, Table No. 7 purports to give the "receipts and disbursements of each kind of money on all accounts at the subtreasury in New York for the fiscal year 1906." In this table there are nine columns for as many kinds of money, but no column for checks received and paid.

On page 94 of the report, Table No. 46 gives the "transactions between the subtreasury and clearing house in New York during each month," showing "checks sent to clearing house" and "checks received from clearing house," both aggregating hundreds of millions for the year. The amounts appear in Table No. 7, but disguised as receipts and disbursements in various forms of coin or notes.

The item of "special customs deposit" as receipts in Table No. 7 represents checks for $352,959,158 drawn by the cashier of the subtreasury in favor of New York banks and deposited by them the next morning. These checks are falsely entered as "subsidiary silver," $133; "United States notes," $5,873; "gold certificates," $352,951,630; "silver certificates," $1,501, and "minor coin," $21. These same amounts are merged in the disbursements of disbursing officers to whom the cashier's checks are charged, making nearly $353,000,000 of fiction in their alleged disbursements of $740,205,722 in the five kinds of money named above.

The item of "transfers," purporting to be the receipt of $540,609,560 in gold certificates, is largely one of checks. Where the corresponding disbursements appear on the other side of the account is not known.

These false entries appear to a greater or less extent in all the eleven tables from No. 5 to No. 15, pages 51–61 of the report, and summarized in Table No. 15.

The correction of these false entries will require a separate column for "checks" as receipts and disbursements in all of the tables named.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH U. S. INFANTRY.

On motion of Mr. FORAKER, it was Ordered, That there be printed for the use of the Senate document room 500 copies of the bill (S. 5729) to correct the records and authorize the reenlistment of certain noncommissioned officers and enlisted men belonging to Companies B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, etc.

AFFAIRS IN ALASKA.

Mr. NELSON. I present the final report of the grand jury to the Hon. Silas H. Reid, judge of the United States district court for the Territory of Alaska, third division, held at Valdez, Alaska. It relates to a very important matter in that Territory. I move that the report be printed as a document and that it be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

RESIGNATION OF JUDGES.

Mr. KNOX. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4535) to amend section 714 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the resignation of judges of the courts of the United States.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to amend section 714 of the Revised Statutes of the United States to read as follows:

SEC. 714. When any judge of any court of the United States resigns his office, after having held a commission or commissions as judge of any such court or courts at least ten years, and having attained the age of 70 years, he shall, during the residue of his natural life, receive the same salary which was by law payable to him at the time of his resignation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMOAN CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit a report by the Secretary of State concerning this Government's obligation to pay to the Government of Norway the sum of $200 under the convention between the United States, Great Britain, and Germany for the settlement of Samoan claims, which was signed at Washington on November 7, 1899.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 2, 1908.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 11560. An act relating to unpaid Hawaiian Postal Savings Bank deposits was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

H. R. 14043. An act to provide for the extension of time within which homestead entrymen may establish their residence upon certain lands within the limits of the Huntley irrigation project, in the county of Yellowstone, in the State of Montana, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

H. R. 17288. An act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 17422. An act to authorize the counties of Henry and Rock Island, in the State of Illinois, to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in said State, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 17703. An act to repeal section 4885 of the Revised Statutes and to substitute another section therefor, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Patents.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. M. C. LATTA, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 29th ultimo, approved and signed the following act:

S. 3726. An act to authorize the Twin City Power Company to build, operate, and maintain three dams across the Savannah River, above the city of Augusta, in the State of Georgia.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON TUBERCULOSIS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate authorizing the Department of State to invite the governments of other countries, through their ministries, to send representatives to the International Congress on Tuberculosis, to be held in Washington September 21 to October 12, 1908, which were, on page 1, to strike out the resolving clause and insert:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled.

On page 1, insert as a title:

Joint resolution authorizing the invitation of governments of other countries to send representatives to the International Congress on Tuberculosis.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate agree to the amendments made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKING LAWS.

Mr. SMITH. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (S. 3023) to amend the national banking laws.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to have the proposed amendment read?

Mr. SMITH. I ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 15, strike out all after the words "taxes" down to and including the word "bonds," page 4, line 23.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the purpose of my amendment is to strike out the railroad-bond feature of the so-called "emergency currency bill," because I believe it would be unwise to predicate our currency on a private security, and while I do not care to take much time I desire that the amendment may not be misunderstood. I dislike very much to disagree with the Senate Committee on Finance regarding the wisdom of this section of the proposed bill, and what I have to say about it may be immature and disconnected, but feeling as I do, I can not resist the temptation to express my views regarding it.

Mr. President, I believe that the railroad-bond feature of this bill will operate to check, rather than to stimulate, bond securities, as a whole, giving them a political rather than a commercial status, and that the attempt to supply a new use for railroad bonds by this legislation will be abortive, ultimately resulting in discrimination and diminution of value. The Government has never before attempted to give legislative value to commercial securities, and this attempt is as unwise as it is radical and unnecessary and should find no place in our financial system. A bond-secured currency is bad enough at best. This bill would weaken it in the eyes of our own people and subject it to unenviable criticism abroad.

Bond currency was originally proposed by Lincoln's great Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of making a bond market for Government securities, in order to meet the extraordinary expenses growing out of the war. I have no criticism to make upon it. That was a Government function and met the expectation of its author. It was indeed emergency legislation, and the statesmen who planned it builded even better than they knew, although the best financial students have always believed it unscientific and undesirable as a permanent basis of circulation.

Mr. President, I do not question the patriotic purpose of the Finance Committee. I give them credit for being prompted by the highest motives. Yet I can not but feel that the experiment is doubtful and the conditions with which it is hedged about will operate to cast discredit upon every bond not coming within the purview of this legislation.

Under this law not more than two or three hundred million dollars of railroad security could possibly be utilized as the basis for currency issue. The act only provides for $500,000,000 of emergency money, and it is well understood that municipal, State, and county bonds will absorb a large proportion of this currency.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Michigan, as I understand his statement, believes that if we issued $500,000,000 currency it would be largely based upon other bonds than railroad bonds?

Mr. SMITH. I am inclined to that opinion.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understood the Senator to state that there are two or three hundred million dollars of bonds that would be available.

Mr. SMITH. No; I did not say that. What I said was this: That of the bonds available under the provisions of this law there would not probably be over two or three hundred million dollars of railroad securities deposited, if municipal and State bonds are to be deposited. According to the Senator's own statement in opening the debate, there might be perhaps $250,000,000 of each.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Michigan, I suppose, does not doubt the safety of these bonds.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I do not wish to interfere with the discussion going on, but we want to hear it in this part of the Chamber.

Mr. SMITH. In answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Rhode Island, who asks whether I doubt the safety of these bonds, I will say: No, Mr. President, I do not doubt their safety. What I doubt is the expediency of permitting any commercial bond to be the basis of a currency issue. What is to become of the millions of railroad bonds that are thus discriminated against, that are not to be receivable for this purpose? Who will take them? The public? Or will the Government later be asked to do it?

Mr. ALDRICH. There are over six thousand million dollars of railroad bonds.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; I thank the Senator. There are over six thousand million dollars of railroad bonds, most of which will be discriminated against. I have here on my desk a letter from one of the most prominent bankers in New York who says, "For God's sake do not discriminate against our Philippine railroad bonds; it would be a black eye to our issue." Why should we enter that field at all? Why not permit this class of desirable securities to find their own market, on their merits, without artificial aid by the Government? We are not called upon to go into copartnership with these transportation companies. The Government's business is to honestly regulate and justly protect the right of property and not to become banker for special interests.

Mr. President, I contend that to select any class of private securities by law and say that only that class may be used as a basis for emergency currency is to discriminate against every other issue outside that circle. This, sir, is not the function of popular government.

I do believe, however, that municipal, State, and county bonds may be appropriately used in an emergency. These are generally described, and if legally issued are all included within the act. Every bond of this description will appreciate in value by reason of this legislation, and the people as a whole in the various geographical subdivisions will profit by the privilege, and I am willing they should. That is their Government and this is their Government. We are merely their servants, acting in their interest; and so long as they live up to their contracts and are animated by civic pride no loss can result to the Government.

You say that the railroad bond to be available at the Treasury must have paid interest for five years, and that the railroad company must have paid 4 per cent dividend on its stock for a period of five years. Four per cent dividend on its stock is not necessarily the measure of the value of a bond.

I would rather have a railroad bond upon a railroad modestly bonded and honestly built in a desirable territory, with an indebtedness, perhaps, of not over $25,000 to $30,000 a mile, an underlying security guaranteed by a leasing company for a period of years, than to have the bond of a road that has merely for the period of five years paid dividends upon its stock, perhaps at the expense of its physical condition, and which sudden business depression may impair. The dividend feature of this bill does not strengthen the situation at all.

And let me advise Senators that in my opinion this proposition, most novel in character, now presented for the first time in the history of the Government, will result in putting a responsibility upon this Government which may ultimately oblige us to take over these roads by foreclosure in order to realize upon our security. It is the first serious step toward the Government ownership of railroads, in my judgment. Whoever takes a mortgage or security thereunder must take the risk of ultimately being called upon to foreclose that mortgage. Senators may shake their heads. How little we thought in the St. Louis Exposition and in the Jamestown Exposition that we would ever be obliged to enforce our lien to protect the Government and even then suffer a loss. Whenever we go outside our true sphere we must be prepared to accept all the responsibility that goes with the experiment, and the time may come when you will be obliged to enforce your lien and foreclose your security, even going so far as to assert proprietorship over the physical property which you have made the basis for circulation.

Another thing, most of the great railroad systems of the country are made up of small lines. Those lines are leased, and on a basis providing for payment of the interest on the bonds, betterments, and taxes. They have no stock on the market or on a dividend basis. That class of securities are, in my judgment, generally regarded as good, and yet this bill discriminates against them.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will it disturb the Senator to be interrupted by a question?

Mr. SMITH. Not at all.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator has several times mentioned the disastrous effect of discriminating against railroad bonds which would not be taken under the bill.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; although that is not my principal objection to its passage. I think the bill fundamentally wrong.

Mr. McCUMBER. And in his statement I believe he admitted that there are about $6,000,000,000 of railroad bonds in the United States, and $2,000,000,000 of railroad bonds that would be proper as security for the issue of this emergency currency. Assuming that it is $6,000,000,000, and every dollar's worth of the issue was based upon railroad securities alone, there would be only 7 per cent, and if half of it would be based upon municipal securities the whole extent left would be only 3½ per cent of the entire amount of railroad bonds in the United States. Now, does the Senator believe that utilizing 3½ per cent of all the railroad bonds in the United States would so discriminate as to seriously affect the other 96½ per cent of the bonds?

Mr. SMITH. What I believe is this, that whenever a bond buyer is sought he will inquire of the seller: "Is this bond recognized by the Government?" "Is this bond good for the emergency currency?" "Has the Government put the stamp of its approval upon this issue?" If not, then I say he will be less liable to take it and would quickly note the difference in value.

Mr. McCUMBER. Assuming, Mr. President, that those bonds which would be taken by the Government would not be upon the market—and they could not be upon the market because they would be held at that time—would the public, as purchasers, pay any less for the other 96½ per cent of bonds in the market because the Government gave a special credit to the 3½ per cent?

Mr. SMITH. I think the trouble to-day with our bond market is not that the bonds are not good, because everyone knows they are good; but the trouble with the bond market is that people will not buy them and they are hypothecated and deposited in the vaults of banks all over the country. The people will not buy them under present conditions, and this bill creates a harbor of refuge until the storm passes, which may be temporary, but which I think if ever adopted will be permanent. I think the step proposed most ill advised, even dangerous to our financial stability, inviting unnecessary controversy, and introducing new and questionable practices into our Treasury operations.

Mr. President, I hope I shall not be misunderstood in what I have said. In the first place, I believe in treating the corporation with perfect fairness. The public man who would arouse class against class or section against section or people against corporations has very little standing in my sight. I am one of those public servants who believe that an artificial person and a natural person should have equal rights before the law, no more and no less, and I shall square my conduct by this wholesome maxim. I am, however, strongly opposed to a bond-secured currency at all, and this measure in some respects, at least, only aggravates the objections, and will make it more difficult to ever bring about a change in policy, desirable though it might be.

What did it mean when one of the most prominent bankers in the city of New York stated to me in a letter yesterday:

For God's sake do not leave the Philippine railroad bonds out of this bill, for it would be a black eye that they never would recover from?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am very much interested in the Senator's lucid remarks, and I should like to know whether he would exclude as a basis of this emergency currency all the railroad bonds that he says would be discriminated against, or, on the other hand, all railroad bonds? Where would he make the discrimination? Would he include all of them?

Mr. SMITH. I thank the Senator from Indiana. No; I would not have any railroad bonds or other quasi-public bonds as a basis for our currency.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand the Senator now.

Mr. SMITH. I believe such a policy to be most ill advised and unwise, and that it would recoil upon the government that adopts it to her disadvantage and discomfiture.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. So that the Senator would exclude all railroad bonds as a basis?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I now understand the Senator.

Mr. SMITH. The bonds of municipalities, States, and counties, being geographical subdivisions of our country controlled by all the people, may properly be included in our emergency legislation under such regulations as seem wise. I would not antagonize that feature at all; present conditions may justify it and no serious harm can come from it, but the other feature is most dangerous. How may you ascertain the value of these railroad bonds? What machinery of the Government is now at work by which you can ascertain their value?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. The twentieth section of the interstate-commerce act as amended by the legislation known as the "railroad-rate law" furnishes ample machinery.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. We can not hear the Senator at all. Nobody can hear him over here.

Mr. ALDRICH. I said that the twentieth section of the interstate-commerce act as amended by the rate law, so called, furnishes ample machinery to ascertain the character and the value of these bonds.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. And it is the intention that an amendment shall be offered for the purpose of putting machinery in operation for ascertaining the value of these bonds.

Mr. SMITH. I dislike very much to disagree with the Senator, and yet I am very familiar with that section. I am very familiar with the Senator's letter to the Interstate Commerce Commission. I am entirely familiar with the Interstate Commerce Commission's answer. The Interstate Commerce Commission told the Senator in their answer that there was no machinery of the Government by which to ascertain the value of this property; they told the Senator it would require a force of nearly 200 men to get into shape for this work; and the answer of Mr. Adams for the Interstate Commerce Commission pointed out that thus far they had only accomplished the classification of accounts of the railroads, not taking into account their physical value at all.

Mr. ALDRICH. That was not the suggestion I made. I am glad the Senator is familiar with the twentieth section of the act, but if he will reread it, he will find that the Commission have ample authority to do everything that I have suggested.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, Mr. Adams answered the Senator——

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not talking about Mr. Adams's answer; I am talking about the twentieth section of the interstate-commerce act as amended.

Mr. SMITH. But the Senator asked the Interstate Commerce Commission to give the Senate information upon which they might base an approximate value of this class of securities. I will read the letter of the Senator. I have it before me.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not talking about the correspondence at all at this moment. I am talking about the provision of the twentieth section of the interstate-commerce act.

Mr. SMITH. But I am talking about this correspondence, because it relates directly to the point which he made and directly to the inquiry of the Senator from Rhode Island. I will read the letter of the Senator from Rhode Island to the Interstate Commerce Commission, as I have it before me.

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE, UNITED STATES SENATE,
January 21, 1908.

GENTLEMEN: In connection with the proposition that the Government should accept railroad bonds as a part of the securities required from national banks for additional circulating notes, I would be glad if you would advise me:

First. What has been done under the twentieth section of the act to regulate commerce, as amended, relative to a prescribed system of railroad accounts?

Second. What principles or rules have been promulgated in the orders of the Commission thus far issued relative to operating accounts, and what principles or rules are under advisement pertaining to capital accounts, to be covered by subsequent orders of the Commission, that will tend to give security and stability to railway securities?

Third. What has been done under the twentieth section of the act to regulate commerce, as amended, relative to the appointment of a board of special examiners into railway accounts?

Fourth. Would it be possible, in your opinion, after the various provisions of the twentieth section shall have been carried into effect, for the Secretary of the Treasury, from the records in the possession of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to select classes of bonds which it would be safe for the Government to accept as security for the ultimate payment of these circulating notes?

Very truly, yours, NELSON W. ALDRICH.

The INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C.

I am very familiar with the answer to the Senator, and I contend that the answer of Mr. Adams was to the effect that there is no machinery of the Government now in operation for the purpose of ascertaining the values about which the Senator inquired. The Interstate Commerce Commission has a system of classified accounts by which it separates the earnings from the expenditures of the railroad property, and, deducting the expenditures from the earnings, leaves the net balance for dividends and for the payment of interest on bonds. But the Senator from Rhode Island knows that the whole tenor of Mr. Adams's statement is to the effect that the Government does not at the present time have anything by which they can ascertain the value of these securities. Their selection is entirely a matter of discretion with the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator from Michigan fails entirely to reach the point which I was suggesting.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator from Rhode Island also fails to reach my point.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is not a question at all whether that machinery is in operation. The question is whether the twentieth section of the interstate-commerce act gives the Interstate Commerce Commission power to make these inquiries——

Mr. SMITH. It does give it power.

Mr. ALDRICH. And when the machinery provided in that section is put in operation, whether then the Secretary would be able to obtain this information.

Mr. SMITH. Certainly. But the public examiners have not been designated and no work has been accomplished by the Commission beyond a system of classified accounts, as you will see by Mr. Adams's letter to the Senate, which says, among other things:

The fact that public examiners must test this account has not been lost to view. A balance sheet, if correctly drawn, taken in connection with the operating accounts and the property accounts of a carrier, should furnish adequate information for testing the stability and certainty of underlying securities.

The third question is as follows:

"What has been done under the twentieth section of the act to regulate commerce, as amended, relative to the appointment of a board of special examiners into railway accounts?"

The board of special examiners is the means proposed by Congress to make effective a prescribed system of railway accounts. In direct response to the question, it should be said that no board of examiners has as yet been formally organized. Ten special examiners have been appointed, but for the most part they have been engaged in investigations bearing upon the character of the accounts to be prescribed. With the exception of special examinations into claims and into the manner in which the depreciation accounts have been applied, no formal examinations, such as were contemplated by Congress, have been undertaken.

It will require the permanent employment of 260 men to enable the Commission to exercise administrative supervision over the accounts of steam railways. The Civil Service Commission has provided, through special examination, a roster from which perhaps half of this number of men may be secured, and a new examination will be undertaken when necessary. A programme for the organization of a board of examiners, including a plan for branch offices at certain selected railway centers and a set of instructions prescribing the manner in which these examinations shall be carried on, are sufficiently advanced to warrant the statement that this formal examination may be effectively begun on July 1, 1908, so far as this office is concerned. No further steps can be taken in this direction, however, until it is known what appropriation is to be placed at the disposal of the Commission for this purpose.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Michigan agrees with me then, does he?

Mr. SMITH. I agree this far and no further, that the twentieth section, to which the Senator refers, did give the Commission the power, but you have failed to give them the appropriation necessary to employ the force.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was simply saying that we gave them the power. I understood the Senator to deny that.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, I do not deny that. I deny that the Interstate Commerce Commission have any information upon which to base the value of railroad securities now.

Mr. ALDRICH. The matter of dereliction is on the part of Congress, if anywhere, for failing to make proper appropriation.

Mr. SMITH. I understand that the dereliction is with Congress. The selection of bonds now must be a discretionary matter, left entirely to the Secretary of the Treasury, as there is no machinery now by which these values can be ascertained.

Mr. President, I did not intend to occupy the time of the Senate so long. I only wished to record my objection to this provision, which is experimental in its character, and will be dangerous in its effect, possibly leading to a condition where you may be obliged to take the railroads and operate them in order to save the Government from loss.

I do not question the value of these securities. But, Mr. President, I question the wisdom of taking into our financial system quasi public corporation security of any kind. If there are two thousand millions of State, municipal, and county securities available for that purpose, why not exhaust those, thereby confining ourselves to strictly public obligations, in which every citizen is interested, where the indebtedness has been created for a public purpose under direct authority of law?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. If he has followed the debate on this bill, the Senator will recognize the fact that the contention is made by some that the amount of State, county, and municipal bonds is not sufficient to afford by themselves a basis for emergency currency. Therefore, if this bill should become a law, and we were limited to them, their value would be greatly enhanced, and it would be made not only unprofitable for the banks to use the proposed emergency currency, but it would be made almost prohibitive. What does the Senator say upon that point? What is his judgment upon that?

Mr. McCUMBER. If I may be permitted, I will state that a corner might be more easily secured upon a small quantity of stock than upon a great quantity.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; but let me ask the Senator from Illinois if the effect of this bill, with this provision in it, is not to stimulate the railroad bond market, what is it for?

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator does not answer my question. What is the Senator's judgment, whether these criticisms are correct or not, as to the amount and value of the municipal and State bonds——

Mr. SMITH. As to their amount?

Mr. HOPKINS. Are they sufficient, in the Senator's judgment, or are they not?

Mr. SMITH. If the impression of the Finance Committee is to be accepted as final, there will be very few of these securities presented for this emergency money anyway. The Senator from Illinois knows that the Treasury Department to-day is calling in large sums of money that it has deposited with various banks of the country. Why? Because the emergency which caused that money to be deposited has passed, and it may safely be withdrawn now. Why was it that the Secretary of the Treasury refused——

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator from Michigan allow me to make a suggestion right there?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am in accord with the Senator from Michigan on the proposition he is now discussing, but what I want is the Senator's judgment as to whether the basis is broad enough by using State and municipal bonds for this emergency currency?

Mr. SMITH. Go one step further—broad enough for what? Broad enough to furnish how much money?

Mr. HOPKINS. Five hundred million or a thousand million dollars.

Mr. SMITH. Does the Senator believe we need that now?

Mr. HOPKINS. Not now.

Mr. SMITH. Well, then, if we do not need it, if we are not going to avail ourselves of the maximum provided by the bill, certainly there are enough municipal and other public securities for that purpose. Only last week $50,000,000 of New York City bonds were sold in the city of New York. Municipalities are issuing these bonds all the time. If they are to be given the additional value of convertibility they will increase in value and, I think, prove ample for the purposes intended.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator will permit me, there is no general market to-day for railroad bonds, and, Mr. President, there was no market for United States bonds in 1863, when Secretary Chase told the country that if they bought Government bonds they would be the basis of a currency issue by national banks. Does the Senator deny that it operated to accomplish just that purpose?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator from Michigan asks why these bonds are placed in the bill. I think I am disclosing no secrets of the committee in saying that the purpose of the committee was to get bonds sufficient in amount so that no corner could be obtained by people dealing in bonds, and that any bank that desired this additional currency could go into the market and procure the bonds at the normal price. Under this bill the Secretary of the Treasury is not required to take any bonds at all; it is left entirely to his discretion; and none of the troubles the Senator from Michigan has presented here can possibly arise. It is impossible for the Government, under this bill, to become the owner of a railroad for this reason: That the Secretary of the Treasury is required, on page 5 of the bill, to acquire additional security or to make them change the securities.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. HOPKINS. Let me read the provision.

Mr. SMITH. Wait a moment.

Mr. HOPKINS. Let me read it to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH. Just one moment. Section 1 of this bill prescribes the conditions upon which new circulation may be taken out; section 2 designates the security for the additional circulating notes and enumerates the class of bonds that will be acceptable, placing the supervisory responsibility with the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HOPKINS. One moment. Let me read the provision in section 2 of the bill:

> The Treasurer of the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall accept, for the purposes of this act, securities herein enumerated in such proportions as he may from time to time determine, and he may with such approval at any time require the deposit of additional securities, or require any association to change the character of the securities already on deposit.

Mr. SMITH. Ah!

Mr. HOPKINS. So the Senator can see that under that clause the Secretary is not required even to accept one of those bonds if, in his judgment, it is not safe security for the Government.

Mr. SMITH. Well, it is admitted that the Secretary of the Treasury has discretion to call for additional securities——

Mr. HOPKINS. Change the security.

Mr. SMITH. Under that bill he may blacklist any bond on deposit with him. He may say to the bank that deposited it, "You will have to take this up and substitute something else." He has very wide discretion, as he should have, but, Mr. President, all this is merely detail. My criticism is fundamental, and questions the wisdom or necessity of attempting by legislation to fix a new bond market for railroad securities, so intimately interwoven with Government affairs and so completely at variance with our past history.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SMITH. I do not object to a better bond market or a higher bond market, but I feel sure that it is not the function of government to create it by special legislation.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will wait until the Senator gets through.

Mr. SMITH. I think that the effect of the bill will be to discourage railroad construction instead of stimulate it. A new road, ever so valuable, connecting two or more important cities, modestly bonded and honestly managed, must go on five years' probation before its bonds will be received.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me right there——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. By the terms of the bill, safeguards are thrown around State and municipal bonds precisely as they are thrown around the other class of bonds.

Mr. SMITH. Greater safeguards.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not think so.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; because the State and municipal bonds must be within the constitutional limitation of the State or the municipality, and whose funded indebtedness does not exceed 10 per cent of the valuation of its taxable property.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does not the Senator think that it is wisdom on the part of the committee and of Congress, if we are to have legislation of this kind, to throw every safeguard around these bonds, so that there can be no possible default?

Mr. SMITH. I am not complaining of the safeguards around this class of securities. I believe the committee has abundantly safeguarded them. I do not believe there is a railroad in the State of Michigan that has for five years paid 4 per cent upon its capital stock, or that can avail itself of this law, and I do not believe the banks of our State hold the class of railroad securities this bill describes. If they avail themselves of this law they will be obliged to go into the open market and buy them, curtailing to just that extent the commercial business ordinarily transacted with merchants, manufacturers, and tradesmen.

Mr. President, I have not one word of criticism and much of praise for the great Senator from Rhode Island, whose attempt to relieve the country by the issue of emergency currency is most praiseworthy. I honor him for it, but I do not believe this provision is salutary. I think it will retard rather than assist his purpose.

The Senator may say with reference to my observation regarding the Philippine Railroad bonds that the interest on those bonds is guaranteed by the Government and that they stand in a different class from other securities which are left outside the effect of this legislation. Possibly that is so, but in the minds of the security holders this recognition would be very helpful.

Is there a Senator on this floor who is willing to say that the bonds that are so favored will not be benefited by it—that their value to the banks for investment will not be increased? I think not. Will not all the bonds that come within this law be sought for because they have the additional value of being available for Government notes of issue? To-day the Treasury Department is calling in its deposits from the various banks of the country. Why were those deposits not called in earlier? Because it was not prudent to do so, and the Secretary of the Treasury has shown splendid judgment in his management of this entire affair; but it is a vastly different thing for the Secretary of the Treasury to say to the banks of the country, "Bring your collateral, and we will let you have so much Government deposits," and for Congress to write into the statute that only such railroad bonds as have been issued by companies that have paid 4 per cent on their stock for five years may have any standing with the Treasury of the country—a virtual condemnation of every single security that does not come within the provisions of your law.

A great French financier and writer, only a little while ago, in the New York Evening Post indicated the French estimate of our bond-circulating money, saying, in very caustic language, that we were engaged as a Government in a bond-selling device at the expense of our monetary stability. I think it is a trifle paradoxical, if the Senator will permit me to say it, for us to sit here in solemn conclave planning employers' liability legislation and the abolishment of the doctrine of fellow-servant and contributory negligence—sitting here in solemn convocation to secure the passage of laws seeking to regulate interstate commerce and in the same breath seeking to bolster up their securities. I regard it as a trifle paradoxical, to say the least, for us to sit here passing antirailroad legislation just as fast as the roll is called tending to diminish the profits and the earnings of these interstate carriers, and on the other hand attempting to bolster up these securities by this kind of legislation. I fancy that some time in the near future I will see the managers and operators of these railroads, whose securities are the basis of a currency issue, and hear their voices before the Committee on Interstate Commerce asking that the Government security be not injuriously affected or diminished by further hostile legislation.

We have not yet finished railroad regulation. The President, only a few days ago, in a solemn message to Congress told us "That in some form the Federal Government must exercise supervision over the financial operations of our interstate railroads," and, further, that "the Federal Government must assume a certain measure of control over the physical operation of railroads in the handling of interstate traffic." He has told us that it would be our duty to prescribe the class and form of their accounts; that their expenditures may properly be a matter of governmental supervision. Do not Senators believe that the time may come when, with our Treasury filled with bonds of railroad companies, we may be asked to halt in making further legislative attempts to regulate these companies, lest we jeopardize our financial security and alarm currency holders?

Then, again, can not Senators see that a railroad which pays 4 per cent upon its stock may, by political reversal in this country, be placed in the attitude of not being able to pay a dividend on its stock, and if it ever reaches the point where it can not pay a dividend, does not the Senate believe that the officers of these railroads which have been benefited by this legislation will some day come to Congress and ask us to strike off the dividend feature in order that their securities may still rest in the Treasury as a basis for circulation?

I firmly believe that if we embark upon this very questionable arrangement, we are opening the door very wide to the possibility of those very quasi-public corporations taking a hand in politics as their only means of defense.

I do not want to force railroad companies into politics. They are the creatures of the laws, and should neither make the law nor break it.

Is there a Senator upon this floor who does not know that the moment this law is passed every European investor in American railroad securities will ask his broker the question, "Are my bonds included in this legislation?" If they are not covered, those securities will gradually be returned to us, and will our people take them? No. Every Senator here knows why. Our people will not buy them because State legislation and Congressional action jeopardize them as a safe and sound investment.

Can not Senators see that if an adverse party should succeed us in the administration of affairs on the 4th day of next March, or at some future time—a party that does not believe in this legislation for the advantage of special interests—do not Senators believe that the repeal of this bill will be a bad blow to the transportation interests of this country overbalancing by considerable any small advantage now derived?

I am in favor of being perfectly fair with the corporations of this country. This bill is neither fair nor wise in its present form.

Mr. President, I will not trespass longer upon the Senate. I thank you sincerely for your courtesy and your consideration. I have spoken against this bill because I believe it to be harmful, because I believe it to be the first step of a serious character in the direction of Government ownership of railroads, and that possibility, remote as it may be, I would, if I had the power, avoid. I do not believe in the Government usurping the functions of individual enterprise. It is the individual initiative that has lifted our people above the world's throng to the high standard they now enjoy. While our neighbors across the sea, the great Russian Empire, are seeking by revolution and otherwise to rid themselves of government paternalism whereby everything originates with the state and nothing with the individual, while Russia has failed utterly to demonstrate that that is the wise or the just policy toward its own people and is endeavoring to throw it off as a danger to the future of the country, is it not a little singular that we should drift toward the dangers they would now avoid?

Mr. President, I was very reluctant to say anything upon this measure, realizing that one new in the Senate should not lightly set aside its historic traditions, but should be content to permit those of larger experience to guide the affairs of state. No one, sir, has a higher appreciation of the whole-hearted devotion of the Senator from Rhode Island to his country than I. I would not for one moment impugn his motives or attack by innuendo his honorable purpose. But, sir, I come here as the representative of my State, mindful of my own unworthiness. I would not prove myself undeserving of the esteem of my colleagues or the respect of the people I serve. But if my best judgment told me that a measure of importance here pending was not for the best interests of all the people of the country, I should feel myself unworthy to bear the commission which they have given me if I did not record my solemn protest against it.

I protest against this clause in the bill as being unnecessary. I protest against it as being unwise. I protest against it because it introduces into our monetary system a commercial security over which the Government has no control. I protest against it because it is a most unfair discrimination against billions of dollars' worth of securities that do not come within its scope.

Mr. President, I hope it will not pass. We have difficulties enough to overcome as a country, while our party can not afford to enter the next campaign handicapped with a proposition to introduce into our national monetary system the securities of railroad companies.

I thank you, Mr. President and the Senate, for doing me the honor to listen to my remarks, not formally, but informally expressed, fragmentary and disconnected as they are. I simply desire to avoid for our Government what I believe will be a most harmful experiment now being urged for the first time in the financial history of our country.

Mr. ALDRICH obtained the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. I demand the regular order.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will give me two or three minutes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire withdraw his demand for the regular order?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will withdraw it until the Senator from Rhode Island gets through.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the provisions of the pending bill——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator will permit me to proceed.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will; but I want to have a little understanding. We all know that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] has occupied the floor out of order, and that he could have been called down, but no one did, as the Senator wanted to make his speech and we wanted to hear him. He has made a very fine speech, and we are glad to have heard him. But there are other things pending which will go by the board at 2 o'clock unless the Senator who has charge will agree that we may take another hour, or whatever time may be necessary, for morning business.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am perfectly willing that the time for morning business shall be extended. I shall not take more than two or three minutes at this time. If the Senator from South Carolina does not desire me to speak——

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to hear the Senator from Rhode Island. This is a very beautiful exchange of compliments between our friends on the other side, and I should like to hear it. The only reason why I did not interrupt the Senator from Michigan and call for the regular order was that I did not want him to miss the opportunity to make his speech, and I want the Senator from Rhode Island to have a full opportunity to answer, and all I ask is that when 2 o'clock comes my little resolution shall not go by the board.

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall be perfectly willing to lay aside the unfinished business at 2 o'clock for any purpose which the Senator from South Carolina has in mind.

Mr. President, the provision of the pending bill in regard to railroads and railroad bonds has been passed over at my suggestion. It was passed over with a statement on my part that the committee had under consideration various amendments to the provision which they would present in due time. I do not make this statement, however, for the purpose of finding fault with any criticism which any Senator sees fit to make to the bill as it now stands. I do not intend to take the time of the Senate now to go at any considerable extent into the argument upon the question whether railroad bonds should be accepted as security for the notes which we propose to issue. I must say, however, that I was greatly puzzled at the argument of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. Possibly when I come to read it in print, and have time to consider it, its inconsistencies may not be as apparent as they seem to me now. The Senator from Michigan objects to the use of railroad bonds as security, and his principal argument against such use is that we have excluded certain classes of railroad bonds from acceptance under the provisions of the bill. He would have us accept, as I understand it, all railroad bonds——

Mr. SMITH. No; I would accept none.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator would accept none, and he gives as a reason for accepting none that we have unwisely restricted the character of the bonds to be accepted by the bill to a small amount, and that not more than two or three hundred millions can be so received. The Senator insists that we have improperly discriminated against certain bonds, therefore that the use of two or three hundred millions out of a total of six or seven thousand millions will imperil the liberties of the people and that the Government of the United States may be forced to take possession of the railroads.

The bonds accepted must be first-mortgage bonds. They must be the bonds of railroad companies that have paid dividends on all their stock to the extent of 4 per cent per annum for five years. The Senator from Michigan says there are too few of those bonds in existence. The Secretary of the Treasury is not obliged under the provisions of this proposed act to accept any railroad bonds.

Mr. SMITH. I am sure the Senator from Rhode Island misunderstood me. I did not say there were few in existence. What I did say was that compared with the mileage of the railroads of the country this class of securities represented a very small proportion of that mileage.

Mr. ALDRICH. I stated for the committee in the argument which I submitted to the Senate two or three weeks ago the reasons which led the committee to think that the basis of State and municipal bonds was not sufficiently broad for the purpose of securing the currency which we proposed to issue. As the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] has said, that provision of the bill was inserted because of criticisms which were made in the committee and outside of it that we would unduly enhance the value or the price of State and municipal bonds if we did not accept other bonds for security.

Now, first-mortgage railroad bonds are made by the law of every State in the Union which has legislation on the subject acceptable as first-class security for savings-bank investment. They are acceptable as the best possible collateral by every financial institution in the country.

The Senator from Michigan himself says that there can be no question as to the value of the security or the safety of the bonds. But he says we ought not to go outside of State and municipal bonds. That, of course, is a question which every Senator must decide for himself. Whether railroad bonds are or are not accepted will not interfere with the purpose of the bill.

I will suggest to the Senator from Michigan that it was not the main purpose of the committee to inquire into what the effect of this legislation should be either upon banks or upon railroads. We are legislating for the people of the United States, and we are not here to consider primarily the effect this legislation will have upon the railroads of Michigan or the people who own them.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator will permit me, it was not necessary to state the effect of this legislation upon the bond market. It is apparent.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is apparent?

Mr. SMITH. It is very apparent that the purpose is to increase the value of railroad securities.

Mr. ALDRICH. How apparent?

Mr. SMITH. The object of the bill speaks for itself.

Mr. ALDRICH. The railroads of the United States are the only corporations in existence that are under Government control and regulation. Their accounts and everything connected with them are subject to Government regulation. They are quasi-public institutions, and the committee believed that if they were to go outside of State, municipal, and Government bonds they must include first-class railroad bonds. It is not and should not be the controlling purpose of this legislation to improve the value of railroad bonds or of State bonds or municipal bonds. Our first duty is to give the people of this country a safe and sound currency, if we are to have an emergency currency, and to take the best securities for such issues which we can find, whatever they may be. If this legislation shall have the effect of giving a wider market for or a better value to the railroad securities of the United States, and the Government can do it without any loss to itself or any danger of damage to itself, then we should not hesitate to legislate simply because the securities would have a better status than they have now.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARTER in the chair). Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to ask him a question. Just at this particular time when there is really no necessity for additional circulation, when Government deposits are being withdrawn from the banks because they may safely be withdrawn, when the reserves in the banks of the country are perfectly safe, when our monetary system is not in the least degree jeopardized, does the Senator think the effect will not be merely to stimulate the price of the securities which this bill affects?

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator evidently does not understand at all the purpose of the bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. We here can not hear the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. I say the Senator from Michigan certainly fails to understand the purpose of the committee in reporting this legislation. In opening the debate on this bill I made the statement that it must be apparent to everybody that there is no demand at this moment for emergency circulation. The question of withdrawals of public money by the Treasury from the banks has nothing to do with the question. These withdrawals do not reduce the amount of money in circulation in the United States. None of the conditions to which the Senator from Michigan has alluded are affected by the relative amount of currency outstanding. It is not a question whether or not there is an additional currency issue demanded now, but the point is that when the emergency arrives, whether it shall be tomorrow, or next day, or next week, or next year, or ten years from now—I hope it will be deferred ten years or twenty or thirty—we should be prepared for it; that it is the paramount duty of Congress to furnish the necessary machinery which will be effective when the demand arises.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator a question? If I understand it correctly, the same character of bonds were under the law of 1907 made available as security for deposits from the Treasury to the banks. I want to know whether making them available for that purpose has to any degree given other bonds a black eye or depreciated their market value because these were given a special value, if they were given any, by reason of being made security for deposits by the Treasury?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question. I shall be glad to hear the Senator's answer to the point made by the Senator from Michigan. It impressed the whole Senate, I think, and that is this: Here is a railroad bond given as the basis of currency issued. Of course it must be the most secure possible. Therefore the bill provides that it shall not only be the bond of a railroad company which has paid interest on its bonds, but also one which shall have paid dividends of a certain per cent on its stock for four or five years.

The Senator from Michigan very clearly pointed out that on account of mutations in business or a change in politics or many other things the earnings of a road might fall off, and that a situation was entirely conceivable where the Government itself in order to realize upon the security for its emergency circulation would have to foreclose upon the road itself.

I say that I will be very glad to hear the Senator answer that question. Whether this bill increases the securities of railroads is not the question. It is a question of having a perfectly safe and sound currency. But the question has been raised, in my mind, by the Senator from Michigan whether or not a basis for emergency currency of securities which themselves might depreciate by reason of changes in business or politics or anything else is the surest foundation for emergency currency. I do not know the answer. I presume the Senator does.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Indiana that under this bill——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is impossible for the Senator from Colorado to be heard at the desk.

Mr. TELLER. It is only a question of protecting the Government when it issues the bills to the banks. That is all there is of it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That merely changes the form of the question.

Mr. TELLER. It is not a question of the protection of the currency issued.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The credit of the Government is back of the currency, to be sure, but in order to insure the Government the deposit of bonds is provided for as security. That merely changes the form of the question.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think I can answer the Senator's question. In the first place, the Secretary of the Treasury determines the character and amount of any bonds to be received as security for circulation. It is fair to assume that the Secretary of the Treasury will not accept any bonds of a questionable character or when any doubt can be raised of their security. Second, the amount of currency issued is limited to 75 per cent of the market value of the bonds. In the third place, the Secretary of the Treasury can at any time change the securities—every one of them—and require additional securities to be deposited. In the next place, the Government of the United States, which assumes the redemption of these notes, has ample security aside from the bonds. When the Government redeems these notes it sends them to the bank for redemption. The bank either has to go into bankruptcy or redeem them. The Government has next the securities deposited, which the Treasury is required to sell at public auction under the law, in case of default or insolvency. The Government does not foreclose mortgages. It has back of and beyond all this a prior lien upon all the assets of the bank.

Now, does the Senator from Indiana think there is any question about the security of the Government? As the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] suggests to me, it has also the liability of every stockholder to double the amount of his stock. Does the Senator from Indiana think there is any question about the security of the Government of the United States under those conditions?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President.——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. If it will not interrupt the Senator, I should like to say right here that, very wisely, the bill provides that the Government shall take over the legal title to these bonds; in other words, the Government becomes the mortgagee. Now, if the Government becomes the mortgagee, can not the Senator from Rhode Island imagine such a condition of affairs, for instance, as with the Mercantile National Bank, in New York, where the bank has deposited these bonds with the Government and the indorsement will absolutely fail? Can not the Senator imagine a condition, without being too remote or exaggerated, where the railroad company may default upon its dividends and may not be able to place new securities? What is there to prevent the Government from foreclosing its title to save loss to the people?

Mr. ALDRICH. Because——

Mr. SMITH. One moment further——

Mr. ALDRICH. I will be glad to answer that question very promptly.

Mr. SMITH. Another may hold some of this same bond issue and begin proceedings making the Government a party in spite of itself.

Mr. ALDRICH. All this would be very well if it were not for the fact that it is the duty of the Comptroller of the Currency to sell these bonds at public auction immediately.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Suppose he did not? Suppose there is another holder——

Mr. ALDRICH. Suppose he did not?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Pardon me; the point the Senator from Michigan makes can not be disposed of so quickly. Suppose these were in default of interest, and the holders of other bonds of the same issue should bring suit for foreclosure; they would have to make the United States a party to their suit.

Mr. ALDRICH. Before they were sold, you mean?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to ask the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Michigan if they will not join me then in repealing the law, if it be a law. I think it is not now the law; and they ought to join me then in condemning the present practice of the Secretary of the Treasury in receiving these railroad bonds as a deposit for Government money, for reports here will show that he has without any authority of the law been receiving for months and even for years these very railroad bonds, subject to all the criticisms which have been made. I shall expect the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Indiana at least to join me in disapproving such a practice.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I think I will have to resume the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let me go on for a few minutes.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator was going to take only two or three minutes twenty-five minutes ago.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from New Hampshire comes readily to the relief of the Secretary of the Treasury, who has been doing what I say he ought not to do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have been waiting for something over an hour to do a little morning business. This question of the bond issue is to come up at 2 o'clock in regular order, if we had gone along under the rules of the Senate. I have no objection to waiting a few minutes longer, but I think, as there is other business before the Senate, it is a very practical thing for us to do it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was about to say, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana, that it is conceivable, of course, that the Government of the United States might find itself in the possession of bonds of a road that went into the hands of a receiver, that went into bankruptcy, and there would have to be a foreclosure of the mortgage. I repeat, it is the duty of the Comptroller of the Currency to sell these bonds, and the duty would be equally mandatory whether the road was in the hands of a receiver or not. In any event the Government of the United States, holding a small fraction of these bonds, would not take over the railroad. The property would be sold, I take it, and the proceeds would be paid to the bondholders, and the deficiency in this case, whatever there was, would have to be paid by the banks.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It would be exactly in the position of any other creditor.

Mr. ALDRICH. But the Government as a creditor would not and could not take the property.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The receiver under the orders of the court would administer the property for the benefit of the bondholders, of which the Government would be one.

Mr. ALDRICH. And sell it?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Just as the court says. It might sell it or administer it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The court would administer it or sell it, and not the Government.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Most undoubtedly the court would administer it for the benefit of all the bondholders, including the Government.

Mr. ALDRICH. I say it is not a conceivable condition where the court would turn that property over to the Government of the United States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Such a condition is conceivable, if the Senator wants to go into that, although I am not in this debate. I merely asked this question for clarification. But since the Senator mentioned it, is not a case conceivable where the Government of the United States held the bonds and would have to buy the property to protect its interests, just as the holders of bonds have had to do in numberless instances?

Mr. ALDRICH. It does not have to protect itself at all. It sells the bonds and falls back upon the bank for the deficiency.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It probably would not sell the bonds after the receivership. It would find a very poor market for the bonds if it did.

Mr. ALDRICH. It must sell them.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. During a receivership it would only sell them if it wanted to sell them at a loss.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is the plain duty of the Government officers to sell these bonds at public auction in case of default, and there can be no delay or hesitancy on their part.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Rhode Island tell the Senate if all this might not happen under the present practice of the Treasury Department?

Mr. ALDRICH. Absolutely.

Mr. BAILEY. Except as to bond sales under the law.

Mr. ALDRICH. They are held under a different provision of law. There is no definite authorization or direction requiring the sale of the bonds held as security for deposits, although they can undoubtedly be sold under the general pledge of title.

Mr. BAILEY. If this ought not to be in the bill, then the Secretary of the Treasury ought not to have accepted these railroad bonds as security for Government deposits.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Texas is entirely right; and it is the plain duty of Congress, if they think that railroad bonds ought not to be received by the Government as a security for deposits, to say so.

Mr. BAILEY. I will not agree that it is the plain duty of Congress, for I believe the law is plain. The law says they shall secure them by United States bonds and otherwise. The Secretary of the Treasury reads it, that they shall secure them by United States bonds or otherwise. There is a vast difference between "and" and "or," even when a Republican Secretary of the Treasury construes the law.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

CHOCTAW-CHICKASAW CITIZENSHIP COURT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over under the rule, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. TILLMAN on Friday last, as follows:

Whereas there appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 11, 1908, at page 1934, in relation to the Choctaw-Chickasaw citizenship court, the following statement:

"It is alleged that the members of that court were bribed and received as a consideration for their decisions a part of the fee paid these attorneys. Counsel for claimants are reliably informed that the Secretary of the Interior now has in his possession positive proof of the bribery of certain members of that court, said proof setting forth the amount paid certain members of that court, the time and place the payments were made, and the manner of the payments. This evidence has been in the possession of the Secretary of the Interior for more than three months and yet no investigation, so far as counsel for claimants have been able to ascertain, has been inaugurated and no proceedings have been instituted calculated to bring these guilty persons before the bar of justice, although the time in which they can be criminally prosecuted is rapidly expiring:" Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what foundation there is for such charges, and to transmit to the Senate all correspondence, affidavits, evidence, papers, and information pertaining or appertaining thereto.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the following as a substitute for the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what foundation, if any, there is for the charge that members of the Choctaw-Chickasaw court were bribed and received as a consideration for certain decisions rendered by them a part of the fee paid to the attorneys in certain cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, why does the Senator from New Hampshire object to having the Secretary send all the evidence in the case, the facts, the correspondence, and reports?

Mr. GALLINGER. What I object to, Mr. President, is the long preamble which recites certain things have been alleged. I think if we get the information called for in the substitute resolution, it will disclose whether or not there is a basis for calling for further information. If it appears that there is any basis for these alleged charges, then the Senator can follow it up with a resolution calling for additional information and the papers in the case.

Mr. TILLMAN. I can not conceive that the Secretary of the Interior will do more than reply that he has no such information. If you omit to call on him to furnish the reports in the case, he will not send the necessary evidence or the basis for additional inquiry. I think the Senator from New Hampshire himself will recognize that his substitute is in the nature of how not to do it.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not so intended, I will say to the Senator, Mr. President.

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course I recognize that the Senator's honesty of purpose is as great as my own, and I hope none of us want to do more than get at the facts. If there are no facts, then the Secretary of the Interior can tell us so, but at the same time if there is any correspondence or any evidence in the Department, he can send that along with the statement that he has no evidence to submit.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I think the Senator and I can get an agreement in reference to this question.

Mr. TILLMAN. I think so, too.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will drop out the "whereas" and simply amend the resolution so that it will read: That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what foundation there is for the charges that relate to the matter.

Mr. TILLMAN. And all the balance. Put that in, too.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me to submit an amendment?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move to add:

Resolved (second), That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the evidence taken by the Choctaw-Chickasaw citizens' court in relation to the proper compensation to be allowed the attorneys for the Indians, now on file in the Department of Justice.

I move the amendment by reason of the fact that I have just received a letter from one of the court, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

115 COURT SQUARE,
Greensboro, N. C., March 1, 1908.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I see in this morning's newspapers that Senator TILLMAN has introduced a resolution in the Senate calling upon the Secretary of the Interior for information and papers relating to certain charges of bribery against the judges of the Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship court, of which I was a member.

I inclose copy of a telegram which I have sent to the Secretary of the Interior, urging him to do what he can to further a full and speedy investigation of these charges, and I hope this will be done.

I write you to say that the charges are wholly without foundation, and, in justice to myself and the other members of the court, I trust you will insist upon a full investigation.

The articles in the newspapers this morning refer to a statement or speech delivered in the House on February 10 by Representative STEPHENS of Texas, of which I had no knowledge until this morning. This statement is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Tuesday, February 11, 1908, beginning at page 1918, second column. You will notice that Mr. STEPHENS, under leave to extend his remarks, printed in the RECORD a brief filed by the attorneys of the court claimants against whom our court decided, and on page 1934, about the middle of the second column, will be found the language copied from the brief and embraced in Senator TILLMAN'S resolution. This language reflects very seriously upon my character and integrity, and as the charges are utterly false I insist upon an investigation.

The citizenship court heard evidence for quite a while as to the proper compensation to be allowed the attorneys for the Indians. A copy of this evidence is on file in the Department of Justice, and includes the testimony of many prominent lawyers, among the number Chief Justice Hill, of Arkansas, a native of this State. All of the testimony was to the effect that the attorneys were entitled to receive more than twice as much as the court allowed them. The duty was devolved upon the court by act of Congress to fix their compensation, and the court found they had a written contract, by the terms of which they were entitled to receive 9 per cent of the amount recovered, which would have given them nearly one and one-half million dollars, while the court disregarded the contract and fixed their compensation at one-half that amount.

This evidence was taken by a stenographer and reduced to writing, and will be found on file in the Department of Justice, and in justice to the court Senator TILLMAN'S resolution should be amended so as to call for this evidence.

Very truly, yours, SPENCER B. ADAMS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3023) to amend the national-banking laws.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the unfinished business may be laid aside temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, a few days ago my attention was called to what appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 11, which has just been referred to in the letter that has been read. Inasmuch as it amounted to a specific charge affecting the integrity of the members of that court, one of whom was a citizen of Ohio, and inasmuch as the charge also was that the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Garfield, had had this testimony in his possession for the past three months without taking any action, I felt it my duty to write to Secretary Garfield calling his attention to the statement and requesting him to inform me whether or not there was any truth in the charge.

Yesterday morning there came to me in the mail an answer from Mr. Garfield. I intended to bring it here, so that I might read it in connection with the offering of this resolution and put it in the RECORD, but, unfortunately, I forgot to bring it. However, as soon as the matter was called to my attention I dispatched a riding page for the letter and I will have it presently and I want to put it in the RECORD as soon as it comes. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] tells me that he has a copy of the letter. It will obviate the necessity of sending after the letter itself if the Senate will allow me to put this copy in the RECORD as a substitute.

I wish to state that in this letter from Secretary Garfield he said that there was no truth in the charges, and that he had so informed the gentlemen who had put the statement in the RECORD.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FORAKER. In this connection, before being interrupted, if the Senator will allow me, I will read Mr. Garfield's letter.

Mr. TELLER. All right; go ahead.

Mr. FORAKER. It is as follows:

SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., February 29, 1908.

DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge your letter of February 28, calling my attention to the following statement:

"It is alleged that the members of that court were bribed and received as a consideration for their decisions a part of the fee paid these attorneys. Counsel for claimants are reliably informed that the Secretary of the Interior now has in his possession positive proof of the bribery of certain members of that court, the time and place the payments were made, and the manner of the payments. This evidence has been in the possession of the Secretary of the Interior for more than three months and yet no investigation, so far as counsel for claimants have been able to ascertain, has been inaugurated and no proceedings have been instituted calculated to bring these guilty persons before the bar of justice, although the time in which they can be criminally prosecuted is rapidly expiring."

This statement is an extract from a brief submitted by certain attorneys in connection with an Indian case, and was printed in the RECORD by Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This statement, I notice, is the subject-matter of a resolution introduced in the Senate by Senator TILLMAN yesterday.

I advised Mr. STEPHENS that the statement was false, and am pleased to give you the same information I gave him. No evidence was filed in this office or with me as alleged in the statement. Several months ago a man came to my office and made statements regarding what he claimed to be the improper conduct of a certain firm of attorneys and members of the former citizenship court, but as he declined to allow his name to be used, would not reduce his statements to writing, and declined to substantiate his statements, I gave the matter no further consideration.

Very truly, yours, JAMES RUDOLPH GARFIELD, Secretary.

Hon. J. B. FORAKER,
United States Senate.

Now, the Senator from Wyoming asks me to also read this letter. I did not advise the Secretary what I wanted the information for, and he may have drawn an incorrect deduction from the fact that I had written him on the subject.

The Senator from South Carolina introduced his resolution in the language of the statement that is quoted in this letter from the Secretary. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that in the preparation of his substitute he should call for information also upon the specific point that would interest the Secretary of the Interior, whether or not he has had this information, as charged, in his possession for a period of three months, not taking any action whatever to bring the guilty parties, if there are any, to justice. In other words, this is a sort of double-barrel charge, one against the Secretary of the Interior and the other against the members of that court, and I think whatever resolution we pass (and I think it has reached such a stage now that a resolution should be passed) should apply to both charges, and call for information upon both. That is all I care to say about it.

Mr. WARREN. It was late in the afternoon of Friday when this resolution was presented. I could not distinguish well from the reading what was the language of the Senator from South Carolina and what the language of the quotation, but it seemed to me unnecessarily severe. I discovered afterwards that the offensive part was a quotation. Desiring to know upon what foundation the charges rested, I asked the Secretary of the Interior what, if anything, there was in it, so that I might to-day be prepared to make some reply or give some reason for my objection. He stated that he had had an inquiry from the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], which he had just answered, and that instead of writing another letter he would send me a copy, so that I could have the information I desired. That accounts for the letter which I handed to the Senator, and which I would not have used had he not expressed a desire to have it.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; I used that instead of the original.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the preamble of the resolution contains the charge copied from the RECORD. That is simply to give notice to the Secretary when he comes to answer the resolution what the charge was. This is what the resolution proposes to say:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what foundation there is for such charges—and to transmit to the Senate all correspondence, affidavits, evidence, papers, and information pertaining or appertaining thereto.

Charges such as are contained in the preamble—

I want to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that the offense is not having taken part of the money that the lawyers got. The question is whether the court took any money at all. It is quite immaterial whether they got it from the lawyers or whether they got it from the plaintiffs in the controversy or anybody else.

Mr. President, just a word or two about the history of this matter. Some years ago a court was authorized to inquire whether certain people were entitled to go on the rolls in the Cherokee and Chickasaw country. That was determined by the court by putting a very large number of people on the rolls. It was alleged, when that had been done, that there was some improper work done by this court. It was a court which I understand was entitled to render a judgment which was appealable from if the proper authorities charged down there had seen fit so to do.

They came to Congress and inaugurated a system of legislation perhaps unheard of before, and I think it escaped general attention, although I believe one or two Senators objected to it here at the time. But the legislation authorized the appointment of a special court of three individuals, if you call it a court, which I doubt whether it ought to be called. They were authorized to review this decision of a court and to pass upon all the questions that the court had passed on, and if they did not think the court had properly passed upon them, then to reverse the action of the court. When this special commission or citizens' court, as it was called, got through they had reversed the action of the other court and had stricken from the rolls a large number of people whom the court had put on.

Mr. President, in the first place, there are some charges against the first court. I think it was three or four years ago that this decision of the citizens' court was made. There have been charges against that court. I know absolutely nothing about the charges except the public rumor and public reports, and I know nothing about the three men who compose it. I do not even know the names of the men who compose the court. I can see no reason why the resolution ought not to be passed, and we will then get from the Secretary whatever he has on the subject.

If there has been injustice done to people, it is probably too late and it has passed beyond our opportunity to remedy any evils or any errors they have committed; but I think it would be well to let the Secretary give us all the facts, at least; and I think the men who composed that court ought to want the facts as well as anybody else. It is very unfortunate when the public get an idea that our courts are corrupt, whether they be special or regular. I do not suppose that anybody who is the friend of the three judges will object to a fair presentation of the facts. The resolution does not confine the investigation to the question whether they took a part of the attorneys' fees, but whether they took any bribe at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. The language the Senator objects to I took from the original resolution.

Mr. TELLER. No; not from the resolution, from the preamble.

Mr. GALLINGER. From the preamble. I was about to state it—

It is alleged that the members of that court were bribed and received as a consideration for their decisions a part of the fee paid these attorneys.

I took the words found in my substitute from the preamble, and I supposed that was the charge. I want to modify the substitute resolution I offered, and I trust the modified resolution will be accepted by the Senator from South Carolina:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what foundation, if any, there is for the charges which appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 11, 1908, that certain members of the Choctaw-Chickasaw court were bribed in connection with certain decisions rendered by them, and to transmit to the Senate all correspondence, affidavits, evidence, papers, and all other information in his possession pertaining thereto; also to inform the Senate whether he has had in his possession, as alleged, for more than three months certain evidence in connection with the case and has ordered no investigation whatever.

Mr. TELLER. Or at any other time. Do not confine it to three months.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well, we will have that stricken out. Let it read:

Whether he has had in his possession, as alleged, certain evidence.

That does not confine it to three months. I submit that as a substitute for the original resolution.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator object to including my amendment as a second resolution

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not see why both should not be embodied in one resolution and a copy sent to each Cabinet officer. They would all get the same paper at one time then.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from South Carolina let the substitute resolution, as modified by the Senator from New Hampshire, be stated?

Mr. TILLMAN. Let it be read, please.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The modified substitute will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what foundation, if any, there is for the charge which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 11, 1908, that certain members of the Choctaw-Chickasaw court were bribed in connection with certain decisions rendered by them, and to transmit to the Senate all correspondence, affidavits, evidence, papers, and all other information in his possession pertaining thereto; also to inform the Senate whether he has had in his possession, as alleged, certain evidence in connection with the case and has ordered no investigation of the matter.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I want to say just a word. I occupy the very important position as chairman of the Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes. Some Senators here are disposed to forget that, and my friend from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], who is not in his seat, has appeared at times a little anxious to monopolize all Indian matters for his committee. But being chairman of the Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes and supposedly charged with their affairs, in some small degree at least, a good many things come to me in that connection, and I feel the responsibility to those Indians, in a way.

I have been somewhat active in criticising the various schemes for spoliation and manipulation of their affairs which I have watched go through here in the last three or four years, and when this accusation was published in the RECORD by a very "sane and safe" Congressman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], a man who is not given to sensationalism or anything of that sort, I felt that the charge ought not to be allowed to rest without some further ventilation at least; so I offered the resolution on Friday which is now under consideration. This morning I offered another resolution relating to Indian affairs, which my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] objected to being considered, and it has gone over. It deals, on somewhat similar lines, with the rascality, fraud, bribery, and other deviltry which the lawyers who are dealing with Indian affairs are apparently constantly on the alert to slip through here and to slip through down there.

That resolution, I will say, related to the charge that the Attorney-General had ordered the district attorney in that Indian Territory court to quash an indictment and removed him because he would not obey, and then, after he was reinstated, at the instigation or through the instrumentality of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], ordered the record of the court changed so as to state that the indictment had been withdrawn or quashed before the State government became vitalized, so that the matter would be considered res adjudicata.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am sure the Senator did not mean to imply in any way that when I asked that the resolution should go over under the rule I desired to prevent its consideration.

Mr. TILLMAN. Not at all. The Senator from New Hampshire has always been entirely courteous to me and has always been liberal and fair in endeavoring to get light on any subject we needed light on.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was a long resolution and was read when the Senate was in some confusion. I did not at all understand it, and I thought it might well go over for a day, so that we might see it in print.

Mr. TILLMAN. I had no objection in the world to that, and I would not have said a word about it, except for the fact that the matter has come in this shape. Unfortunately, the Senator from New Hampshire is not satisfied with that, either, so that, without any malice aforethought on his part, he is apparently defending, in a way, or postponing, or acting as a buffer between investigation and these Indian frauds.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator, Mr. President, if he will permit me a moment, is quite mistaken in my purpose.

Mr. TILLMAN. I say I absolve the Senator from New Hampshire from any evil purpose whatever. He merely wanted to read the long whereases and preambles to the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all. I think it is rather a dangerous business to be legislating with whereases or by whereases.

Mr. TILLMAN. But the resolution is the vitals of the proposition, and the whereases only give an excuse for the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely; but the Senator will pardon me for saying that I have not intended to be, nor have I ever allowed myself to be, a buffer in matters of legislation.

Mr. TILLMAN. A what?

Mr. GALLINGER. A buffer in matters of legislation.

Mr. TILLMAN. A buffer. Oh!

Mr. GALLINGER. That was the Senator's language.

Mr. TILLMAN. If it is offensive to the Senator, I will take back the word "buffer," for I would not offend or wound the Senator from New Hampshire under any consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not at all offensive, only the word does not apply to me; that is all.

What I want to do in this matter, as I desired to do in the matter of the resolution the Senator offered this morning, is to get the facts, and if there are guilty persons to have them investigated and punished. I will cooperate with the Senator along that line to the extent of my ability.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not doubt that in the slightest, and therefore I am endeavoring in this way to see whether we need an investigation. That was the reason I offered the resolution calling for the papers in the case. I only threw in the suggestion in regard to this additional evidence in the way of a copy of the indictment which the Attorney-General ordered to be quashed, although the grand jury found a true bill, which was rather a remarkable thing. I suppose the Attorney-General will be able to explain why it was done, but still I do not like this way of interfering in Congress or in Washington with the proceedings of the courts. I have seen several cases come up here in litigation affecting Indians' rights in which Congress took a hand and stepped in and ordered the litigation stopped. I have had occasion to believe that some of those things were done in the interest of swindling and rascality and the robbery of the Indians.

I do not know anything about this special case, but, as I said, being chairman of the Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes, I get these things more by way of accident than malice or design, and I do feel that these civilized Indians, or the "late civilized" Indians, or whatever they may be, citizens or what not, are somewhat under, not my supervision at all, but rather wards of mine in a way.

The two points involved here, Mr. President, are these: Has the Secretary of the Interior neglected his duty in not paying attention to charges that have been made by somebody? He, of course, will give us the information and the character of the information which came to him, whether there is anything in it worth while or not. I, of course, have not any idea that the Secretary of the Interior is a man of that kind, and he will explain, doubtless to our entire satisfaction, why he took no steps, as his letter in a way already explains; but the essential charge here, the one I am peculiarly interested in, is whether or not this court, which was created ostensibly for a very reasonable and fair purpose, namely, to pass upon the question of Indian citizenship, or, rather, upon the citizenship of certain parties, was tampered with or not. We are told that several thousand persons, who have as much right to be called "Indians" as the two distinguished Senators from Kansas and Oklahoma, were denied participation in the rich lands of those tribes down there, and by some hook or crook, either right or wrong, their claims to citizenship or Indian rights were thrown out, and that in order to obtain that result the court was bribed.

As some of these men are under indictment here for another piece of rascality, that lends some color to the necessity for an investigation, and as one of the judges has appealed to the "dear Senator" from North Carolina to get the fullest possible investigation of the charges, I do not see why anybody should object. Therefore I am perfectly willing that the resolution which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has drawn as a substitute should go to the Secretary of the Interior, and if the answer of the Secretary is not satisfactory perhaps we shall pursue the case further.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. WARREN. I am entirely in sympathy with the Senator from South Carolina in desiring to protect the business of his committee and the rights of Indians that may be affected in connection with the resolution. It was in no spirit of opposition to his desire that I objected to the consideration of the resolution on Friday night, and I hope the substitute will be adopted. The original was unnecessarily severe in its preamble. Such allegations as those set forth in the preamble serve no good purpose. It is true that the Senator simply quoted from what was said at another place in this building, but I am sorry it was said there, as it would seem that there was no occasion for it.

Mr. TILLMAN. What has become of the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]? I suggest that that amendment had better go over and come up in the morning along with the other resolution introduced by me, calling upon the Department of Justice for certain information. I think the amendment would be more appropriate on that resolution.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire has accepted the amendment by the Senator from North Carolina. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

OCEAN MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I call attention to the special order. It was agreed by unanimous consent that the so-called "shipping bill" should be taken up after the morning business this morning. I want to say, Mr. President, that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] will be prepared to discuss the bill on Thursday next, and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] will follow at his early convenience. No one is present to speak on the bill at this time, and I rise to ask unanimous consent that it may be considered after the routine business on Thursday next, which will be the 5th day of the month.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the special order set for to-day, being the bill (S. 28) to amend the act of March 3, 1891, relating to ocean mail service, be changed to come in after the routine morning business on Thursday, March 5, at the same hour. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

MATERIAL AND EQUIPMENT FOR THE PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent that Order of Business 204, being the joint resolution (S. R. 40) to provide for the transportation by sea of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal, may be assigned for consideration on Monday next immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the joint resolution named by him be taken up for consideration immediately after the close of the routine morning business on Monday, March 9. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PERU, IND.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3160) providing for the erection of a public building in the city of Peru, Ind.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 6, after the word "used," to strike out "as and;" in line 7, after the word "building," to strike out "as a place for holding United States courts," and in line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "eighty," so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected upon the site already selected and purchased by him in the city of Peru, Ind., a building to be used for a post-office building, and for other purposes of the Federal Government at the said city of Peru, Ind., which said building shall cost, complete, not to exceed the sum of $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the plans, specifications, and full estimate for said building shall be made and approved according to law before work thereon shall be commenced. Until this is done none of the money so appropriated shall be used.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LANDER, WYO.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2938) to provide for the erection of a public building at Lander, Wyo.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, on page 1, line 11, after the word "dollars," to strike out "which said sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, this bill was first reported at the last session. Since that time United States courts have been established at the town of Lander. I ask that the bill be amended, in line 7, before the words "United States," by inserting the words "United States courts" and a comma.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 7, before the words "United States," it is proposed to insert the words "United States courts" and a comma, so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected at Lander, Wyo., on a site already owned and possessed by the United States, a suitable building for the use and accommodation of the United States courts, United States land office, post-office, and other Government offices in the city of Lander, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the senior Senator from Wyoming yield to the junior Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Noticing the amendment of my colleague, which I hope will be adopted, I desire to say that in reporting the bill the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds named the amount which my colleague had used in making up his bill, because at that time there was not a court established at Lander. The court bill has passed since, and I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I move further to amend the bill by inserting, after the word "hundred," in line 11, the words "and sixty-five."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 11, after the word "hundred," it is proposed to insert "and sixty-five," so as to read:

Not to exceed the sum of $165,000.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. With the Senator's permission, the bill as it came from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds proposed to appropriate $100,000, did it not?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It did.

Mr. CLAY. And the Senator proposes to amend it by adding $65,000?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do, for a reason which I was about to state. The estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury, which I have before me, gives the amount of space that will be needed and an estimate of the amount that will be necessary to provide for that space. Since the bill has been reported from the committee, I will state to the Senator, the town has been made a sitting place for the United States circuit and district courts, and in that immediate vicinity a very large percentage of the United States business in that State originates, no other court being within 300 miles of the place.

Mr. CLAY. That state of facts might justify a change in the amount of the appropriation, but I was going to say to the Senator that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I know are very careful about always appropriating enough in such bills, to say the least.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will say to the Senator that I would not have offered the amendment except after consultation with the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CLAY. I will not raise any objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAY. Since the amendment has been agreed to, I will take occasion to say that I believe we ought not to attempt to amend a bill in the Senate that has been reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds by adding fifty or sixty thousand dollars. An amendment of that kind ought always to be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and that committee ought to consider it and send it back to the Senate. I believe it to be a bad practice to offer such amendments on the floor of the Senate, and have them agreed to without their ever having been considered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ROCHESTER, N. H.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 906) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Rochester, in the State of New Hampshire.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, on page 2, line 2, after the words "sum of," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "eighty;" and in line 3, after the word "dollars," to strike out "which said sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the city of Rochester and State of New Hampshire, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $80,000.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed site and such others as he may think proper to designate to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination and of his recommendation thereon and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROBATE FEES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GAMBLE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3507) to fix fees and costs in the probate court of the District of Columbia, and to provide for the collection and payment of the same, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I dislike to object to the present consideration of the bill, but I suggest to the Senator in charge of it that it appears to be a bill intended to reform the fee system of the probate court of the District of Columbia. It is a long bill and apparently of very general importance. I think it would be very well to let it go over. I submit that suggestion to the Senator without making formal objection to consideration of the bill.

Mr. GAMBLE. I do not think there will be any objection to that. The bill was considered very fully by the Committee on the District of Columbia and the committee had before it on the hearing Judge Gould, who is the presiding judge of the court, and the register of wills. The fee system, as now provided by law, is very, very unsatisfactory, and it was thought that this modification should be made so that the burden of the expense would be borne more justly and fairly by those coming before the court. As it is now under the fee law the great burden of the cost falls upon the small estates.

Of course if there is any objection to the present consideration of the bill, I am not in a position to insist upon its consideration. I know there is quite a desire among those interested in the bill that it should be promptly considered in order that it may go to the other House.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is a long bill, and I think it is impossible for Senators present to understand it from merely hearing it read. Speaking for myself I have never been able to read it. It manifestly is intended to reform the fee system to a degree in the District. The legal question possibly ought to have gone to the Committee on the Judiciary, although I make no question about it. The Committee on the District of Columbia is as well qualified as any committee of this body to consider the matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Texas permit me?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say it is in the line of the simplification, rather than a reform, of the law. The present system is antiquated and burdensome to the office, and in the opinion of the court and the register of wills, as well as the committee, this modification is very desirable.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator whether the general average of fees is reduced or increased?

Mr. GALLINGER. There is a slight increase, but there is an equalization to a much greater extent than the present system provides for. The bill will doubtless go over, and if the Senator from Texas will turn to a letter from the register of wills, which I presume has been printed in the report, he will get exactly the existing status and see, I think, very clearly the necessity for this change.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will endeavor to read it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over.

Mr. CULBERSON. I repeat that I do not desire to be put in the attitude of objecting to the present consideration of the bill, but I shall be glad if it can go over.

Mr. GAMBLE. We have no desire to insist upon the present consideration of the bill, and are perfectly willing that it may go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ROCK SPRINGS, WYO.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 649) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Rock Springs, in the State of Wyoming.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments, in section 1, page 1, line 7, after the word "apparatus," to strike out "elevators;" in line 11, after the word "apparatus," to strike out "elevators;" and in line 1, on page 2, to strike out "one hundred" and insert "eighty-five," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other governmental offices in the city of Rock Springs and State of Wyoming, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, not to exceed the sum of $85,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENTRY OF ARID AND SEMIARID PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1543) to authorize entry of arid and semiarid public lands.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 3, before the word "under," to strike out "may" and insert "shall;" in line 5, after the word "prescribe," to insert "in accordance with the terms of this act;" in line 7, after the word "semiarid," to insert "nonmineral," and in line 8, after the word "lands," to strike out "devoid of potable water," so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall, under and pursuant to such regulations, terms, and conditions as he may prescribe, in accordance with the terms of this act, permit not more than 320 acres of such arid or semiarid nonmineral, nontimbered, nonirrigable, unappropriated, unreserved, surveyed public lands, as he may designate, to be entered in a compact body by any person qualified to make a homestead entry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 1, line 12, after the word "before," to strike out "the proper officers" and insert "some officer authorized to administer oaths under the homestead laws," and on page 2, line 3, after the word "he," to insert "is a bona fide resident of the State or Territory in which the land proposed to be entered is located and," so as to read:

SEC. 2. That every person applying to enter lands under this act shall make and subscribe before some officer authorized to administer oaths under the homestead laws and file in the proper land office an affidavit that he is the head of a family, or is over 21 years of age; that he is a bona fide resident of the State or Territory in which the land proposed to be entered is located and is a citizen of the United States, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 2, line 18, after the word "thereof," to strike out "or the timber thereon," so as to read:

That he is not acting as agent for any person, corporation, or syndicate in making such entry nor in collusion with any person, corporation, or syndicate to give them the benefit of the lands entered, or any part thereof; that he does not apply to enter the same for the purpose of speculation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 3, line 15, after the word "heirs," to insert "personal representatives;" in line 16, after the word "by," to insert "his or their oath and by the oath of;" in line 22, after the word "section," to strike out "2287" and insert "2288," and on page 4, line 1, after the word "law," to insert "but notice of the making of such proof shall be made and published in the manner provided by the homestead laws for the publication of notices of final proof," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. No certificate, however, shall be given or patent issued for any lands entered under this act until the expiration of five years from the date of such entry, and if at the expiration of such time or at any time within two years thereafter, the person making such entry, or his heirs, personal representatives, or devisees, proves by his or their oath and by the oath of two credible witnesses to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office that he, or they, have actually and in good faith cultivated the lands entered by him as required by this act, and makes affidavit that no part of such land has been alienated except as provided in section 2288 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, he, if at that time is a citizen of the United States, shall be entitled to a patent as in other cases provided by law, but notice of the making of such proof shall be made and published in the manner provided by the homestead laws for the publication of notices of final proof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 4, line 4, after the words "Sec. 5," to strike out "That all persons making entry under this act shall be required to pay the same fees and commissions as are required under the homestead laws" and insert "That the fees and commissions on all entries under this act shall be uniformly the same as those charged under the homestead law for a maximum entry at the minimum price," and in line 15, after the words "United States," to insert "but no entry will be canceled because of the entryman's failure to reside on the lands covered thereby," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That the fees and commissions on all entries under this act shall be uniformly the same as those charged under the homestead law for a maximum entry at the minimum price, and all entries made under this act shall be subject to contest as provided by law relating to homestead cases for illegal inception, abandonment, or for failure to comply with the requirements of law, and upon satisfactory proof thereof shall be canceled and the lands and all moneys paid under such entries shall be forfeited to the United States, but no entry will be canceled because of the entryman's failure to reside on the lands covered thereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FRANKLIN, LA.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5363) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Franklin, La.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to insert after line 9 the following:

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to erected thereon a suitable building for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office in the city of Franklin, State of Louisiana, the cost of said site and building not to exceed the sum of $50,000.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BALTIMORE AND WASHINGTON TRANSIT COMPANY.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3405) to amend an act to authorize the Baltimore and Washington Transit Company, of Maryland, to enter the District of Columbia, approved June 8, 1896.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MISSOULA, MONT.

Mr. DIXON. I ask unanimous consent for consideration at this time of the bill (S. 2244) to provide for the erection of a public building at Missoula, Mont.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the words "sum of," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and thirty," and after the word "thousand," to strike out the remainder of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected on the site purchased pursuant to the act of June 30, 1906, a suitable building, with fireproof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States post-office, land office, forestry officials, and other Government offices at the city of Missoula, in the county of Missoula and State of Montana. The plans and specifications and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the building complete the sum of $130,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REORGANIZATION OF THE CONSULAR SERVICE.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4112) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the reorganization of the consular service of the United States," approved April 5, 1906.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read for information.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest that general bills had better go over.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Texas has any objection to the bill being read and amended, I will let it go over.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. LODGE. There are only one or two amendments made. I will say to the Senator it is the unanimous report of the committee, and I do not think there is any objection at all to the bill. It cures some defects in existing law.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the bill be read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. And I will withhold the objection until that has been done.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. I notice that this is a bill "to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the reorganization of the consular service of the United States' approved April 5, 1906," less than two years ago. In view of my experience with legislation since I have been in the Senate I do not hesitate to assume that the fees have been increased in this new bill. If my assumption is correct, I will ask the Senator in general terms what increase there is in the consular fees.

Mr. LODGE. Consular fees are all abolished by the act of 1906 and all consulates were put on a salary basis. All fees were abolished—notarial, etc.

Mr. CULBERSON. What increase is there in salaries by the bill?

Mr. LODGE. The net result of this bill is a decrease of expenditures of about a thousand dollars. There are twenty-eight consulates that are closed and there are seventeen new ones created. The balance has been used to change the classification of certain consuls who are underpaid.

When the bill was framed two years ago the only information the committee or the Department had to go upon was the existing salary plus the fees and the general business of the office. That bill created, as the Senator will remember, five consular inspectors, and since that time all the consulates have been thoroughly inspected and reports made. So the Department is now able to make a proper and, I think, a permanent classification.

Their reports have resulted in the abolition of twenty-eight consulates which I think were totally unnecessary. They are all stated in the report and the reasons given, as well as for the creation of the seventeen new ones. No consul will be dropped out owing to the abolition of the consulates. The eleven consuls will not be dropped out, because there have been enough vacancies which have been held back to provide for all the twenty-eight consuls—that is, assuming they are good men. The net result of those changes, as I have said, is a decrease in expense of a thousand dollars.

The committee went over the bill at several sessions with the greatest possible care and proposed only three amendments, those mentioned—Melbourne, Limoges, and Gibraltar. It appeared, on examination, that they ought to be moved. The report, as I have stated, is a unanimous report. The committee has given a good deal of attention to the matter, and I think it is as thoroughly done as it is possible to do it—that is, I think the salaries are as equitably adjusted for the time being. Of course, business must vary at different points, but I think they are as accurately adjusted as is possible under the circumstances.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, this bill is so unusual in the reduction of the expenses of the Government that I shall not object to its consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations was, under the subhead "Consuls," on page 2, line 22, before the word "Lyon," to insert "Melbourne," so as to make the clause read:

Class 3, $5,000: Amsterdam, Bremen, Dawson, Belfast, Havre, Johannesburg, Kobe, Lourenço Marquez, Melbourne, Lyon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 12, before the word "Mannheim," to insert "Limoges," so as to make the clause read:

Class 6, $3,500: Alexandria, Apia, Barmen, Barranquilla, Basel, Berne, Bluefields, Bradford, Chemnitz, Chunking, Cologne, Dalny, Durban, Edinburgh, Fiume, Geneva, Georgetown, Guadelajara, Limoges, Mannheim, Montevideo, Nagasaki, Odessa, Palermo, Port Elizabeth, Prague, Quebec, Rangoon, Rheims, Rimouski, Rome, St. Petersburg, Saloniki, Sherbrooke, Vladivostok.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 19, after the word "Ghent," to insert "Gibraltar;" and in line 22, before the word "Nantes," to strike out "Melbourne," so as to make the clause read:

Class 7, $3,000: Aix la Chapelle, Aleppo, Barbados, Batavia, Belgrade, Bursiem, Calais, Calgary, Carlsbad, Colombo, Corinto, Dunfermline, Florence, Frontera, Ghent, Gibraltar, Hamilton (Ontario), Hanover, Harput, Huddersfield, Iquitos, Iquique, Jerusalem, Karachi, Kehl, La Guaira, Leghorn, Liege, Madras, Malaga, Managua, Nantes, Nassau, Newcastle (New South Wales), Newcastle (England), Port Antonio, Punta Arenas, Port au Prince, Riga, Sandakan, Progreso, Seville, St. John (New Brunswick), St. Michaels, St. Thomas (West Indies), San Jose, Sheffield, Swansea, Sydney (Nova Scotia), Tabriz, Tampico, Tamsui, Trieste, Trinidad.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 21, after the words "Fort Erie," to strike out "Gibraltar," and in line 22, after the words "La Paz," to strike out "Limoges," so as to make the clause read:

Class 9, $2,000: Aguascalientes, Asuncion, Bagdad, Bristol, Campbellton, Cape Gracias, Cape Haitien, Cartagena, Ceiba, Charlottetown, Cornwall, Durango, Ensenada, Fernie, Fort Erie, Gorée-Dakar, Grenobel, Guadeloupe, Hermosillo, Hobart, La Paz, Manzanillo, Maskat, Messina, Moncton, Niagara Falls, Patras, Port Louis, Puerto Cabello, Puerto Plata, Rouen, Saigon, St. Johns (Quebec), St. Pierre, St. Stephen, Salina Cruz, Saltillo, Sierra Leone, Sivas, Stavanger, Suva, Tahita, Tapachula, Turin, Turks Island, Venice.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I move to insert as a new section what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts proposes an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section:

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect on the 1st day of July, 1908.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CUSTOMS LAUNCH FOR LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Mr. FLINT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 520) for the purchase or construction of a launch for the customs service at and in the vicinity of Los Angeles, Cal.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to insert after the word "dollars," in line 8, the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may use said boat at any customs port in the United States, as the exigency of the service may require.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase or have constructed for the customs service a suitable launch, of such motive power as may be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, for use at and in the vicinity of Los Angeles, Cal.; and the cost thereof shall not exceed the sum of $10,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may use said boat at any customs port in the United States, as the exigency of the service may require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PERSONAL DAMAGE CASES IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 37) disapproving certain laws enacted by the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution which disapproves and declares null and void and of no effect an act of the legislative assembly of New Mexico, entitled "An act establishing the law and procedure in certain cases," passed over veto March 11, 1903, which act reads as follows:

Be it enacted by the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico:

SECTION 1. Hereafter there shall be no civil liability under either the common law or any statute of this Territory on the part of any person or corporation for any personal injuries inflicted or death caused by such person or corporation in this Territory, unless the person claiming damages therefor shall within ninety days after such injuries shall have been inflicted make and serve upon the person or corporation against whom the same is claimed, and at least thirty days before commencing suit to recover judgment therefor, an affidavit which shall be made before some officer within this Territory who is authorized to administer oaths, in which the affiant shall state his name and address, the name of the person receiving such injuries, if such person be other than the affiant, the character and extent of such injuries in so far as the same may be known to affiant, the way or manner in which such injuries were caused in so far as the affiant has any knowledge thereof, and the names and addresses of all witnesses to the happening of the facts or any part thereof causing such injuries as may at such time be known to affiant, and unless the person so claiming such damages shall also commence an action to recover the same within one year after such injuries occur, in the district court of this Territory in and for the county in which such injuries occur, or in and for the county of this Territory where the claimant or person against whom such claim is asserted resides, or in event such claim is asserted against a corporation, in the county in this Territory where such corporation has its principal place of business; and said suit after having been commenced shall not be dismissed by plaintiff unless by written consent of the defendant filed in the case, or for good cause shown to the court; it being hereby expressly provided and understood that such right of action is given only on the understanding that the foregoing conditions precedent are made a part of the law under which right to recover can exist for such injuries, except as herein otherwise provided.

SEC. 2. Whenever any person or corporation shall file a petition in the district court of this Territory for the county in which said petitioner lives, or, if a corporation, in the district court for the county in which such corporation has its principal place of business, stating in effect that such petitioner is informed and believes that some party named in said petition claims that he is entitled to damages from said petitioner for personal injuries inflicted in this Territory upon the party named in said petition, or for personal injuries inflicted upon or death caused to some other person for which such party claims to have a cause of action against said petitioner, and stating as near as may be the general character of such injuries, and the manner and the date said party claims they were inflicted, and the place where he claims they were inflicted, as near as petitioner knows or is informed as to such facts, and praying that the said party may be required to appear in said court and file therein a statement of his cause of action in the form of a complaint against said petitioner, summons shall issue out of said court and be served and returnable as other process, commanding and requiring the said party named in said petition to appear in said court and file such statement in the form of a complaint against said petitioner, if he has to make, and upon such complaint being filed by such party as required, the defendant named therein may demur to or answer the same and such further pleading had as the parties may be entitled to, or as may be meet and proper as in other cases of a similar character, and from thenceforward such further proceedings shall be had in such cause as in other cases, and the same shall be determined upon its merits, and final judgment, subject, however, to appeal or writ of error, shall be rendered therein either for the petitioner named in said complaint or for the adverse party, and if the court finds the petitioner guilty of any of the wrongs, injuries, or trespasses complained of against him in said statement such damages shall be assessed against the said petitioner as the law and the facts may require, in the same manner as though said cause had been instituted by the filing of said statement as a complaint.

In event said party complained of in said petition, after being duly served with such summons, shall fail or refuse to appear or file his said statement as required herein, judgment shall be rendered by default against him and in favor of the petitioner as in other cases, and thereupon the court shall try and determine the issues raised by such petition, including the question as to whether or not the petitioner is liable to said party on account of any of the matters or things stated in said petition in any sum of money whatsoever, and, if so, in what amount, and final judgment shall be rendered in accordance with the facts and the law, and such judgment as the court may render shall be final and conclusive upon the question of the liability or nonliability of said petitioner to said party, and of the amount of the liability.

SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person to institute, carry on, or maintain any suit for the recovery of any such damages in any other State or Territory, and upon it being made to appear to the court in which any proceeding has been instituted in this Territory, as herein provided, that any such suit has also been commenced, or is being maintained in any other State or Territory contrary to the intent of this act, it shall be the duty of the court to set down for hearing and try and determine the proceeding so pending in this Territory as expeditiously as possible upon such short notice to the other party thereto or his attorneys as the court may direct; and for the purpose of trying the same said court shall have the power to compel the parties thereto to plead or answer on such short day as it may determine; and in event the same is triable by jury it shall be the duty of the court, upon motion, to change the venue thereof to such county in said district as in the opinion of the court will afford an opportunity for the most speedy hearing; but in event such action is not triable by jury, then the court shall immediately proceed to try and determine the same, giving such reasonable notice as it may determine, to the parties or their attorneys, at any place in the Territory which the court may designate, and witnesses may be compelled by subpœna to attend such place personally, from any part of the Territory, and testify, as at present, at such time and place. The institution of any such suit in any other State or Territory shall be construed by the court as a waiver upon the part of the party so instituting the same of the right of trial by jury in the case pending in the courts of this Territory.

SEC. 4. Whenever it shall be made to appear to the district court of this Territory for the county in which petitioner or plaintiff lives, by any petition filed under section 3 hereof, or by a supplemental petition, or by an original complaint filed for that purpose, that petitioner or plaintiff fears or has good reason to fear that any other person is threatening or contemplating instituting suit in some other State or Territory to recover damages against petitioner or plaintiff for personal injuries inflicted or death caused in this Territory, or that he has already instituted and is then maintaining such a suit, it shall be the duty of the court, upon such bond as the court may require being given, to issue its injunction pendente lite restraining such party from instituting or maintaining such suit in any court sitting in any other State or Territory, and, at the final hearing, if such facts are found by the court to be true, the court shall make such injunction perpetual; and at the final hearing in all cases instituted under the provisions of section 3 hereof the party complained of in the petition shall be perpetually enjoined from further instituting or maintaining any suit or action to recover damages by reason of any of the matters or things set up in said petition.

SEC. 5. This act shall not apply to cases in which the persons or corporation against whom damages for personal injuries are claimed can not be duly served with process in this Territory.

SEC. 6. Nothing herein contained shall be construed as in any way preventing anyone in this Territory claiming to have a right of action for any such damages from compromising such claim.

SEC. 7. All acts and parts of acts and laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed, and this act shall be in effect from and after its passage.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LEWISTON, IDAHO.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 123) to establish a Government building at Lewiston, county of Nez Perce, State of Idaho.

The Secretary read the bill and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected on a site already purchased by the Government a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the city of Lewiston and State of Idaho, the cost of said building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $85,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the erection of a public building at Lewiston, county of Nez Perce, State of Idaho."

INLAND WATERWAY FROM MOBILE BAY.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the concurrent resolution reported by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] on the 24th of February from the Committee on Commerce.

The concurrent resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be made an examination and survey of an inland waterway from Mobile Bay to Perdido Bay, in the State of Alabama, and from said Perdido Bay to Escambia Bay, in the State of Florida, for the purpose of estimating the probable cost of the construction of a canal 300 feet wide by 9 feet deep, or of such width and depth as will be sufficient to permit of the navigation of such vessels as ordinarily navigate said bays, and for other purposes.

LIGHT-HOUSE TENDER FOR TWELFTH LIGHT-HOUSE DISTRICT.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 5085) authorizing the construction of a light-house tender for the light-house inspector of the twelfth light-house district.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to add the following as an additional section:

SEC. 2. That the Light-House Board is authorized to employ temporarily, at Washington, not exceeding three draftsmen, to be paid at current rates, to prepare plans for the tender provided for herein, and to be paid from the appropriation therefor; such employment to terminate on or before the date on which the plans or alterations therein for this tender are finally completed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF INDIAN TRADERS AGAINST MENOMINEE INDIANS.

Mr. BROWN. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4791) providing for the determination and payment of claims of certain Indian traders and others against the Menominee tribe of Indians in Wisconsin and against individual members of said tribe.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being on objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 2, line 11, after the word "Indians," to insert "as a tribe;" and in line 20, after the word "Indians," to insert "as a tribe," so as to read:

Said claims shall be presented to said court by verified petitions to be filed within six months from the date of the approval of this act. Said court shall, in rendering judgment, ascertain and determine the amount, if any, due upon each of said claims, and if the court find that there is a liability upon any of said claims, it shall then determine if such liability be that of the said Menominee tribe of Indians as a tribe or that of individual members of said tribe, and it shall render judgment for the amount, if any, found due from said tribe to any of said claimants, and it shall render judgment for the amounts, if any, found due from any of the individual members of said tribe to any of said claimants. Upon the rendition of final judgments, the court shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall thereupon, in case judgments be against the said Menominee tribe of Indians as a tribe, direct the payment of said judgments out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said tribe, etc.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN WARNER.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 1669) granting an honorable discharge to Benjamin Warner.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that Benjamin Warner hereafter shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged as a private of Company B, Third New Jersey Cavalry Volunteers, on October 31, 1864, and that an honorable discharge shall be issued to him by the Secretary of War. But no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator if it is the purpose of the bill to remove the charge of desertion?

Mr. KEAN. That is the object.

Mr. TILLMAN. In order to get a pension, of course.

Mr. KEAN. I do not know, but I suppose a pension is to come hereafter.

Mr. TILLMAN. Did he deserve to be dishonorably discharged, or did he not?

Mr. KEAN. He says he did not.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is the report very lengthy?

Mr. KEAN. I do not think the report is very lengthy. The report was drawn by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER], and it is a very able document, without doubt. I have not read the report.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that it be read?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read, in part, the report submitted by Mr. FOSTER February 27, 1908, the entire report being as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, which has had under consideration the bill (S. 1669) granting an honorable discharge to Benjamin Warner, reports it back to the Senate favorably and recommends that it be passed without amendment.

A similar measure was favorably reported to the Senate in the Fifty-ninth Congress by Senate Report No. 7261 and passed the Senate.

Attention is invited to the soldier's record, as follows:

It is shown by the records that Benjamin Warner was enrolled September 3, 1862, and mustered into service September 17, 1862, as a private in Company I, Thirty-first New Jersey Infantry Volunteers, to serve nine months. He appears to have served faithfully until June 24, 1863, when he was mustered out with his company and honorably discharged the service.

He was again enrolled January 5, 1864, and mustered into service January 29, 1864, as a private in Company B, Third New Jersey Cavalry Volunteers, to serve three years. He is reported present with his company to August 31, 1864, and on the company muster roll, dated October 31, 1864, he is reported absent sick in hospital.

The medical reports afford no information relative to him, nor has any record been found to show that he was discharged or that he left the service by permission of competent authority, and in the absence of such record it must be held that he deserted on or about October 31, 1864. He never reported his whereabouts or the cause of his absence to the military authorities, although his company remained in service until August 1, 1865.

Applying for removal of the charge of desertion, Warner testified July 9, 1887, as follows:

"That he is the identical Benjamin Warner who was a private in Company B, in the Third Regiment of New Jersey Volunteer Cavalry; that he served faithfully until on or about the 18th day of May, 1865, when, without any intention of deserting, he left the regiment under the following circumstances: Was home on sick furlough, and while at home the war closed and the regiment was mustered out, and he never received his discharge."

In his petition to the committee Warner, after reciting his earlier military service, claims that he served with the Third Regiment of New Jersey Cavalry until about the 18th day of October, 1864, when, by reason of illness, he was sent to the general hospital at Harpers Ferry, Va., which fact he believes is the last account of him on the records of the War Department. Also "that no charge of desertion was ever preferred against him by anyone, but the same was inferred by the War Department because they had no other record of him, and was unknown to him until he applied for a pension on account of disability."

The petitioner further states that—

"After he was sent to hospital at Harpers Ferry he remained there about two weeks, and no improvement in his condition being manifest, he was sent home on a furlough, to remain until he was able to join his regiment again for service; that he reached his home, at Oxford, in the county of Warren, N. J., in the early part of November and was openly at his home all winter, sometimes gaining a little and then losing ground, and all that winter was unable to go out to report to the provost-marshal, but was frequently visited by deputy provost-marshals, who were active in picking up soldiers that were at home without leave; that they always examined his furlough and his condition, and, being satisfied that he was no good to the service, left him undisturbed; that as warm weather approached he began to improve, and was making preparation to get back to his regiment when he heard that Richmond had fallen and the war was ended and was informed that there was no need of his returning to the Army; and as he had not fully recovered, and never did, he remained at home and has remained there ever since."

In an affidavit executed October 11, 1888, John Rowe, 67 years of age, a resident of Phillipsburg, N. J., substantiates what Warner says regarding his furlough and illness at home.

So does Robert M. Bishop, 63 years of age, a resident of Bridgeville, N. J., in an affidavit dated October 29, 1888.

Testifying under date of November 13, 1888, Warner said he was "unable to furnish any evidence of a physician or of any medical treatment or treatment of a physician during the period between September 15, 1864, and August 1, 1865, or thereabouts, because the physician who attended on this deponent, and who was his family physician, is now dead."

In this connection Samuel Kries, 52 years of age, a resident of Franklin Township, Warren County, N. J., in an affidavit executed October 14, 1899, testifies as follows:

"Has lived in the county of Warren, N. J., for the forty years past, and has been acquainted with Benjamin Warner, a member of Company B, Third Regiment New Jersey Cavalry, for all that period, and knows that he was in said company and regiment; that he remembers that said Benjamin Warner came home to his family in the fall of 1864, and that he had a furlough to come home, and was sick all the while that he remained at home, until the war closed, in 1865, and was still unfit for service; that during the period he was at home deponent saw Benjamin Warner every week or every two weeks, and knows that he was visited by an officer, who examined him and his furlough and let him go; that deponent during the time brought medicine to said Benjamin Warner from Doctor Glenn, late of Washington, N. J., now deceased, and knows that Doctor Glenn, by whom said Warner was being treated, stated to deponent that said Warner was unfit for service and unable to return, and that said Warner continued sick after the close of the war for some considerable time, and that among other things he suffered from rheumatism and chronic diarrhea; that when he lay down he had to be assisted to get up."

W. H. H. Warman, M. D., 3343 Seventeenth street NW., Washington, D. C., in an affidavit sworn to March 14, 1906, says he knew Warner since 1862, and has "always regarded him as a true patriot and an honest, honorable man, though uneducated and unacquainted with the customs and ways of the world and military rules and somewhat simple-minded. He was a true and faithful soldier during his service in the Thirty-first New Jersey Regiment. He and I served in the same company and were intimately associated as comrades, performing like duties."

Martin Wyckhoff, of Asbury, Warren County, N. J., adjutant of the regiment and also captain and acting inspector of staff of Gen. Gabriel R. Paul, certifies that he is well acquainted with Warner; that he was a faithful soldier while connected with the Thirty-first Regiment of New Jersey, and was honorably discharged therefrom; that he afterwards reenlisted in the Third New Jersey Cavalry and served some time; that he was at home in the winter of 1864–65 sick, and during that time took no measures to conceal himself, stating he was on furlough. Continuing, Mr. Wyckhoff says:

"While I did not see his furlough, I never doubted he had it, as the military authorities were active in picking up all soldiers that could not show some authority for being absent from the regiment. I further certify that I am and have been since 1862 well and intimately acquainted with said Warner; that he is a simple-minded man and one that could never have concealed himself had he been a deserter. He knew just enough to make a good soldier, but not enough to make a deserter, and I certify that, learning his troubles, I interested myself in his behalf, without fee or hope of reward, to have him set right on the record, deeming it a shame that a man who had been a faithful soldier, honorably discharged, then reenlisting and sent home to recruit, unable to return, should be called a deserter when the only record they have is 'October 18, sick in hospital.'"

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not ask for a further reading of the report.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIGHT OF APPEAL IN HABEAS CORPUS PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4777) restricting in certain cases the right of appeal to the Supreme Court in habeas corpus proceedings.

The Secretary read the bill and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that from a final decision by a court of the United States in a proceeding in habeas corpus where the detention complained of is by virtue of process issued out of a State court no appeal to the Supreme Court shall be allowed, unless the United States court by which the final decision was rendered or a justice of the Supreme Court shall be of opinion that there exists probable cause for an appeal, in which event, on allowing the same, the said court or justice shall certify that there is probable cause for such allowance.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE HERMITAGE.

Mr. FRAZIER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4797) for the care and preservation of the Hermitage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $25,000 for the following purposes: For the repair, improvement, and care of "the Hermitage," the home of President Andrew Jackson, situated in Davidson County, Tenn., to be paid to the Ladies' Hermitage Association of Tennessee; $5,000 of the sum to be immediately available for repairing the buildings and tomb, and improving and beautifying the grounds and premises; the remaining $20,000 to be held by the Ladies' Hermitage Association in trust, and the interest thereon only used for the purpose of keeping in repair and caring for the buildings, tomb, and premises. It also provides that $20,000 shall be invested by the Ladies' Hermitage Association in United States bonds, bonds of the State of Tennessee, or some other good and safe security, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and to be held by the association as a permanent trust fund, and the interest on the fund to be forever devoted and applied as herein directed, and for no other purpose.

Mr. KEAN. I ask the Senator from Tennessee if there is any precedent for such a bill?

Mr. FRAZIER. I am unable to say just whether there is any precedent or not; but, if there is not, I think we can very readily make one.

These premises embrace the tomb of President Jackson. The State of Tennessee some years ago, in 1889, transferred this building, embracing the Hermitage, the tomb of President Jackson, and twenty-five acres of land to the Ladies' Hermitage Association, who have had the care of these premises since then. It has been supported entirely by voluntary contribution. The President, on his recent visit to Tennessee, visited the Hermitage, and in his annual message on the convening of Congress in December last recommended that an appropriation be made to aid these ladies in the care of the Hermitage and the tomb of President Jackson.

Mr. KEAN. Do I understand that this bill simply makes a contribution to this association, and that the Government of the United States does not acquire the land or anything of that kind?

Mr. FRAZIER. No, sir; the land belongs to this charitable association of ladies.

Mr. KEAN. And this is merely a gift of the Government, and not the purchase of the land?

Mr. FRAZIER. Not at all.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATE CLAIM OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 450) for the relief of the State of North Carolina.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the State of North Carolina $42,532 for cotton taken from the authorities of that State immediately after the close of the late civil war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 3, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 2, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, February 29, was read and approved.

COMPENSATION OF THE PHILIPPINE COMMISSIONERS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to lay before the House a letter from the Comptroller of the Treasury, touching the pay of the Commissioners from the Philippines, if there is no objection. The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read the communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 2, 1908.

Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 28th instant in reference to the compensation of the Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands, elected by the Philippine legislature November 26, 1907. You ask for my opinion upon the following questions:

1. Have they been paid any sums under section 8 of the act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 694) from the Treasury of the United States?

2. When does their compensation begin under the terms of the joint resolution of Congress approved February 24, 1908?

As to the first question I am informed that no payment has been made to these Commissioners by the statement of an account in the office of the Auditor for the State and other Departments.

As to the second question, the act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 694), provides in section 7 for a Philippine legislature consisting of the Philippine Commission and the Philippine assembly, the members of the latter branch to be elected. In said section it is also provided that—

"The legislature shall hold annual sessions, commencing on the first Monday of February in each year and continuing not exceeding ninety days thereafter (Sundays and holidays not included): Provided, That the first meeting of the legislature shall be held upon the call of the governor within ninety days after the first election."

Section 8 of the same act provides:

"That at the same time with the first meeting of the Philippine legislature, and biennially thereafter, there shall be chosen by said legislature, each house voting separately, two Resident Commissioners to the United States, who shall be entitled to an official recognition as such by all Departments upon presentation to the President of a certificate of election by the civil governor of said islands, and each of whom shall be entitled to a salary payable monthly by the United States at the rate of $5,000 per annum, and $2,000 additional to cover all expenses: Provided, That no person shall be eligible to such election who is not a qualified elector of said islands, owing allegiance to the United States, and who is not 30 years of age."

The joint resolution of Congress approved February 24, 1908, is as follows:

"That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives is authorized to pay to each of the two Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands, out of the appropriation made for the current fiscal year for compensation of the Members of the House of Representatives, the same rate of compensation as is authorized and being paid to the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, together with $2,000 each, as authorized by law, in lieu of mileage."

The compensation appropriated and being paid to the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico is at the rate of $7,500 per annum as fixed by section 4 of the act of February 26, 1907 (34 Stat., 993).

When the compensation of the Commissioners from the Philippine Islands begins under the law is a question of serious doubt. It is to be noticed that the law is similar to that under which the Commissioner from Porto Rico is elected (sec. 39, act of April 12, 1900; 31 Stat., 86). The latter was first elected November 6, 1900; his certificate of election was dated November 16, 1900, and he took the oath of office in Porto Rico on November 17, 1900. The Treasury Department of the United States paid him salary beginning on the date he took the oath. The law provided for his election, but did not fix the time when his term of office began. Subsequently, by section 3 of the act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 732), it was provided that the term of office of the Commissioner should commence on the 4th of March next succeeding the date of his election.

The Philippine act is in the same language as to term of office, amount of salary, etc., as the earlier act relating to Porto Rico.

Although the matter is by no means clear, I am of the opinion that it was intended by the joint resolution of February 24, 1908, to pay the resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands at the rate of $7,500 from the date of their certificates of election.

When their terms will expire is a question not now to be decided, but no doubt Congress will, as in the case of the Commissioner from Porto Rico (act of July 1, 1902, 32 Stats., 732), amend the Philippine act to fix the term of the Commissioners, especially in view of the fact that while the present Commissioners were elected in November, 1907, the Philippine legislature is by the law to meet hereafter in February of each year.

I have answered your questions as best I could, not as an official decision, but as an expression of my views for your information. Under section 48 of the Revised Statutes the Speaker's certificate is conclusive on the accounting officers, and therefore all questions as to salary and mileage of Members and Delegates are to be decided by the Speaker.

It is the practice to treat the Speaker's certificate as to a Commissioner's salary as having the same effect as it has in the case of Members and Delegates.

Respectfully, R. J. TRACEWELL, Comptroller.

The SPEAKER. Under that letter and under the law, unless the House directs to the contrary, the Chair will sign the certificates which will entitle these Commissioners to the compensation indicated in the letter, which will be at the rate of $7,500 a year from the date of their certificates, which, I believe, was in November.

COMMITTEE ON POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT EXPENDITURES.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, or such subcommittee as it may designate, shall have leave to sit during the sessions of the House during the Sixtieth Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words upon the subject to which this resolution relates, and first to make a brief statement of fact which seems opportune and just to those members of the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department who have been making an investigation for several days in order that the House may know that the committee has been organized and at work for some time past.

This is important in view of a misstatement in debate during my brief absence from the session on Saturday, when the resolution reported by the Committee on Accounts authorizing a clerk for this session to each of the House committees on expenditures was under consideration, which misstatement was evidently made through misapprehension and was, that only three of these committees on expenditures (naming three which did not include the one of which I have the honor to be chairman) were at work, or purposed, so far as the speaker referred to had heard, to work in discharge of the duties imposed upon them by the rules of the House, and more particularly does this statement of work done by my committee seem appropriate from the fact that that usually accurate and always fair newspaper, the Washington Post, this morning attributes to an honored Member of this House, who is a prominent member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, this statement relative to that committee:

While the committee had had several meetings already, so far it had done little more than prepare for the work, and that it would probably not get to the investigation until some of the appropriation bills had been disposed of—

I desire to say that this gentleman, whom I have been pleased to regard as my personal friend, has been kept from most of the meetings of the committee by reason of work upon another and more prominent committee, and I do not suppose, if he uttered the remark attributed to him, that he meant to ridicule or reflect upon or even criticise the investigation which is actually being and has for some days been conducted by our committee and such of its members as were able to attend its meetings. That the work of the committee might have been better done had he been present at its investigations may be conceded without thereby acknowledging that it was little more than preparatory.

On the subject of a session clerk for the committee, I wish to say that if the committee were to comply literally with the rule, it would require a great bureau instead of one clerk to do its work. In order to reasonably and properly perform the duties which may justly be expected from this committee by this House—among other things to investigate and report upon the economy and justness of expenditures, retrenchment, abolition of useless offices, and fairness of salaries paid and asked for—it should have a clerk of the ability, capacity, and willingness to serve the committee and the House equal to that, for instance, of Mr. Courts, the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, and its work should go on the year round, whether the House is in session or in vacation; and I trust that before this House adjourns it will make better provision to increase the effectiveness of the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department. Unless the position of clerk is made sufficiently certain and remunerative the committee can not secure the kind of clerk it should have and perform its reasonable duties fully or satisfactorily.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WANGER. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The gentleman spoke to me before the House met. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the Washington Post attributes what he read to some Member of the House?

Mr. WANGER. Yes; to a Member of the House who is a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I thought the gentleman, from his conversation with me prior to the meeting of the House, had reference to myself.

Mr. WANGER. I had no reference in my remarks touching the Post article to the subject respecting which I had before spoken to the gentleman from Georgia. My only reference to him since I took the floor was in comment upon what he said in the House on Saturday as printed in the RECORD.

Mr. Speaker, the committee has had two or three hearings during the sessions of the House in violation of the rule. We can not properly perform our functions unless we have many more such hearings, and I ask the adoption of the resolution to make them in harmony with the law of the House.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. If the gentleman will yield for a moment, I understood from the gentleman's remarks that he had read something in the Washington Post that he had attributed to me.

Mr. WANGER. Not at all.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I want to say with reference to my remarks on Saturday last, if the gentleman will permit, that nothing I said could properly be construed as in any manner reflecting on the committee over which the gentleman from Pennsylvania presides. I was ready to vote for a clerk of any committee that would do the work, and I would know, had I heard the gentleman's statement before the committee, that if he had undertaken to do the work the House could rely upon its being done and well done.

The resolution was agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF PEONAGE.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution No. 266.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi moves to suspend the rules and pass the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Immigration Commission be requested to make an investigation into the treatment and conditions of work of immigrants on the cotton plantations of the Mississippi Delta, in the States of Mississippi and Arkansas, and upon the turpentine farms, lumber camps, and railway camps in the States of Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana, and other States; and to report them at as early a date as possible.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution as reported.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I have done——

The SPEAKER. Or the gentleman can move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution with the amendment to the original resolution, which strikes out the word "Southern."

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is no amendment to the original resolution. The resolution was recommitted to the Committee on Rules and reported back with the one word "Southern" stricken out. This is a new resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution as reported strikes out the word "Southern."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I will change my motion to suspend the rules and pass the resolution as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, there is no necessity for any long explanation in connection with this resolution. Charges have been made of the existence of a condition of peonage among immigrants in certain States of the Union, Mississippi being one of them and Florida being another. Some of these charges have taken a quasi or semi official aspect, and, while not published as official documents, have in some unexplained way obtained access to the newspapers of the country, have been translated into Italian, Swedish, and several other languages, and have done and are doing a great deal of harm to the cause of immigration into these States.

It was therefore thought well by those who had the welfare of these States at heart to have an investigation made by an impartial body which should determine whether or not such a condition of things existed. If such a condition of things does not exist, it is due to the communities where it was alleged to exist that the truth should be known. If such a condition of things does exist, it is due to everybody that that should be known. For this reason the resolution was introduced. Two resolutions were introduced, one by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] and the other by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS], and the resolution which comes from the Committee on Rules is an amalgamation of and a substitute for those two resolutions.

The other day when the resolution was reported the word "Southern" was inadvertently left in—that language occurring in one of the resolutions as originally introduced—so that it read "in other Southern States." Upon recommittal to the Committee on Rules the word "Southern" was unanimously stricken out, so that it now reads "other States." There was a well-grounded opposition to it in its first form, because it seemed to be singling out the Southern States for investigation.

I will now yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman first yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman explain to the House what interest it was that translated these reports and, as I understand, spread them over Europe?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Illinois, I will state that I am not sufficiently certain of my own opinion being well grounded to be willing to make a statement of it as a proven fact, but the allegations were used both abroad and by immigration agents in New York, so as to divert immigration from these sections of the country to other sections of the country. I have my own opinion as to what the interests were that were making use of this, but as I am not sure and can not prove it, I do not care to make the statement. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Immigration Commission I desire to say that so far as I know there is no opposition on the part of the Commission to this request from the House. We have already the authority to do this work under the existing law, and I think I ought to say, in justice to the members of the Commission who are not members of this House, that very probably we would do it in any event; but, of course, our Commission would pay especial attention to a request from this body.

While I am on my feet I want to make what is in the nature of a personal statement. In relation to this subject of peonage I possess as profound ignorance as any gentleman in this House. However, in response to an invitation from the governor of Florida, addressed to our Commission, I attended an immigration conference at Tampa, and was very kindly and courteously treated. The newspapers of that section did, however, publish some things about some remarks which I made which were inaccurate. I do not think they were intentionally inaccurate, but they quoted me as expressing an opinion in regard to peonage, something which I said in my remarks I knew absolutely nothing about, and also as expressing an opinion in relation to a lady who was an assistant United States district attorney, a lady whom I know and whom I respect. I expressed no opinion whatever, and if this investigation is asked at the hands of the Immigration Committee I want to say frankly and fairly to both sides of this House that so far as I am concerned as a member I intend that the investigation shall be fair, accurate, and so far as I can make it conclusive, no matter what we may find.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words only in explanation of the resolution which I introduced. It asked that the Immigration Commission be requested to go to the State of Mississippi and to the State of Arkansas and make an investigation to ascertain if there was a condition of peonage existing there. I included the State of Arkansas, because the gentleman who represents the particular district in which the peonage was alleged to exist wanted the investigation made, and for the further reason that although the plantation upon which the peonage is charged to exist is in the State of Arkansas it is operated and managed by citizens of Mississippi, residents of my home town.

In answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I want to make an explanation which, I think, will throw some light on his question. I will first give very briefly an outline of the history of the one Italian colony in Arkansas, on the Sunnyside plantation, which has caused so much comment in the newspapers, and which, in fact, has inspired the resolution which I have introduced. This colony was established eighteen years ago by Mr. Austin Corbin, of New York City, and an Italian nobleman, who, I believe, at the time was the mayor of the city of Rome. That colony has prospered as few colonies have ever prospered. A few years ago Mr. Alfred Holt Stone, a scholarly gentleman who has given a great deal of study to such questions and who has had large experience as a cotton planter, and who, in addition to all that, and best of all, is blessed with an abundance of the saving grace of common sense, went over to Sunnyside for the purpose of investigating this colony and made a report of his observations there to the American Economic Society, of which he is a very conspicuous member. That paper attracted a great deal of attention throughout this country, and with your permission I will read a few extracts from it.

Before reading, however, let me explain that Mr. Stone is perhaps the most profound student of the race question in this country to-day. He is invited frequently by the faculties of all the great colleges of the North to address them on this question, and is everywhere recognized as a man of the highest character and a writer and speaker of unusual ability. Having heard much of the success of the Sunnyside colony, he went over to investigate conditions there, the particular thought which inspired him being to make a comparative study of the negro and the Italian as farmers on the same plantation and under identical conditions.

The extract follows:

As the current year's business is not yet closed, I shall eliminate it also. This gives us a six-year period for a comparative exhibit of the two classes of labor, working literally side by side, their land indiscriminately allotted, each on the same tenure, each under the same conditions of soil, climate, and management. I shall confine this exhibit to the salient features of the operations. These are the number of families and hands, cotton acreage and production, and the value per hand. I shall consider only the cash commodities of cotton and seed, and shall reduce the figures to annual averages.

This gives us the following results: Average number of squads—Italians, 52; negroes, 167. Average number of working hands—Italians, 269; negroes, 433. Average number of acres per working hand—Italians, 6.2; negroes, 5.1. Average pounds of lint per hand—Italians, 2,584; negroes, 1,174. Average pounds of lint per acre—Italians, 403; negroes, 233. Average cash product value per hand (cotton and seed)—Italians, $277.36; negroes, $128.47. Average cash product value per acre—Italians, $44.77; negroes, $26.36. Thus the Italian is seen to have produced more lint per hand by 1,410 pounds, or 120.1 per cent, and to have exceeded the negro's yield per acre by 170 pounds, or 72.9 per cent. The difference in money value in favor of the Italian was $148.89 per hand, or 115.8 per cent, and $18.41 per acre, or 69.8 per cent.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. What is the gentleman reading?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I am reading from Mr. Stone's paper in the Papers of the American Society of Economics, at the meeting in Baltimore in 1905.

In another place, speaking of a squad of Italians, composed of four working hands, he says:

They had 43 acres, and made 437 pounds of lint per acre, and 3,135 pounds per hand. This squad has been on the place several years, and is reputed to have accumulated more than $15,000 in cash. It goes without saying that they owed no supply account. Their other account, rent, ginning, etc., amounted to $426.66. Their crop brought $2,172.10, leaving a net balance of $1,745.44.

Now, I wish to call your especial attention to this paragraph, remembering that this is on a plantation where we are told peonage is the system under which it is operated:

The first of these two squads illustrates what may develop into a tendency of considerable sociological importance. This is the withdrawing of their women and children from regular field labor as soon as the step is warranted by an improved economic condition. Here and there this is being done, though in no case until the stage in which their labor is necessary has been passed. It is frequently true that although women and children are included in the statement of working hands, they merely assist at intervals, according to the necessities of the crop.

It is alleged that peonage is made possible by an imprisonment for debt statute. Of course we have no such statute, but the following extract shows how utterly without foundation are all such charges, be the law what it may:

We need not multiply accounts for the mere purpose of comparison. The general results possess a meaning sufficiently significant. Of the 110 Italian squads who started to work at the beginning of the current year 44 were new arrivals. Yet of the total number 65 squads, or 59 per cent, had no supply accounts during 1905. That is to say, practically all who were on the place last year were in a condition of independence this year.

* * * * * * *

This situation may be understood when we know that back of it lies the fact that to the sixty-six Italian families in 1904 cash balances above accounts were paid in the sum of $38,764.58, an average of $587.35 per squad.

* * * * * * *

Take another illustration of what these operations have meant for the two races: There are 107 Italian squads at the end of 1905. Of these 104 own 123 head of work stock and other live stock, such as cattle, sheep, and hogs, to the total value of $23,400.

And so the story goes, Mr. Chairman, through the entire article.

Dr. Victor H. Clark, a gentleman who has frequently been employed by the United States Government to make investigations of this character, and who has visited several of the countries of Europe for that purpose, was so much impressed by the report which Mr. Stone made that he went down to investigate for himself, and he reported that he found conditions there even more favorable than Mr. Stone had represented. But there were two interests, I will say in further answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], which would be served best by an unfavorable report going out from the Sunnyside property. Those two interests were the Italian Government and the immigration agents located in the large cities of the North.

The interest which the Italian Government had was to prevent any emigration of her agricultural classes from her northern provinces. There is as much difference, as we all know, between the Italian farmer of north Italy and the south Italy fruit vendor as there is between the German and the Scandinavian of the north and the people of southern Europe generally. It was very natural that the Government of Italy should discourage the emigration of these, the best people of the Kingdom, and I have no quarrel with her on that account. I bid her God speed in her undertaking. But I do object to having my native State held up to the other countries of the world as a land of crime and slavery, to be avoided as a thing unclean.

Another interest which would be served by damning Sunnyside, and through it the entire cotton belt, is that represented by labor agents in our large cities. They have always opposed the proper distribution of immigrants throughout the country. That is her business, and, so far as I am personally concerned, They wish to keep them in the city, so that they may supply them first to this contractor and then to another, and thereby retain them as a permanent asset. Every immigrant who goes into the country and settles upon a farm is lost to them forever.

Reports began to emanate suspiciously near the Italian consulate at New Orleans charging all manner of cruelty, charging peonage to exist as a universal condition on this plantation, and the newspapers of the country took them up and sowed them to the winds. They were translated into foreign languages, circulated all over Europe, and I am advised that in the railway stations of a number of countries in Europe placards are posted in which emigrants who are contemplating going to America are warned to stay away from the State of Mississippi if they desire to keep out of slavery. I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that newspaper misrepresentation—I do not believe that newspaper criticism, or, I may say, newspaper slander—ought either to inspire or justify Congressional action.

But this case stands upon a different footing. True the newspapers have been industrious in circulating the falsehoods to which my colleague has referred. Take these headlines, for instance, which are only types of many others equally lurid and atrocious. The stories of lawlessness which thus thunder in the index have been translated into all the tongues of Europe:

White slavery Dixie's burden—Further exposé of conditions shows many immigrants are held as vassals for alleged debt—Mississippi act an aid—Law permits employer to seize "agricultural servant" in arrears; probe for Sunnyside Farm.

Complaint as to treatment of immigrants causes Austria to put Mississippi on black list—Problem for Uncle Sam—Peonage and burdensome contracts injure plans for development of Southern States.

And then an item like this, which is as false as dicers' oaths:

CAPTURED; WORK UNDER ARMED GUARD.

Men have been captured on the streets of a Mississippi city in open daylight by an armed planter, transported across the river to Arkansas, and put to work there under a guard of men armed with rifles. All of this was legal, according to local law, although it is in direct violation of the laws of the United States.

We of the South have been made the target for similar envenomed shafts for so many years. We have been traduced and misrepresented so persistently for the past few decades that we have almost grown callous. We have learned by sad experience the utter uselessness of attempting to correct these libels and the senselessness of expecting anything approaching a square deal from the great metropolitan dailies, and so we have long since learned to pass all such by with silent contempt. That course would still be followed, even under the aggravating provocation of these recent eruptions, if the sins against us had still been confined to the customary abuses of the privileges of free speech so frequently interpreted by a large part of our press as license to slander; but this is not the case. This ceased to be mere newspaper gossip. These stories are told now upon the alleged authority of an official report made to the Department of Justice by agents specially designated to investigate these conditions; and so they go forth with the added weight of the alleged indorsement of this great Government. No man who loves his State, Mr. Speaker, can sit silently by and permit such charges to go thus officially authenticated without an effort at least to refute them. No more serious charge could be brought against a State than that a system of white slavery exists in it, which is sanctioned by its laws and upheld by its courts. The charge is not the old and threadbare story that a superior race is denying equality to an inferior one, but that a system of peonage is maintained under the forms of law, and that white men are inveigled there by fraud and misrepresentations, and when they come are thrown into slavery and denied the simplest rights which the laws both of God and man guarantee.

We are warned by the overcautious to avoid and even to oppose any investigation. That would certainly be an easy course to pursue. It is along the lines of least resistance and therefore the less liable to friction. As a politician, therefore, I would embrace that suggestion with composure, but as a patriot I must reject it with contempt.

Mr. Speaker, I love the State of Mississippi. Beneath her soil all the generations of my ancestors, so far as I know aught about them, sleep the sleep that knows no waking. She has been generous to me and mine, and when this fitful dream has passed I, too, hope for eternal rest beneath her sacred sod. In my humble opinion there has never been a day in her long and eventful history when she was afraid of the truth; there was never a time when the light of God's sunshine would reveal aught in her domestic economy that would bring a blush to the cheek of her sons. And I shall not at this late day, Mr. Speaker, commissioned as I am in part to represent her here, sit silent in my seat while her good name—the most immediate jewel to the soul—is filched from her. [Applause.]

The United States Government has made an investigation of this matter, and in view of what I have stated just now, that certain interests would best be served by an unfavorable report, it is interesting to note that the agents which the Federal Government employed to make the investigation were two in number—one suggested and recommended by the Italian ambassador and the other himself an immigration agent in the city of New York.

First, the reports are sent out from sources suspiciously near the Italian consulate at New Orleans, and subsequently, at the request of the Italian ambassador, the Attorney-General of the United States undertakes an investigation and employs as the chief investigator a lady whom the Italian ambassador suggests and, in fact, nominates.

This extract from a personal letter written by Mr. Percy, one of the partners in the Sunnyside plantation, one of the most distinguished gentlemen in the South, and wholly incapable of uttering a falsehood, tells its own story better than I can tell it:

Our Government then proceeded to investigate conditions, and if it had aimed to absolutely damn and discredit the South by its investigation it would have pursued precisely the same course it did pursue. It sent out special paid attorneys, aided by a corps of interpreters, detectives, and special agents, with instructions to discover violations of the law. Each violation discovered redoubled the zeal and industry of the explorer and vindicated the wisdom of the Government in having the investigation made. The investigation was made with a brass-band accompaniment. The country was raked with a fine tooth comb for malefactors, and the discovery of each one was heralded as a triumph. Not ordinary, but extraordinary, publicity was given to each step of this investigation. Just as an illustration: The attorney investigating Sunnyside, among the thousands of Italians who have been upon it, discovered, in his judgment, one case of peonage.

The proof sustaining it was not submitted to the Federal grand jury according to the ordinary procedure, although there was not a possibility of the party accused leaving the country, but an affidavit was made before a commissioner, so that the entire country might be advised of the fact that in the opinion of the investigator a prima facie case of peonage had been discovered.

No notice was taken, no report was presented as to the condition of the thousands of Italians who had fared well throughout the South, and to whom just treatment had been accorded.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to criticise harshly or unfavorably the lady who made this investigation. I do not know whether she went beyond the terms of her employment or not. I do know, however, that she at least exceeded the scope of the authority of the Department of Justice. She did not confine herself to an investigation to ascertain whether the law had been violated or not, but she went into a full and complete investigation of the conditions of work and of labor there, a matter which properly belongs to another Department of this Government.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield five minutes additional to the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Speaker, the fact that the agent who made the investigation was a lady of high character, was honest, was high-purposed, is of itself by no means conclusive that the investigation was fair or that her report was impartial. It is immaterial whether the investigator be corrupted beforehand to bring in a certain report, or whether an agent is selected whose habits of thought, whose mental processes are known in advance to be such as will lead inevitably to a given conclusion. It is immaterial so long as the result itself is predestined. Whether Cæsar was killed by the "well beloved" Brutus or by the "envious Casca" made no difference to him; the result was equally disastrous.

Now, this good lady has spent much of her useful life in the investigation and study of the unhappy conditions of the extremely poor in the great cities of this country. Whether as a result of that study she reached her conclusion or whether the study was the result of a preformed conviction on the subject, the fact is that when she undertook this investigation she was thoroughly saturated with those ideas of the proper relations of the rich and the poor, of society to man, of the individual to society, which are the high tenets of socialism. In this mental condition she was regaled with these stories of cruelties and peonage, of oppression of the weak and friendless by the rich and the powerful on this plantation, way down in the black belt of the far away and benighted South, and she started upon her crusade with all the enthusiasm, and I might say with all the lack of wisdom and with all the misdirected zeal that characterized the knights of old in their—I was about to say senseless—but at any rate fruitless though heroic efforts to repossess the holy sepulchre. Such was the mental equipment of this "sociological expert," as my colleague has put it, when she turned her face toward Damascus, and, sad to relate, "there shined round about her no light from heaven as she journeyed and no voice spake to her to convert her."

Mr. Speaker, the men of the South have inherited the lessons of chivalry from their cavalier ancestors. Respect for women is taken into their being with their mother's milk. High-spirited, proud, quick-tempered, too prone to answer affront with a blow, a prince among men, acknowledging no superior, he stands always, hat in hand, before her imperial majesty, Woman. And so Mrs. Quackenbos tells us that she was received with marked courtesy by the owners of Sunnyside when she arrived to begin her investigations. A buggy was tendered her for her use in going about the property, which she declined. Other courtesies were likewise declined. Whatever may have been her fears, these were not attempts to gain her favor and so temper her zeal. How foolish would such an effort have been.

Was ever woman in this humor wooed?
Was ever woman in this humor won?

Her first lieutenant, who went with her as "interpreter," was a Mr. Pettek, a member of the firm of Pettek & Rossi, labor agents, New York City. He was sent on beforehand, as a sort of John the Baptist, but with instructions not to make his employment known; and so for a few days he went about the plantation talking with the tenants in such a way as to excite the suspicion of the company's agents, who began to question him about what he was doing there, and he said he was seeking employment. They believed he was a labor agent, trying to induce their tenants to leave, and they warned him to quit the plantation or he would be prosecuted as a trespasser.

He subsequently stated that he was a labor agent and produced a business card of Pettek & Rossi. He refused to go, and accordingly was arrested and carried before a justice of the peace; and he then for the first time said that he was an agent of the United States Government, sent there on business of the Department of Justice, but he failed to show his credentials. He was fined, and the case was appealed to the circuit court and is now pending. It developed afterwards that, as a matter of fact, he was a representative of the Government. Now, note how this circumstance has been used to harm that colony. Newspaper men who had been most industrious in circulating these slanders were written to by the owners of this plantation and were told that they were being misinformed. "You are doing us a great injustice; come down and make an investigation and see for yourself." They were answered by this statement: "Why, the Federal Government sent a man to make an investigation and you at once set upon him and cast him into prison," and then in more flaming headlines they warned all people not to accept employment at Sunnyside and not to go there to make any investigation, if they did not want to be put in the chain gang.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have a letter which I am going to print in the RECORD. Prof. Bushnell Hart, of Harvard University, hearing of these stories, was sent by the corporation to make an investigation. He went to Sunnyside in January and afterwards wrote a personal letter to President Roosevelt, a classmate and lifelong friend of his, which I will read. I find this letter published in the Vicksburg Herald, together with several others, in an article written by Governor X. O. Pindall, of Arkansas:

LETTER TO LEROY PERCY.

Professor Hart's letter to Mr. Percy, in part, is as follows:

"There must, of course, be more in the Quackenbos and Pettek episodes than I understand, and I have made no attempt to enter into any pending legal questions; but the frankness and straightforwardness of your employees, the visible comfort of the tenants, and the general air of thrift and good business management show that the impressions that have gone abroad through the country with regard to Sunny Side are not justified."

LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT.

Professor Hart's letter to President Roosevelt, in part, is as follows:

JANUARY 10, 1908.

Mr. PRESIDENT: The corporation has given me two months leave of absence in order to go through the cotton belt of the South and to get some personal impression of the actual conditions of the agricultural population, both white and negro. A few days ago, through the good offices of Prof. Franklin L. Riley, of the Mississippi State University, I was introduced to Mr. Percy, of Greenville, one of the owners with Mr. Crittenden of the Sunnyside plantation in Arkansas, a place which has been much in the public eye because of the investigations by Mrs. Quackenbos there, and of the charge of peonage now pending against Mr. Crittenden. Mr. Percy gave us credentials to the plantation and we spent twenty-four interesting hours.

Without entering at all into the question of the charge against Mr. Crittenden, upon which in any case I should not feel justified in expressing an opinion, I think you may be interested to hear at first hand some general conclusions that impressed themselves upon Professor Riley and myself as to the conditions of that plantation, especially with reference to the three issues of the reports of investigators sent by the Federal Government and apparently by the Italian Government, the Pettek case, and the frame of mind down there of the people on peonage.

As to the condition of the people on Sunnyside, both Italian and negroes, they are better housed and better cared for than on any plantation that I have seen or visited. There is no want among them and has been none. I visited the family which is alleged to have been reported as starving, and they had a cow, calves, hogs, provisions, and credit at the store. The water supply is the pump water, common throughout the Delta. The people throughout are well fed, and there is on the place a very intelligent and highly skilled doctor. If any report has been made that the people are badly treated by the owners of the plantation, I feel sure that it is erroneous.

As to the arrest and fining of Mr. Pettek, he may, of course, have had a purpose and an authority which he did not reveal; but I believe that Mr. Wright, the manager, the bookkeeper, Doctor Norton, and Father Galioni, the Italian priest, were all candid in the accounts which they gave and agreed with each other to the effect that Pettek behaved in a suspicious manner and absolutely declined to show any credentials other than a printed card.

As for restraint or violence on the plantation, it is on the face of it very unlikely. The plantation lies for 8 miles along the Mississippi, is easily accessible from the interior, is very near a railroad station, and people can come and go to it freely. I was allowed to examine the accounts of any tenant and did go through carefully and analyzed the account of an Italian and of a negro. Being an old accountant myself, I was interested to see that the books were well and clearly kept. There is, is course, the usual plantation system of advances, interest charges, and the like, but the impression made on my mind was that they were more than usually careful in keeping straight and comprehensive accounts. I saw where one of the Italians had carried over a credit balance of $2,600, which he was leaving with the company on interest, and the fact that more than nineteen-twentieths of the Italian families who were in the plantation's employ in 1907 have contracted again for 1908 is a proof that they are satisfied.

As a result of all this hurrah—and I do not feel justified in dignifying it beyond a hurrah—one charge of peonage was preferred against one of the partners in the Sunnyside business. An affidavit was made before a United States commissioner as though it was feared that he might flee the realm before the grand jury met. The fact was telegraphed everywhere that one of the Sunnyside planters had been indicted and sometimes it was said convicted of peonage. "A MILLIONAIRE INDICTED" was the usual headline. That, of course, made it more interesting.

When the grand jury met and heard only the Government witnesses testify they made the following report to the court:

We have examined all the witnesses that the Government has presented before us. We have investigated six cases charged with peonage. We have failed to return a single indictment of peonage on the evidence adduced by the Government alone. In our judgment the condition of peonage, or any arrest for the purpose of returning to a condition of servitude, was not shown.

We were mindful of your honor's charge, that if sitting as a petit jury we would convict on the evidence submitted sitting as a grand jury, it would be our duty to indict on such evidence. The evidence adduced was not of such character as would, in our judgment, have sustained in any instance a conviction, and, therefore, could not warrant an indictment.

When court adjourned the Assistant Attorney-General, who had been sent to Vicksburg to look after these peonage charges, in his report to the Attorney-General said:

No permanently established system of peonage of a set of laborers was proven to have been maintained on any plantation, nor was there proven any shocking systematic cruelty, though there were many arrests and some rough treatment.

Bearing in mind that his impression had been formed from the report and examinations of Mrs. Quackenbos, the concluding paragraph of his report is very significant:

More has been accomplished than I expected, knowing of inspired newspaper abuse, and Delta conditions, with regard to Italian peonage, are far milder than I expected to find.

RUSSELL.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the story briefly and imperfectly told of what I believe to be an outrage on the State of Mississippi. Sunnyside was selected because it was the best known of all the southern colonies. As Professor Hart expresses it, "It had been much in the public eye." It was the bright particular star whose glory must be dimmed, if it could not be obliterated entirely from the firmament, in order that the wicked purposes of certain interests might best be served. Other plantations were attacked with like intent but less of zeal, but in my limited time I can not go into them. I may take occasion hereafter to say something about the methods employed by the officials of the Department of Justice in their vain efforts to extort an indictment from the grand jury. The recent term of the Federal court at Vicksburg, with its strange mingling of Italian count and attorneys-general, would make a chapter unique in the history of our jurisprudence. But I am admonished that my time is about to expire.

Let me add just one word, Mr. Speaker, on the subject of foreign immigration.

We want immigration to Mississippi, but provided always it is of the right sort, and to such we will extend that protection which the law and the Constitution guarantee. But we are not immigration mad. Our children are to live after us, and we are not afraid to leave to them in some proper measure the task of developing our natural resources.

There is plenty of work for willing hands, but the world will not come to an end to-morrow. Speaking for my single self, I will say that, while I would welcome the industrious, law-loving citizens of Europe who come among us to help us uphold the law and upbuild the State, I believe no greater calamity could befall us than to take down the bars and lift the flood gates and turn the tide of unrestricted immigration toward the South. Let Italy check her emigration as she sees proper to do. I say, God prosper her in the undertaking. But I do protest with all the earnestness of my nature against the vile slanders upon the State of Mississippi which are being circulated to-day throughout the world to serve the selfish interests which are responsible for them. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, for more than a year I have been seeking to get some responsible, honest, and fair-minded body, in whose report of findings of fact the public would have confidence, to make an examination into alleged peonage conditions in the State of Florida. Conscious of the fact that the lurid accounts of "peonage," "slavery," "involuntary servitude," "brutal and inhuman treatment of laborers," and other sensational rot, which for months past have found space in a number of the infamous "yellow journals" of the country, in the columns of slimy publications which smell of the "slums" and which are miscalled "magazines," and also in some most remarkable documents emanating from the Department of Justice of the United States, were absolutely false in all essential particulars, the people of the State of Florida, through their servants at this capital, through the public press of the State, through responsible commercial bodies, through the legislature of the State, as evidenced by resolutions passed by the house of representatives, and in almost every conceivable proper way have been earnestly and constantly demanding that a fair, honest, thorough, and impartial investigation be had to the end that the truth might be laid bare and the world might be correctly informed as to the real conditions in that American Commonwealth as affecting labor.

Now that the Committee on Rules, to whom the resolutions asking this investigation were referred, has reported a resolution as a substitute for the resolution offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] and for the resolutions offered by myself providing for the investigation which our constituencies desire, I sincerely trust that this House will, by a unanimous vote, adopt the substitute resolution and thus make way for the speedy, impartial, and thorough investigation of these matters which in their practical effect have been of so much injury to the fair name of the great and good State of Florida, which I have the distinguished honor to represent in part upon the floor of this historic Chamber.

As the investigation will now, in all probability, be made, Mr. Speaker, I shall at this time refrain from a discussion of the merits of the various charges that have been given world-wide publicity, and which directly affect the honor of my State and her people, preferring to quietly wait until such time as we can have before us the result of the labors of the honorable gentlemen who will undertake this great work. My people, as noble, as honest, as truthful, as honorable, as brave, and as patriotic a people as ever breathed the liberty-laden air of this Republic, will come through the ordeal of investigation "without the smell of fire upon their garments," and, in spite of the vile batteries of slander which for the past year have been belching their infamous "slum-begotten" fabrications in the direction of the "land of flowers," Florida will, when it is all over, with smiling face and her proud escutcheon unstained, greet her sisters of the Union as proud as the proudest and with her glorious record still as pure as the lilies that adorn her bosom.

While I shall not enter the realm of discussion as to the merits of the accusations, I shall call to the attention of the House and the country a few facts, in the short time allowed me, with reference to the Department of Justice of the United States. While that Department of the Government has never been specially distinguished for the legal knowledge of the alleged lawyers who are generally supposed to be housed therein, I think I may say that usually we have had at the head of the Department something of a lawyer. I fear, Mr. Speaker, that we have "fallen upon evil times" with reference to the "big chief" of the Department of Justice.

Personally, I know very little of the present head of the Department of Justice. Whatever may be his qualifications as a lawyer, he has certainly been extremely unfortunate in the selection of some of his inferiors, and particularly with reference to those to whom he has committed these prosecutions in the State of Florida, and presumably in other States, for alleged peonage practices.

It seems that when the present head of the law department of the Government, and which ought to be the very fountain head of justice, got well into the saddle, he, instead of looking after the law business of the United States Government, began a crusade in certain States to regulate sociological conditions. It seems that in the course of his undertaking this transplanted bud of alleged French nobility became acquainted with a lady bearing the euphonious cognomen of Mrs. "Mary Grace Quackenbos," whose field of labor previous to her acquaintance with the great Baltimore lawyer was in the slums on the "East Side" of "dear old Manhattan Isle." I presume that the learned Mr. Bonaparte, the head of the Department of Justice, the highest law officer of the Government, was of the opinion that this "slum worker" from New York was a very proper and fit person to send into the State of Florida and other benighted regions of our country to regulate conditions, legal and otherwise. At any rate, Mr. Speaker, we find that one Charles W. Russell, who styles himself as "a Southern man and a Democrat," was selected by this great lawyer, and given complete charge of the investigation of alleged peonage conditions in the Southern States.

This "Southern man and a Democrat" quickly called to his aid from the "slums" of the "East Side" of "dear old Manhattan Isle" Mrs. Mary Grace Quackenbos. My God, what a combination! In normal times, Mr. Speaker, it would be an affliction upon any people to send into their midst Charles W. Russell, "a Southern man and a Democrat," and "Mary Grace Quackenbos"—in combination or separately. [Applause.]

I have not the time to fully discuss this pair as I would like to discuss them in this presence, and as I may discuss them after the investigation contemplated shall have been made. Suffice it now to say that of all the ridiculous, farcical proceedings under the forms of law the capers cut by these people in the Federal courts in Florida take the palm. As I have said, I can not at this time discuss either the merits of the case or the conduct of these people as I would like to. The time will not come when I can discuss their conduct, and particularly that of Mr. Russell, in this presence as it ought to be discussed and exposed. This presence forbids my characterizing him as he ought to be characterized, as he deserves to be designated, and as I would designate him if I could do so without offending the proprieties of this presence. The parliamentary rules which govern this great body prohibit my characterizing this man, who styles himself as "a Southern man and a Democrat," as he deserves to be characterized and as I ought to characterize him. "It is a dirty bird that fouls its own nest," and this man says he is "a Southern man and a Democrat."

At this time I shall content myself, so far as he is concerned, with calling attention to a report which he made to his chief on February 14, 1907. This report has never been published, to my knowledge, and it certainly has never come to the knowledge of any of the Florida delegation in Congress until a few days ago, when he filed it with the Committee on Rules. In this report which this man made to his chief he writes himself down as absolutely unworthy to be intrusted with a high place, where the honor, the integrity, or the liberty of the citizen is involved. In this report, which I have not the time to read, he makes statements relative to the people of Florida which I unhesitatingly denounce as absolutely, and I believe willfully, untrue. Instead of this alleged report being what it ought to have been—a simple statement of fact and such views as he might have of the law—it is written in "dime-novel" style, of course with Russell figuring conspicuously as the hero of the story, and is entirely unworthy of a place in the files of any Government Department. He goes out of his way to attack me, and places words in my mouth in a manner in which they were not used. So far as the attack of this man upon me is concerned, if I were somewhere else, where the rules would permit, I would not hesitate to denounce his statement in language about the meaning of which there could be no mistake. I will simply say here that his statement with reference to me and my motives, made to his chief in a report which appears to have been zealously guarded for a year, is a base fabrication cut out of the whole cloth.

Again, he intimates in this secret report that while he was in Jacksonville looking after these alleged violations of law, the district attorney was absent, pretending to be sick. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the district attorney for that district is the Hon. John M. Cheney, a Republican, appointed by the present occupant of the White House. John M. Cheney is a lawyer of recognized ability in the State of Florida, a man of high character, in whom the people, without regard to party, have confidence. At the time this man speaks of, Mr. Cheney was dangerously ill at his home in Orlando, and for weeks it was daily expected by his friends to see a notice of his death in the newspapers. Mr. Russell, when he penned his vile insinuation relative to Mr. Cheney, either knew this fact or could easily have ascertained it. If he knew the fact and made the insinuation that Cheney was shirking his duty, let honorable men judge of his character. If he did not know the fact, but could have ascertained the truth, and made no inquiry, but thus recklessly reflected upon the character of Mr. Cheney, again I say, let honorable men judge of his (Russell's) character.

While in Jacksonville, Mr. Russell and his assistant, Mrs. Quackenbos, who, I understand, is now and has been for some time past a special assistant attorney-general of the United States, had entire charge of these alleged cases of peonage. They tried at least two alleged peonage cases in the Federal court at Jacksonville. Mr. O'Hara, a gentleman of high standing and character in that city, and I do not hesitate to say in this presence that notwithstanding his indictment for peonage he is a gentleman, the latchet of whose shoes this assistant attorney-general is not worthy to loosen. He tried O'Hara upon two indictments in the Federal court. The first trial took some two or three weeks, and O'Hara was acquitted by a jury of his country. Immediately, or within a few days, O'Hara was put upon trial in the Federal court by Russell and Quackenbos upon a second indictment, and after two or three weeks of another trial, before another and a different jury, another verdict of not guilty was promptly returned. This man Russell, in his secret report to the "big chief," in attempting to explain his failure to convict O'Hara, inveighs against the community, indulges in insinuations against the jurors, and makes the basest of attacks, by inuendo and insinuation, upon the character of all our people in that community. In this manner in that report he makes an attack upon Mr. Charles B. Rogers, who happened to be on the first jury that tried O'Hara, and, I believe, the foreman. Mr. Rogers is at the head of one of the largest business institutions in the State of Florida. His name is known and honored in the financial centers of this country. By his own efforts, from a poor, friendless orphan, his father having given his life to the "lost cause," he has risen to a proud eminence in the commercial world, and his word is as good as the bond of any man anywhere. No man who has the honor of the acquaintance of Charles B. Rogers would believe him guilty of a dishonorable act, such as the violation of his oath as a juror, if ten thousand Russells and Quackenboses should make affidavit thereto. In addition to his attack upon Mr. Rogers, he attacks the newspapers of the State; he attacks particularly the East Coast Railroad of Florida and its owner, Mr. Flagler. In fact, this man in his reckless desire to earn office in a Republican Administration, he being "a southern man and a Democrat," attacks everybody and anybody in this secret report, if such attack may tend to bring a smile of approval to the countenance of our alleged product of transplanted royalty.

I want to say that the court in which the O'Hara cases were tried was presided over by Judge James W. Locke, a northern man. If the jurors had so flagrantly violated their oaths in the acquittal of O'Hara as this man intimates in his secret report, Judge Locke, as an honorable judge, would not only have discharged them from that case, but would have discharged them from the term of court.

Having had the pleasure to be closely associated with Judge Locke for some years, I can truthfully say that I know him well. I want to say in this presence and to all the world that there is no man from Maine to the Philippine Islands, wherever the Stars and Stripes float, who is more beloved, more respected, and more honored by the people among whom he lives and where his judicial labors are performed than is Judge James W. Locke. No man in all this Union wears the ermine with more of honor and of credit than does he. No man need fear injustice in his court. But take this defendant, O'Hara: Mr. O'Hara is not a rich man, yet he was forced to expend thousands of dollars in defending himself from charges which two successive juries, composed of intelligent, honorable men, after long and patient investigations, and under their oaths, declared to be groundless. This man has no redress. These people have used the machinery of the courts to almost ruin him financially, and, although entirely innocent, he is perfectly helpless, and must simply "pocket his losses." Gentlemen must agree with me that it is an awful condition of affairs when the unoffending citizen can be dragged from his labors at the behest of people like Russell and Mrs. Quackenbos, be subjected to the ignominy of indictment and trial, at enormous expense of both time and money, on groundless charges, and upon acquittal find himself helpless in the matter of redress.

But bad as was the treatment of O'Hara, he could vindicate himself before a jury of his peers, and did do so. If an indictment were preferred in a court against all of the people of Florida we would not be asking for this investigation, because a forum would be furnished in which we could seek vindication. But as this can not be done, and as these people have preferred an indictment against us before the "bar of public opinion," we plead "not guilty" and demand a trial before the only tribunal open to us—a body of honorable men charged with the duty and empowered with the authority to seek the truth.

I am appealing to my colleagues, and I know I voice the wish of the entire Florida delegation in both branches of the Congress, to give our people the opportunity to meet, before an impartial and honest body of investigators, the maligners of the fair name of Florida, and there, face to face, let "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," be fully developed. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I now yield the remaining two minutes of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, from certain matters which have come within the range of my own observation I am convinced that, originating I know not where, there is an organized effort to prevent immigrants from moving into or staying in certain Southern States, particularly Louisiana and Mississsippi. A prominent contractor who had built hundreds of miles of railroad in Pennsylvania, himself an Italian, a very reputable and responsible man, obtained the contract for building a railroad in Mississippi and Louisiana. He went himself upon the ground and reported that he found it particularly adapted to settlement by his fellow-countrymen, both as to climate and soil conditions. He said he would take them there and was satisfied that they would never come away; that they would find it such a desirable locality in which to build their homes that they would remain there. He took 300 or 400 of them down there and at first they were delighted; but they had not been there ten days before there were emissaries among them spreading all manner of reports as to labor conditions in which they were likely to find themselves involved, and it was not thirty days——

Mr. WILLIAMS. And they threatened them with yellow fever, too.

Mr. OLMSTED. Yellow fever and cholera and all sorts of diseases. Another Pennsylvanian engaged there in the lumber works found that whenever he engaged an Italian there was the same influence at work to get him out of that country. Now, I know nothing of any condition of peonage there among immigrants; I doubt if it will be found to exist; but I do believe that in view of conditions that do exist having a tendency to prevent immigrants from settling in those States, an investigation ought to be had, and I hope that the resolution will pass.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I do not care particularly about this resolution in its present form. I objected to it last week principally because it had the word "southern" in it. I am opposed to any investigation that, on its face, in terms, is professedly and admittedly sectional.

I was delighted this morning to hear the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] explain, for himself and the Committee on Rules, that the word "southern" was inadvertently put into the resolution. I am glad to know that it is now withdrawn, and that the proposition is now in its present form. But, Mr. Speaker, this resolution is entirely unnecessary. Under the provisions of the act of February 20, 1907, the Immigration Commission has now full authority of law to investigate immigration conditions all over this country, and this request from one House to the Commission established by both Houses of Congress is entirely unnecessary. They already have the authority under the provisions of this act of 1907 to make this investigation, and they are already engaged in the work.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that when the Immigration Commission is operating under the law passed by both Houses of Congress and approved by the President, it is entirely unnecessary and wholly undignified for this House to request of the Commission something that it can already do under existing law; something that it is directed to do, as I understand it, by the act of February 20, 1907. Therefore, without caring particularly about the result of this motion to suspend the rules and pass the resolution, I do say that it is an entirely undignified proceeding, and that there is no necessity whatever for the passage of the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. I want to suggest to the gentleman—I do not know what it is worth, and I have no particular objection to the resolution as it now stands—but I want to suggest to him and to the House, that notwithstanding the word "Southern" has been stricken out, yet the definition of the industries here leave it so that it is confined entirely to the Southern States.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think so, and I want to say that another reason why I object is because I know, that so far as the State that I represent in part on this floor is concerned, we feel that we need neither certificate of character nor bill of health from this Industrial Commission.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the resolution as amended.

The question was taken, and, on a division (demanded by Mr. HARDWICK), there were—yeas 163, nays 35.

So two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That authority be, and hereby is, granted to the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department to have such printing and binding done as may be deemed necessary in the transaction of its business.

The resolution was agreed to.

AMENDING IMMIGRATION LAW RELATING TO DEPORTATION OF ALIENS.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 13079) to amend section 21 of the immigration law.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 21 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved February 20, 1907, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Provided further, That any alien who is now under sentence because of conviction in this country of a felony, or who may be hereafter convicted of a felony, shall, at the expiration of his sentence, be taken into custody and returned to the country whence he came in the manner provided by section 20 of this act."

SEC. 2. That section 21 of the said act, as so amended, is hereby reenacted.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman for some explanation.

Mr. MANN. I demand a second.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to twenty minutes.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides that an alien now under conviction and sentence because of a felony committed in this country and any alien who is hereafter convicted and sentenced for a felony shall, at the expiration of that sentence, be taken into custody, as provided in other sections as to the machinery, and deported to the country from whence he came. The reason for it is brief.

In my judgment we have room in this country for every desirable immigrant, but when the immigrant accepts our hospitality and abuses it by committing felonies, he ought at the expiration of his term to go back to the country whence he came. My idea is that the bill, if enacted, will not only deport from our country a number of criminals that we can well afford to lose, but it will deter aliens from committing crimes in this country.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I yield.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from New York if this bill, if it became a law, would deport an alien who had declared his intention to become a citizen, and who subsequently committed a crime?

Mr. BENNET of New York. It would.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Does the gentleman mean a crime or a felony? Does the gentleman make any distinction between a crime and a felony?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes; this only applies to men who commit felonies.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I suppose that applies to all cases where either men or women are convicted of felonies in the courts of the several States.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Are the laws uniform in all the States so as to determine what is a felony?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, they are not, any more than they are uniform abroad, but we already provide that the man who abroad has been convicted of a felony, although the laws there may differ, shall be barred out, and I see no reason why he should attempt to enter into a distinction between the laws of the various States. They are not very important. Felony is a crime of a high grade and a misdemeanor is a crime of a lower grade.

Mr. DRISCOLL. In other words, this law can not be applied and enforced uniformly all over this country, because of the fact that the laws determining what felonies are are not uniform in the several States.

Mr. BENNET of New York. It can be enforced uniformly, because it will be enforced against any man in any State under the interpretation that that State itself has placed on the word "felony."

Mr. DRISCOLL. For instance, one State may call a certain act a felony, which another State may call only a misdemeanor.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Exactly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. And therefore, of course, the application of this law imposing a punishment under it—because it is a punishment to deport a man—can not be uniform.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The reasons for deportations will, as my colleague says, differ in the different States, truly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. The idea and principle contained in this bill are sound and right. This is the land of promise and opportunity, of freedom and equality before the law. But it is not a land for lawlessness or license. Foreigners should understand they must behave themselves and obey the law. American citizenship is a great privilege and should be more fully appreciated than it is by some. But this bill should be amended in some respects. It should be uniform in its application to all immigrants in whatever State they may be when they are convicted of the crimes for which they are deported. Does not the gentleman think so?

Mr. BENNET of New York. My answer to that is that when a State has enacted that a certain act within its borders is a felony, the Government of the United States ought to respect the act of that State to the extent of deporting a criminal who comes within that law.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, just one other question, in line with the question I formerly asked the gentleman. It is this: Does or does not an alien acquire some rights, or a legal status, by reason of his declaration of intention to become a citizen?

Mr. BENNET of New York. He acquires just this much, that on application to the State Department he can receive a passport to go back to any country except his own. He can, in the State of Indiana and, I believe, four other States, vote after six months' residence, and he can, in any State where there is public land, file a homestead entry.

Mr. SULZER. And he can take up mining claims.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does he not renounce his allegiance to his former foreign sovereign, so that he has no nation?

Mr. SULZER. There is no question about that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. He renounces his allegiance to his former sovereign, so that he is a man without a country. Where would you send him then?

Mr. BENNET of New York. We would send him back to the country whence he came.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then the gentleman would make a penal colony out of a foreign country?

Mr. BURLESON. Who is to pay the cost of the deportation?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The immigrant fund.

Mr. MADDEN. In the declaration which the immigrant makes of his intent to become a citizen does not he swear allegiance to this country?

Mr. BENNET of New York. He does not.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, does not he renounce allegiance to his country?

Mr. BENNET of New York. He renounces allegiance to his own country and gives notice that some time in the future, after he has been here five years, he will take the oath of allegiance to our country.

Mr. MADDEN. To what country does he belong when he makes that declaration?

Mr. BENNET of New York. That question has troubled our State Department and the chancelleries of Europe for some time and it depends largely upon the laws of the different countries.

Mr. MADDEN. In the face of that condition then what would you consider him, an alien?

Mr. BENNET of New York. An alien.

Mr. MADDEN. Just how does he get the rights you describe in the various States?

Mr. BENNET of New York. They are given to him by our laws and State laws.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. They are not right; they are privileges.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman from West Virginia very properly calls my attention to the fact that they are not rights; that they are privileges.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, just another question, and it is this: Suppose an alien came to this country, declares his intention to become a citizen, marries an American woman, has a number of children, and after he has been here four years, we will say, or four years and a half, he commits a felony and is sent to prison and at the expiration of his term he is deported. Now, what is to become of his children and what is to become of his wife? Where do they go, and what is to become of them?

Mr. BENNET of New York. What became of them the time he was in jail?

Mr. SULZER. They would stay here, of course.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Then, they would stay here after he got out.

Mr. SULZER. Who is to support them after he is deported?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The same people who are supporting them when he came out of jail; when as a criminal he commits some other criminal act, as 90 per cent of the criminals do who come——

Mr. SULZER. Then, you intend to separate these families forever. In my opinion this bill presents several very serious aspects, to say nothing about its doubtful constitutionality.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I do not; he does. He does it by his act.

Mr. SULZER. No; it is to be done by this law.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. May I ask the gentleman a question? Suppose this felony committed by an alien was a murder and under the statute he was to be hung?

Mr. BENNET of New York. At the expiration of his term, if the warrant could get him, he would be sent back.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then your resolution ought to be amended to provide for cases in which the death penalty is to be inflicted.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I have thought that out very thoroughly, and I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin it does not seem worth while to make the exception, because if some party goes where the warrant could not operate because he would not be there——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one more question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What provision of law is there to-day for the deportation of a convict coming here from a foreign country who is pardoned in that country upon the condition that he leave it?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Any criminal who comes to this country, if he gets through our barriers in the first instance, can be deported at any time within three years and sent back to the country from whence he comes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit me to state an instance which came under my observation in the city of Chicago? A number of years ago I went to call on a friend, a former classmate, who was engaged in a criminal trial in the city of Chicago. The defendant, Frank Mulkowski, a swarthy fellow about 40 years of age, was on the witness stand when I entered the court room. He was charged with killing and robbing a woman by the name of Agnes Klietziek, in whose home he boarded. The prosecution had a record from Europe showing that when he was 18 years of age across the water he had killed a man for the purpose of robbery, for which crime he had received a life sentence. After serving twenty years or more he had been pardoned on condition that he leave that country. On leaving prison he came to the United States and after being here only about six months had killed this woman for purpose of robbery. For this murder he was hung. In his case there must have been something exceedingly lax in the administration of our immigration laws.

Mr. BENNET of New York. If I had the time I could explain four different ways in which they might get into this country without reflecting in any degree upon our administration on our shores. But I want to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] and to the House that this is one of the objects of this bill, so that the criminals abroad will not have, as I find that some of them do have, as I am told by chiefs of police in foreign countries they do have, the idea that this is an asylum of refuge for criminals. It is not and ought not to be, and if you pass this law it will deter the criminal class from coming. As everybody in this House knows, I am in favor of sound, decent, able-bodied, and moral immigrants coming, and one of the best ways to protect them here and in coming is to provide that the criminal and vicious shall be both barred.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. As I heard the reading of this act it provides only for felonies?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. The crimes act in my State, as I remember it, makes no practical recognition of felony in terms. It classifies crimes as misdemeanors and high misdemeanors. I want to say that I believe my community would be very much benefited by the passage of this law, and I would not want my community to be barred from taking advantage of the provisions of the act by reason of the fact that it was not concisely and properly stated.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will say to the gentleman, if his recollection is correct and the bill passes this House, I will be very glad to go with him to the Senate committee and see that we put his criminals in the bill.

Mr. SULZER. Suppose a governor should pardon a man.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Then the law would not act on him.

Mr. SULZER. He would be restored to all his rights, and hence could not be sent back.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. SULZER. There is nothing in your bill to that effect, however.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The pardon wipes out the conviction. This law only acts at the expiration of his sentence. Similarly it would not act on a man on whom sentence was suspended.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has occupied fourteen minutes, and he has six minutes remaining.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think there is considerable doubt about the desirability of this legislation. Let us take one or two cases, for instance. Many of the States have the parole system. Under the operation of this bill any man who, in the heat of passion or under stress of circumstances, may have committed some crime for which he is sentenced to the penitentiary, comes out on parole, endeavors to be a good citizen, and his sentence has not yet expired. Perhaps he marries; perhaps he does not know this law. I have even seen Members of Congress who did not know all the laws. He may have children; but at the end of his term of service—without trial, without investigation so far as his rights are concerned—he is seized by the officers of the law and taken into a foreign country. Take the particular case and present it to this House and there is not a man here who would vote to deport such a person.

Now, this bill is not designed to prevent criminals coming to this country. It is designed to add punishment after the sentence of the law has been complied with. I have always been taught to believe that when a man has paid the penalty provided by the law for his crime that, so far as the State was concerned, he stood on an even footing. Here is a proposition to add an additional penalty—not merely take away that which the law takes away from you or me or other citizens, but to add to his penalty. In other words, to make a crime committed by an alien subject to greater penalties than a crime committed by a citizen.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does not the gentleman think that the courts would be apt to consider the fact that he would be deported after the expiration of his imprisonment in imposing a sentence, and does not the gentleman think really that some courts might make it very short in order to get rid of him? I do not know but it might be as well to make the sentence very short and avoid the expense.

Mr. MANN. It may be, for aught I know, that in the State of New York the judges consider these matters in giving sentences.

Mr. DRISCOLL. They consider all things and all matters.

Mr. MANN. And it so happens in a majority of the States that the judges do not determine the sentence in felony cases. It is left to the jury in most cases, and the jury would have no knowledge in reference to this law——

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MANN (continuing). It would be error to instruct the jury under such a law as this—plainly and clearly error. Now I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLMSTED. This resolution provides that at the expiration of his sentence he shall be returned. Now, in Pennsylvania we have a custom of allowing a certain commutation for good behavior in prison, so that a man sentenced for four years might get out three months short of that time. Is the gentleman sure, and can anybody be sure, that under this bill as it now reads, he could be deported under these circumstances?

Mr. MANN. I do not know; no one can answer any question with authority on law. So far as the terms of this resolution provides, it would take the opinion of a court, and a man who had been hanged could be taken back from the country from which he came. Whether that would be executed I suppose would depend upon the diligence and desire of the Commissioner of Immigration, because all officers do not obey the letter of the law, in spite of what it says. I have seen no demand for the passage of a law like this and no reason given for it. We have just passed the immigration act. The immigration and naturalization act has just gone into effect. Why, now, should we be endeavoring to add more penalties before the law we have recently enacted has well gone into effect?

I know the horror that men have of having criminals brought to the country. Why, two-thirds—sometimes three-fourths—of the crimes committed in the country are not committed by habitual criminals at all. Nor do I think we ought to take the right to say that we will permit a man to come here, accept his renunciation of allegiance to a foreign potentate, grant to him the homestead privilege and other privileges, that we permit him to marry, permit him to have children in the country, and permit him to be taken away as an additional penalty for a crime he may have committed, at the expense not of himself alone, but at the expense also of those who are dependent on him.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I would like to ask if it is not often the case that where a man is convicted of a felony, after he has been confined some time, the governor grants him a pardon? In these cases under this bill would not that man be deported?

Mr. MANN. I suppose that he would be deported, whether pardoned or not; I do not know, and nobody knows. Now I yield to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] would have this House believe that this bill applies to criminals whom, as he says, we can well afford to lose. He would also have it understood that felony signifies a crime of high degree, and he would impress us to the effect that this bill intends only the deportation of persons guilty of high crimes. If this were true, I should not object to the passage of this bill. But had the gentleman taken my advice and accepted the amendment which I suggested to him, namely, that the provision of this bill should apply only to such crimes as are made felonies by the United States Statutes, or clearly set out the crimes, causes, and conditions for and under which such alien shall be deported, then the bill should have my unqualified support, for I approve and acquiesce in its underlying principle.

On the face there is nothing alarming about this bill, for the language employed is perfectly simple. Yet, notwithstanding its guileless phraseology, it comes dangerously near being a "wolf in sheep's clothing," because its terms are misleading.

In order that I may not be misunderstood, I want to impress upon you from the very outset that I am unalterably opposed to any crime or offense, and I hold that all malefactors, transgressors, and violators of law, whether rich or poor, high or low, should have such lawful punishment meted out to them as is commensurate with their evil doings. I am proud to be able to point to my record of twelve years on the bench in one of the busiest, most trying, and most cosmopolitan courts in the world in proof of my assertion. Much, however, as I am opposed to disobedience to and disregard of the precepts of society—the law—I am equally opposed to any and all unjust and unfair laws, and to cruel, inhuman, and barbarous penalties. Far be it from me to set myself in opposition to any law conducive to the betterment of conditions or to the preservation of the safety of the people of the United States. Just as far be it from me to be silent when I apprehend that that safety is endangered by ill-advised legislation. The interests of our country and the welfare of our people are as near and dear to my heart as to that of any Member of this House. [Applause.]

Now, I do not question in the least the sincerity and honesty of purpose of the gentleman from New York who introduced and who is now urging the passage of this bill. I firmly believe that he failed to realize the far-reaching effect its passage would have and the awful cruelties and injustice it would work. For fear that you may not have grasped the importance and ultimate effect of this bill I shall read it to you:

A bill to amend section 21 of the immigration law.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 21 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved February 20, 1907, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Provided further, That any alien who is now under sentence because of conviction in this country of a felony, or who may be hereafter convicted of a felony, shall, at the expiration of his sentence, be taken into custody and returned to the country whence he came in the manner provided by section 20 of this act."

SEC. 2. That section 21 of the said act, as so amended, is hereby reenacted.

Now, what is a felony? Bishop and other authorities say that felonies in this country are generally held to be offenses or crimes punishable by death or imprisonment in the penitentiary. The greatest authorities on criminal jurisprudence say that a felony is so generally associated with the idea of capital punishment that it is hard to separate the two. The distinction between felonies and misdemeanors corresponds roughly to that between grave offenses and such as are less heinous in character. In most of the States the distinction between felony and misdemeanor has been abolished by statutory enactment, an example likely to be followed more widely in the near future. To this question I now invite your special attention.

Felony, as will have been noticed, has been universally accepted as, and construed to mean, a grave, infamous, and atrocious crime punishable by death. But at the present time nearly every offense punishable with imprisonment in the State prison or penitentiary is a felony. In nearly all the States imprisonment in the penitentiary has been made the penalty for almost all misdemeanors, thereby transforming them into felonies. No one will deny the fact that many felonies of to-day were looked upon as minor offenses only in former times, in times known to us as days of barbarism, when corporal torture was a favorite punishment. In some of our States the stealing of a lamb, a chicken, a chunk of coal, a loaf of bread, or anything, no matter how insignificant, the selling of liquor, playing cards, or wagering on a horse race are made felonies.

Have you considered the cruelty of the punishment which this bill, if passed, would inflict upon an unfortunate alien who may be guilty of some minor offense for which the statutory penalty would be imprisonment in the penitentiary? Have you considered the case of an alien, perhaps a sober, industrious working man, stricken down by some illness long drawn out? His savings from his hard-earned wages have become exhausted, his credit cut off; misery knocks at his door; there is no way to provide for the dire necessities of his family which thus finds itself on the verge of starvation. Perhaps he makes use of money intrusted to him or, let us call it by the uglier name of stealing, yet honestly intending to replace the money he has taken as soon as he is able to earn it. He is detected, called upon to make restitution, and is unable to do so. He is guilty of embezzlement, perhaps of grand larceny; both felonies in every State. To such a man scant mercy is shown in a court of justice; the very fact that he is an alien is a circumstance that weighs against him. He is convicted, sentenced, sent to prison. The family is fatherless and without a provider. In the midst of all the trials and tribulations to which it is subjected it struggles along bravely, hoping for the day that the husband and father will return and take from them the burden they now carry when the prison doors shall have opened for him. Eagerly, anxiously, impatiently do they bide this time. At last the day comes when the term of his imprisonment has expired; the day to which he and his loved ones have looked forward for the reunion after months, perhaps years, of separation. Behold, the law steps in and, horribile dictu, tells him that he is a felon, that he must be deported, that the law will tear him away from wife and children, leaving them to the mercies of a rude world. Can you imagine the heartrending scene which then ensues? The state erects a barrier between him and those nearest and dearest to him. What is to become of them? Friendless, the wife and children of a felon—a felon by the force of our unfair and unequal law, shunned by neighbors, unable to obtain work wherewith to earn a living, destitution staring them in the face. Who will provide for them? Who will so shape their affairs for them that the children may have the advantage of an education and grow up to become good citizens?

We cry out against pauperism. We bring to bear all the ingenuity of philanthropy to lessen its evils and to deplete its army. Yet, in the instance I have cited, we make paupers of a family and surrender them without regard or compassion to all the misery that waits upon the condition of such as they. Truly, we make the innocent suffer for the guilty. Our laws provide against the abandonment of the wife by the husband, against the abandonment of the children by their father, against the failure on the part of the man to support those whom he has sworn to support. Yet, if this bill is passed, we bring about the very things which ordinarily we forbid. Think you that laws are just, that laws are righteous and fair which would so severely punish a man by imprisonment and subsequent deportation because he has stolen, perhaps, something of small value, the while we allow to go unpunished men who are guilty of stealing millions of the savings of the people, thereby causing unspeakable suffering and hardship. [Applause.] I do not mean that where an alien commits an illegal act the fact that he is an alien should condone or mitigate such illegal act. I believe that all aliens to whom we extend the advantages of civic liberty should conform with the legal as well as moral obligations which we as citizens owe our country.

In a recent speech before the New York State Bar Association, having for his subject "Centralization by Construction and Interpretation of the Constitution," Judge J. M. Dickinson is quoted as having branded Congress, both the House and Senate, with ignorance and charged them with disregard of the constitutionality of bills brought before their august body for consideration and execution. He is said to have pointed out that it was the tendency on the part of men in both Houses to yield to the popular clamor and vote for bills which on their face were of doubtful constitutionality. I for one shall not go on record as being in favor of an unconstitutional bill, and I trust that none of you gentlemen will. Our Constitution is the foundation of our laws, and it must be upheld in any and all events. If there is a bill which appears to me to be unconstitutional, I feel it my duty to point it out and insist upon it being made constitutional, if possible.

And the mere fact that a bill may be a popular one, tending to appease the temporary clamor of some people, will not in any way influence me in the least if I believe that the same is unfair, unjust, or unconstitutional.

I am quite satisfied that this bill, besides being essentially cruel in its effects, is also clearly unconstitutional. It conflicts with section 9 of Article I of the Constitution, which provides that "no bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed." The bill provides that "any alien who is now under sentence because of conviction of a felony shall at the expiration of his sentence be taken into custody and returned to the country whence he came." Bishop, in his work on Criminal Law, says:

> An ex post facto law may, with reasonable precision, be defined to be one making punishable what was innocent when done, or subjecting the doer to a heavier penalty or burden than was then provided.

The bill is also in contravention of Article VIII, which provides that "excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted." Surely the deportation and separation forever from those nearest and dearest to him of a person for any minor offense which we constitute or call a felony is so cruel and unusual a punishment as to come clearly within the purview of this article of the Federal Constitution.

The bill is further in contravention of Article XIV, section 1, which provides as follows:

> All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

In so far as this section deals with the rights and privileges of citizens of the United States, it does not of course apply to the case under consideration. But it is to be noted that the section makes a distinction as to citizens of the United States and "persons" within the jurisdiction of the United States. To such "persons" this section of the Constitution guarantees "the equal protection of the laws." Equal with what, or with whom? Evidently the protection of the law is to be vouchsafed equally to citizens and to "persons" not citizens of the United States. Now, sir, this bill, I submit, is clearly in violation of the terms of the section I have just quoted, in that it does discriminate against "persons" not citizens but within the jurisdiction of the United States. It fails to accord to these "persons" the equal protection of the laws, or, more correctly stated, it deprives them of the same. A citizen of the United States, having suffered imprisonment for a given offense, could not be deported; a "person," not a citizen of the United States, having suffered such imprisonment should not be subjected to further punishment without due process of law. This bill, if passed, would cause that to be done, and would thus be in violation of Article V of the amendments to the Constitution, which provides that no "person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; * * * nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." I am thus careful, Mr. Speaker, to quote these provisions of the Constitution in order that I may warn the House not to commit itself to a measure which would violate it in more particulars than one, and which, I firmly believe, would not stand the tests of the courts. There is another aspect of this case which it occurs to me to urge upon the consideration of this House, and that is that most of our treaties with foreign powers provide "that the citizens of either country shall in all cases enjoy the same security and protection as the natives of the country in which they reside, on condition that they submit to the laws, decrees, and ordinances there prevailing." I invite attention to the fact that an alien who for some offense may have undergone a term of imprisonment in the United States, may upon termination of such imprisonment have the best intention to submit to the laws, decrees, and ordinances prevailing in the United States, and having by his imprisonment satisfied the law of the land for the offense which he committed, he is entitled, in accordance with the treaty provisions I have quoted, to the same security and protection as the natives of the country. Again, Mr. Speaker, I desire to emphasize the fact that I have no sympathy with violators of law, no matter whence they hail or what may be the nature of their offense, but I must confess that my sense of justice will not permit me to stand by idly and see an injustice perpetrated where justice only should be done.

In this connection permit me to read an excerpt from a speech delivered by the Hon. William H. Taft, Secretary of War, and prospective candidate for President, at the annual dinner of the Brooklyn Bar Association, at the Union League Club in Brooklyn, last Saturday. He said: "Certainly Congress ought to take some steps directly authorizing the Executive to use the forces at his command to protect the treaty rights of such aliens, and ought to vest the courts of the United States with power to punish the person who would violate such alien rights." But he should not have stopped there; he should also have said that the Congress should insist upon the enforcement by the Secretary of State of our treaties with those foreign countries which are violating those treaties by refusing to honor the passports of the United States, as the "Goldfogle resolution," passed in the Fifty-eighth Congress, requested and instructed him to do. [Applause.]

Let us pass for the moment from the contemplation of the unconstitutional features of this bill, and view it from the wholly humanitarian and rational standpoint. A law which contemplates vengeance is void ab initio, because the very reason and purpose of inflicting punishment for the transgression of the law is to instill respect for it and to prevent a repetition of the offense. Its further object and purpose is to reform and uplift the offender morally and to aid him to become a useful member of society. Its object is not to cast him into gloom and misery; nor to exhibit him as an object of scorn, or as a leper in a healthy community, despised by all, and finally compel him to go to his grave with the indelible brand of shame and degradation. On the contrary, sir, the object of all law, especially criminal law, is not only to inflict punishment, not only to protect society against the evil-doer, but its highest and noblest purpose is to restore the transgressor to normal conditions of right-doing and to open up again to him the honorable paths of an honorable life. [Applause.] Let our love for liberty and humane treatment guide us aright and away from the course of blind and indiscriminate severity. Let our judgment be tempered with mercy. [Applause.] Let us remember that—

The greatest attribute of heaven is mercy;
And 'tis the crown of justice and the glory.

Mr. Speaker, I take it that the people of the United States can, through their Government, suppress crime, so far as crime can be suppressed, and can punish it so far as it ought to be punished without incurring the danger of going beyond the lines of demarcation between the vengeance of the law and revenge. Because of the misdeeds of some aliens who thereby proclaim themselves almost outcasts from society, we should not seek to encompass retribution by the enactment of laws that bear with equal severity upon the totally depraved and those who for a moment only have strayed from the straight and narrow path of right. We should not place ourselves in the same position with a country where brute power is the law of the land. A country that is governed by moral lepers and physical cowards, the soldiery of which is utterly destitute of human feeling and wholly without mercy; where justice and honesty are unknown and bribery reigns; where the natural rights of humanity are totally disregarded. A country that encourages, yes, instigates savage massacres, where mothers and daughters are subjected to criminal outrages of the beastly Cossacks; where innocent babes are torn from the breasts of helpless and defenseless mothers and slaughtered; where children are deprived of their inalienable right to self-improvement and knowledge; where the suppression of education is of great use to the autocracy—ignorance being the best safeguard of loyalty. A country of insecurity, perpetual inconstancy, and inequality, where the most deplorable venality reigns. A country which imprisons men and women in dungeons, there to rot and never to be heard from again, or whence they are deported, banished, and exiled to the horrors of hellish Siberia, because they are pleading for personal rights, liberty, and humanity.

Be it to the indelible and everlasting shame of Russia, where these atrocities are committed and it is that Government which is responsible for the growth and breeding of anarchy.

I have no compassion or charity for the doctrine of anarchism, nor for its followers, nor for criminals, whether they be aliens or citizens of the United States; they should be dealt with sternly and promptly.

But, Mr. Speaker, let us not, while seeking to do justice to society in general, do that which in the last analysis is unjust. Because an alien may have committed a minor offense which for the time being has subjected him to punishment, let us not for that reason only put him in the same class with those other aliens the sole object and purpose of whose being is to do evil, who would overturn the very foundations of society and bring chaos where order now reigns; and against the latter our laws give us ample protection. The act to regulate immigration passed by the last Congress contains, among others, the following provisions:

SEC. 2. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons, and persons who have been insane within five years previous; persons who have had two or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; paupers; persons likely to become a public charge; professional beggars; persons afflicted with tuberculosis or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease; persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living; persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; polygamists, or persons who admit their belief in the practice of polygamy, anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all government, or of all forms of law, or the assassination of public officials; prostitutes, or women or girls coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose.

SEC. 19. That all aliens brought to this country in violation of law shall, if practicable, be immediately sent back to the country whence they respectively came on the vessels bringing them. The cost of their maintenance while on land, as well as the expense of the return of such aliens, shall be borne by the owner or owners of the vessels on which they respectively came; and if any master, person in charge, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessel shall refuse to receive back on board thereof, or on board of any other vessel owned or operated by the same interests, such aliens, or shall fail to detain them thereon, or shall refuse or fail to return them to the foreign port from which they came, or to pay the cost of their maintenance while on land, or shall make any charge for the return of any such alien, or shall take any security from him for the payment of such charge, such master, person in charge, agent, owner, or consignee shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine of not less than $300 for each and every such offense; and no vessel shall have clearance from any port of the United States while any such fine is unpaid.

SEC. 21. That in case the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall be satisfied that an alien has been found in the United States in violation of this act, or that an alien is subject to deportation under the provisions of this act or of any law of the United States, he shall cause such alien within the period of three years after landing or entry therein to be taken into custody and returned to the country whence he came, as provided by section 20 of this act, and a failure or refusal on the part of the masters, agents, owners, or consignees of vessels to comply with the order of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to take on board, guard safely, and return to the country whence he came any alien ordered to be deported under the provisions of this act shall be punished by the imposition of the penalties prescribed in section 19 of this act.

SEC. 38. That no person who disbelieves in or who is opposed to all organized government, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching such disbelief in or opposition to all organized government, or who advocates or teaches the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, shall be permitted to enter the United States or any territory or place subject to the jurisdiction thereof. This section shall be enforced by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe. That any person who knowingly aids or assists any such person to enter the United States or any territory or place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or who connives or conspires with any person or persons to allow, procure, or permit any such person to enter therein, except pursuant to such rules and regulations made by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both.

Let us have laws that are humane, just, and fair. Let us not lay too heavy a hand upon an erring fellow-being who perhaps through want and misery was driven into committing an offense. [Applause.]

In behalf of thousands upon thousands of honest, upright, industrious, liberty-loving, and self-reliant people, who fled from lands of bigotry, oppression, and tyranny, many of whom sacrificed everything to erect on these hospitable shores the altars of religious and political liberty; who, like men everywhere, may err sometimes, may commit an offense which is branded as a felony—in behalf of all these I pray you to lay aside all prejudices which might interpose an obstacle to dealing with them as you would be dealt by, and which would prevent you from being guided by a righteous judgment by the higher and nobler principles of fairness, justice, and humanity. [Long and continued applause.]

Mr. MANN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LOWDEN].

Mr. LOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, there is one phase of this resolution to which I desire to call the attention of the House. Under our policy aliens are welcomed to this country. We give them the protection of our laws, and if while they are under our jurisdiction, while they are without the protection of the country they have left, they commit a crime, then we say, after they have committed the crime, that we will deport them back to the country from which they came. Suppose that former country, they having renounced allegiance to that country, did not desire them back, when the only reason in the world for sending them back was for an offense committed on American soil. Would it not embroil us in all sorts of international complications with other countries?

There are certain countries which make it a crime for their citizens to emigrate to a foreign country. We welcome them, however, and under our law they are safe, while within our jurisdiction. But when we deport them, they having given up allegiance to their foreign country, as they have in certain cases, they are men without a country. In other words, we would deliberately deport them to the country of their birth, there to be punished for crimes which were not crimes in the eye of our law. I do not believe that any law which makes a distinction between an alien who has been welcomed here for anything he does while here and our own citizens native born is a safe distinction to make. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] three minutes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill, which amendment I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask to have it read. Will it be in order now to offer an amendment to the bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may have anything read that he desires in his own time, but the Chair fancies that the gentleman is possibly aware of the rule that under a motion to suspend the rules no amendment is in order.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I will ask to have my amendment read, which I proposed to offer.

The SPEAKER. It will be read in the time of the gentleman, as a part of his remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"Provided always, That such deportation shall not take place until thirty days after the service of the warrant issued by the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor: And provided always, That the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor may, if he deems that the interests of the public will not be injured thereby, allow such convicted alien to remain in the United States, anything hereinbefore contained notwithstanding."

Mr. BENNET of New York. I make the point of order against the gentleman's amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's amendment is not in order under a motion to suspend the rules. It is read as a part of his remarks.

[Mr. GOLDFOGLE addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall not undertake in the two minutes' time I have to discuss the constitutionality of this bill. I think myself any lawyer who examines it carefully will be convinced that there is one provision of it that makes it unconstitutional. But if it was absolutely constitutional, it is as unwise a piece of legislation as has ever been proposed to this House, in my judgment. The proposition is practically this: That the law shall put all proper safeguards around the admission of aliens—and that is right—and then the immigrant having passed these safeguards, and having been given the right to come into this country, and having given up his allegiance to the country from which he came, shall, if he subsequently be convicted of an offense declared to be a felony, and which may be a very immaterial offense, by virtue of that fact, be deported.

Now, it was well brought out by the gentleman from Illinois that we might declare he should be deported to the country from which he came without having it altogether in our power to carry out our declaration. Certainly if an American went to England, renounced his allegiance to this country, was guilty of an offense there, and England undertook to deport him to America, America might very well question the right of England so to do.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will yield for a question.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. And suppose, too, the country whence he came had in the meantime passed the statute forbidding his return, what then?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman simply further illustrates the fact that this might create a condition in which a man is without a country. We do not proceed in this civilized age upon the assumption that a man who is convicted of a crime and who serves his penalty for having committed that crime is necessarily a person beyond the pale of the law or of civilization. There are hundreds of men who have been guilty of wrongdoing that subsequently became good and desirable citizens and residents of the community. And without any investigation, but simply upon the fact that he has been convicted of what may be a very ordinary offense, this bill requires that he be deported. It is a barbarous proposition and against every instinct of humanity and all fair dealing. [Applause.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to my colleague [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, we are all agreed that nothing is more important for the welfare of this country than to get in a proper class of foreigners and keep out an improper class. The law provides that no foreigner shall be received into our citizenship if he has committed a felony in his own country. By what reasoning shall it be said that the man who commits a felony in Italy we will not take in, but the man who commits one in this land after he arrives here we will keep? Where is the distinction? Why is the one an unfit man that must be kept out from the fact that his crime was committed abroad, and the other is a fit man because his crime was committed here?

The objections offered by the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Kentucky about international complications are not well taken. No nation has ever refused to receive back anybody that sought to come to these shores. International complications have arisen where people coming from a foreign land, having come here, have returned to their own country, and then their government said to them——

Mr. SHERLEY. But the gentleman has never had this sort of condition arise, where a man might stay here in America ten years under sentence, and then having been ten years from his own country, allegiance to which he has renounced to come here, is returned there.

Mr. PERKINS. But the man long before he had been here ten years would become a citizen.

Mr. SHERLEY. Not at all. Here is a man who is here for six months, we will say, and he is convicted of a felony, and he is put into a penitentiary and serves a ten-year sentence.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me suggest in reply to that that we are constantly sending back to these countries persons who, though they have landed, by reason of becoming a public charge or for other reasons are returned to their own country, and never has there been any international question or any trouble with any government receiving back on its own shores its own citizens, though they have come here with the desire of staying here and we have sent them back. The apprehension of any international troubles from sending back these men convicted of crime is without foundation. The only question is whether it is not good policy for our protection, for the protection of the others of the same nationality, that those among them who commit crime should be deported.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I yield one more minute to the gentleman.

Mr. PERKINS. There is a large Italian population and most of them are eminently good citizens. A very small proportion are very bad citizens, who commit crimes. Those crimes are almost entirely at the expense of other Italian citizens. The demand comes up from the Italians themselves, from those who wish to become citizens, that those who are of their own nation who have come over with them and who are guilty of felonies should be separated from them and sent back to the land whence they came. Why should any gentleman be strenuous to keep in the midst of communities of well-behaved aliens who come here, as well as those of us who are already citizens, a class of criminals who commit crimes and are convicted of them, and whose further stay is detrimental alike to their own people and to us of whom they will become a part. This bill which my friend from Illinois said was not demanded has had demands, I think, from almost all the persons connected with the charge of this class from our part of the country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] gave reasons why the bill ought not to pass, which reminds me that two years ago a question was raised as to the citizenship of his predecessor. It was claimed, on the one hand, that Mr. Michalek, his predecessor, was an alien, and on the other that he was a citizen. He had come here as an infant. Under this bill if it had been determined that Mr. Michalek had not acquired citizenship by reason of his father having become a citizen, and it was shown that he had voted in the State of Illinois, he would have been subject, first, to a conviction for voting, and then to deportation under this bill. A more preposterous thing it is impossible for me to imagine. A few years ago there was a contest as to who was elected the governor of the State of Nebraska. Governor Boyd had received the most votes. It was urged that he was not a citizen. The State was nominally Republican. He was a Democrat. It was claimed that he had never been naturalized. He supposed he had been naturalized. He had held office for many years, had voted for more than a quarter of a century, and if the question was raised under this bill, if it had been determined that he, coming here as an infant, had not been naturalized by the naturalization of his father, he might have been deported. What more preposterous thing could be brought into this House? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I think, forgets that in a case such as he states there are two conditions; first, a man to come under the operation of this law at all must have committed a felony, and, second, that this law applies only to aliens in the same way that it has applied for fourteen years to other aliens who are being deported under section 20 at the rate of about fifty a month.

Mr. MANN. But these men would have committed felonies if they were not citizens by voting.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Then, if they committed felonies and they were not citizens, they ought to be deported.

Mr. MANN. It would have been unintentional upon their part.

Mr. BENNET of New York. If it was unintentional on their part the court would have suspended its sentence.

Mr. MANN. But there is no authority in this for a suspension of sentence.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Any court has that power. My friend from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] I think was misled by an error of my own, in which I said that a man who declared his intention renounced allegiance. In the haste of debate that was my impression. I have sent for the law, and it is that a man who declares his intention simply says: "It is my bona fide intention to renounce forever"—his intention to renounce at some future time all allegiance, fidelity, and so forth. So that he does not renounce——

Mr. SHERLEY. Why, the gentleman knows that frequently the very fact that he makes application to this country or any other country for admission as a citizen is by the laws of the country from which he comes taken as a renouncement of allegiance.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman from New York knows of no country in which that is law.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will investigate, he will find that is the law of several countries.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I have so investigated. And, furthermore, almost every country in Europe has this law now. If an American citizen goes to England and commits a felony, at the expiration of his term he is sent back to this country. Germany has the same law, only in a more stringent shape.

Mr. SABATH. So has Russia.

Mr. BENNET of New York. And other countries. We hear a good deal about the individual case of hardship. Of course that is so, and it is so every time a man is sent to State prison; it is an individual hardship on his family, but we have not heard a word about our right to protect society, the innocent and guiltless, from the acts and aggressions of these others. I am in favor of liberal immigration and——

Mr. SHERLEY. But does the gentleman consider it necessary in order to protect society to put out of any country every man who is guilty of a felony? Now, that is the proposition.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will answer it squarely. I say in our country we are entitled for the protection of society to deport every criminal alien who comes here with the implied promise to abide by our laws and obey them, then disobeys them.

Mr. SHERLEY. For the protection of society we have the right to do anything, but is it necessary for the protection of society to deport these people?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I decline to yield further except to say that in my judgment after investigation abroad for five months since the expiration of the last Congress, in the judgment of the Commission, every member of the Immigration Commission has thought that this bill was proper. I have nothing further to say except——

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. In a moment. If you pass this bill, you will decrease crime amongst aliens, you will decrease suffering amongst their families, you will deter the criminal alien abroad from coming to our shores.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The question is upon suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the Chair was in doubt.

The SPEAKER. As many as favor suspending rules will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] The ayes will be seated and the noes will rise. [After counting.] Upon this vote the ayes are 64 and the noes are 50.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands tellers. As many as there are in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Twenty-five gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused. Two-thirds not having voted for the passage of the bill, the same is rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 15219. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1476. An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept donations of money and land for the establishment of a branch library in the District of Columbia, to establish a commission to supervise the erection of a branch library building in said District, and to provide for the suitable maintenance of said branch; and

S. 2982. An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 2982. An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States—to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

S. 1476. An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept donations of money and land for the establishment of a branch library in the District of Columbia, to establish a commission to supervise the erection of a branch library building in said District, and to provide for the suitable maintenance of said branch—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that pension bills on the Private Calendar may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that bills upon the Private Calendar in order for to-day be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from New Hampshire will modify his request so as to make it apply only to pension bills, I will not object.

Mr. SULLOWAY. That is what I did say.

The SPEAKER. The Chair probably stated it wrongly. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that pension bills on the Private Calendar in order for to-day may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. LATTA, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

On February 26, 1908:

H. J. Res. 138. Joint resolution to continue in full force and effect an act entitled "An act to provide for the appropriate marking of the graves of the soldiers and sailors of the Confederate army and navy who died in northern prisons and were buried near the prisons where they died, and for other purposes;"

H. R. 12398. An act to authorize the War Department to transfer to the State of Kansas certain land now a part of the Fort Riley Military Reservation;

H. R. 12401. An act to legalize a bridge across the Mississippi River at Rice, Minn.; and

H. R. 586. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

On February 28, 1908:

H. R. 6515. An act for the relief of J. A. Gallaher, administrator of the estate of Joseph H. Gallaher, deceased.

REPORT CONCERNING SETTLEMENT OF SAMOAN CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President, which was read and, with the accompanying document, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit a report by the Secretary of State concerning this Government's obligation to pay to the Government of Norway the sum of $200 under the convention between the United States, Great Britain, and Germany for the settlement of Samoan claims, which was signed at Washington on November 7, 1899.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the bill H. R. 15852, with an amendment.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I supposed the gentleman would move to consider the bills in Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. All bills on the Private Calendar under the rule will be considered in the Committee of the Whole House, unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can move to go into Committee of the Whole for consideration of the bills.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bills may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on the Public Lands be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. I object. The gentleman knew I would object.

Mr. MONDELL. I call up the bill now.

Mr. MANN. All bills on the House Calendar under the rules must be considered in the Committee of the Whole House. Now, unanimous consent was not given, and the gentleman can move to go into Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MANN. For the purpose of considering the bills on the Private Calendar reported from his committee.

The SPEAKER. From the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on the Public Lands.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. LOUDENSLAGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on the Public Lands. The Clerk will report the first bill.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION, ARK.

The first business was the bill H. R. 15852.

A bill (H. R. 15852) to confer title in fee and to authorize the disposition of certain lots now situate on Hot Springs Reservation, in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes.

Whereas by section 5 of the act of the Congress entitled "An act for the establishment of land titles in Hot Springs, and for other purposes," approved June 16, 1880, the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to designate six lots of the unawarded grounds on the Hot Springs Reservation for the use of the common schools of the corporation of the town of Hot Springs as sites for schoolhouses, to be used, controlled, and managed by the common school officers of the district in which they may be located for such purposes only; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Interior, pursuant to said act, did, by his order dated January 14, 1881, and a subsequent order dated February 19, 1881, designate for the purposes in said act mentioned the following lots situate on said reservation, namely: Lot No. 2, in block No. 72; lot No. 10, in block No. 48; lot No. 8, in block No. 93; lot No. 8, in block No. 146; lot No. 18, in block No. 135, and lot No. 21, in block No. 138; and

Whereas by a subsequent act of the Congress the school officers of said school district were authorized to sell the said lot No. 8, in block No. 93; and

Whereas the best interest of the public schools of the said school district of Hot Springs, in which said lots are situated, will be subserved by vesting the absolute title to said lots in said district: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That all the estate, right, title, and interest, and all right of reversion of the United States in and to lot No. 2, in block No. 72; lot No. 10, in block No. 48; lot No. 8, in block No. 146; lot No. 18, in block No. 135; and lot No. 21, in block No. 138, situate on the Hot Springs reservation, in the school district of Hot Springs, in the State of Arkansas, be, and is, granted to and vested in the said school district of Hot Springs, with full power and authority of the officers of said school district to manage, control, sell, pledge, or dispose of the same, or any part thereof, at their discretion, for the use of said school district and the public schools thereof.

SEC. 2. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill be amended by striking out the preamble, and that, when so amended, it be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HOMESTEAD TO CHILDREN OF PAUL CLENDENIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 392) to confirm homestead entry made by guardian for the benefit of Dorothea Clendenin and Paul Dana Clendenin, minor orphan children of Paul Clendenin, late surgeon major, United States Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

An act (S. 392) to confirm homestead entry made by guardian for the benefit of Dorothea Clendenin and Paul Dana Clendenin, minor orphan children of Paul Clendenin, late surgeon major, United States Volunteers.

Be it enacted, etc., That homestead entry No. 24024, made July 15, 1903, at Minot, now Williston, N. Dak., land district, by Clement A. Lounsberry, guardian of the person and estate of Dorothea Clendenin, under section 2307 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, for the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter, northeast quarter of the northwest quarter section 14, and southeast quarter of the southwest quarter and the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter section 11, township 152 north, range 104 west, fifth principal meridian, containing 160 acres, be, and is hereby, confirmed; and upon satisfactory proof of compliance with the requirements of the homestead laws as to cultivation and improvements the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby directed to issue patent for the said described land in favor of Dorothea Clendenin and Paul Dana Clendenin, minor orphan children of Paul Clendenin, late surgeon major, United States Volunteers.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

WOODWARD, OKLA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12773) granting to the city of Woodward, in the State of Oklahoma, lot 2, in block 48, for park and other public purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12773) granting to the city of Woodward, in the State of Oklahoma, lot 2, in block 48, for park and other public purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That lot No. 1, in block No. 48, in the city of Woodward and State of Oklahoma, be, and the same is hereby, granted to said city of Woodward, for the use and benefit of the inhabitants of said city, for park and other public purposes.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out the word "one" in line 3 and insert in lieu thereof the word "two," and that as thus amended the bill do pass.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman why they did not accept the proposition or the recommendation made by the Secretary of the Interior in regard to this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. What recommendation? My impression is that the Secretary made no other recommendation than that carried out in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman's impression is incorrect. Has the gentleman a copy of the report there?

Mr. MONDELL. I have.

Mr. MANN. He will notice that in next to the last paragraph of the report the Secretary says:

I recommend, if deemed wise to enact the contemplated legislation, that the body of the bill be amended to read:

Then he sets out the way he thinks the bill ought to read, but it does not read that way at all. No such change was made by the committee.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, Mr. Chairman, the committee was under the impression that that charge was not necessary; that there was no question as to the grantee in this case, and could be no question, and therefore the change suggested by the Secretary was not necessary.

Mr. FULTON. If the gentleman will permit me, the form as suggested by the Secretary was simply, if the town was duly incorporated, etc. I think I made the statement there that it was. I know that was not very good evidence; possibly the best evidence that it was incorporated would be that it was incorporated.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's evidence would be good with me as to that.

Mr. FULTON. From a legal standpoint. It is on that ground that he made the suggestion.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman is well posted in reference to this bill?

Mr. FULTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It seems that the Government has already granted title to land to this city—it is a city?

Mr. FULTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. How many inhabitants has it?

Mr. FULTON. About 3,000.

Mr. MANN. The Government has already granted to this city 8.82 acres and also 26.74 acres, or 35 acres of ground, a considerable amount of ground, but they are not satisfied with that. They want all that the Government has there. Does not the gentleman think there ought to be a limit to the demand made by a city of 3,000 people upon the amount of land they want to take away from the Government?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly, but if the gentleman will permit me, these other tracts were granted at the time of the incorporation of the town, at the time of the opening of the land for settlement, and were reserved for different public purposes. Now, in this tract, including what we want, there are 6 acres, according to my recollection. It is used now for city purposes. It was originally granted to the county for the county courthouse, and they deeded it back to the Government, and the Government deeded it back to the town, all except this acre and a half additional. It is of no use to anybody as it is now. The Government does not want it, and it spoils the remainder of the tract. That is the reason why we ask for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. I move that the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

CHANDLER BASSETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12803) allowing Chandler Bassett to perfect final proof in his homestead entry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That homestead entry No. 2810, made by Chandler Bassett, for lots 1 and 2 and the south one-half of the northeast one-quarter of section 5, township 30 north, range 25 east, of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Washington, shall proceed to patent if there is no other objection thereto than the fact that said Chandler Bassett commuted homestead entry No. 4267 for the northwest one-quarter of section 18, township 140 north, range 63 west, Fargo, N. Dak., under section 2 of the act of June 15, 1880.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, my attention has been called to the fact that the name of the party whose title is to be confirmed is "Chandler" in the bill and "Chanler" in the report of the Department. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Washington if he knows which is the correct spelling.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think it should be "Chandler," because I took it from the letter of the entryman.

Mr. MANN. The report of the Department shows that the other man made the entry.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is a mistake in the printing of the report, because there is no doubt about this referring to the gentleman named in the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

GERTRUDE HALVERSON AABY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 720) to confirm an entry made by Gertrude Halverson Aaby, widow of Sigbjorn H. Aaby.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the final homestead entry heretofore made by Gertrude Halverson Aaby, widow of Sigbjorn H. Aaby, for the east half of the northwest quarter of section 27, township 148 north, range 38 west, fifth principal meridian, in the State of Minnesota, be, and the same is hereby, confirmed, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby authorized and directed to cause patent to issue thereunder.

Mr. MONDELL. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

STENE ENGEBERG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1666) for the relief of Stene Engeberg.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a patent to issue to Stene Engeberg for lots 1 and 2 and the south half of the northeast quarter of section 2, in township 159 north, of range 87 west, in the State of North Dakota.

Mr. MONDELL. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

DOLLIE A. FOUNTAIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1774) to permit Dollie A. Fountain, of Walworth County, S. Dak., to purchase certain land.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Dollie A. Fountain be, and she is hereby, permitted to purchase the west half of the southeast quarter of section 5 and the west half of the northeast quarter of section 8, in township 128 north of range 78 west of the fifth principal meridian from the Government by paying therefor the Government price of $1.25 per acre, and that upon the payment of said Government price a patent in usual form shall be issued for said land conveying the same in fee simple to the said Dollie A. Fountain, her heirs and assigns, forever, any law of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. MONDELL. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

WESTERN POWER COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15725) to relinquish, release, and confirm the title of certain lands in California to the Western Power Company.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the lands hereinafter described and embraced within certain Indian allotments, and also situate in Susanville land district, have been condemned for public uses and paid for, under the act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stats., pp. 1058 and 1084), by the Western Power Company, a corporation; and

Whereas said company has no other evidence of title to said lands than the decrees of condemnation rendered by the superior court of Plumas County, State of California, in favor of said company against those certain Indian allotments embracing said lands, whereby the fee-simple title to said lands was vested in said company, and in order that the title to said lands may be confirmed to said company: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That all the interest of the United States in and to the land in the Susanville land district, in the State of California, known and described as the north half of the northwest quarter of section 22, the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter and the west half of the southwest quarter of section 27, the west half of the northwest quarter of section 34 in township 27 north, range 7 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, and the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 7, the north half of the southwest quarter of section 8, the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 15, the northwest quarter, the west half of the northeast quarter, and the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 17, the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 18; also a portion of section 21, beginning at the east quarter corner of section 21; thence south 660 feet; thence south 45 degrees west 1,866 feet, to a point 660 feet north from the south section line of the said section; thence north 1,980 feet to the east and west half section line of said section; thence east 1,320 feet to the point of beginning, containing 40 acres; and the east half of the northwest quarter of section 22 in township 27 north, range 8 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, and the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 28 in township 28 north, range 8 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, aggregating in all 890 acres, is hereby relinquished, released, and confirmed to the Western Power Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of California.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out the preamble.

Mr. MONDELL. I move that the committee amendment be adopted and that the bill as amended be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Was this bill transferred to the Private Calendar?

Mr. MONDELL. This bill is on the Private Calendar.

Mr. MANN. It did not go to the Private Calendar when it was reported?

Mr. MONDELL. It is now on the Private Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois raise a question as to the Calendar to which this bill was referred?

Mr. MANN. If it is not on the Private Calendar, I do.

The CHAIRMAN. It was so transferred.

Mr. MANN. That was what I asked.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ANNA JOHNSON.

The next bill on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Public Lands was the bill (H. R. 16770) granting land to Anna Johnson.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue to Anna Johnson, wife of Ging Sing, alias Jim Johnson, a patent to the following-described land, to wit: The south quarter of section 29 in township 13 south of range 3 east of the New Mexico principal meridian.

With the following committee amendments:

In line 6 strike out the word "south" and insert "southwest."
In line 7 strike out the word "three" and insert "twenty-five."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bills to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bills as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration certain bills reported from the Committee on the Public Lands under the special order and ordered him to report the same back, some with and some without amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bills as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (H. R. 15852) to confer title in fee and to authorize the disposition of certain lots now situate on Hot Springs Reservation, in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (S. 392) to confirm homestead entry made by guardian for the benefit of Dorothea Clendenin and Paul Dana Clendenin, minor orphan children of Paul Clendenin, late surgeon-major, United States Volunteers.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (H. R. 12773) granting to the city of Woodward, in the State of Oklahoma, lot 2 in block 48 for a park and other public purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (H. R. 12803) allowing Chandler Bassett to perfect final proof in his homestead entry.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (S. 720) to confirm an entry made by Gertrude Halverson Aaby, widow of Sigbjorn H. Aaby.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (S. 1666) for the relief of Stene Engbert.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (S. 1774) to permit Dollie A. Fountain, of Walworth County, S. Dak., to purchase certain lands.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (H. R. 15725) to relinquish, release, and confirm the title of certain lands in California to the Western Power Company.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (H. R. 16730) granting land to Anna Johnson.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent reference of House Document 704 was changed from the Committee on Accounts to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LANDIS, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for one week on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BARCHFELD, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of John Hand (H. R. 22165, Fifty-ninth Congress), no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. SOUTHWICK, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Daniel Leary (Fifty-ninth and subsequent Congresses) no adverse report having been made thereon.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18347) making appropriations for the postal service; and pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that until further order by the House whatever time may be used in general debate may be controlled equally by myself and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will occupy the remainder of the afternoon in general debate?

Mr. OVERSTREET. All of to-day and to-morrow; to-morrow we hope to come to some agreement as to the limit of debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the time in general debate may be controlled by himself and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 18347) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is their objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, the aggregate amount carried by the bill now before the committee is very large. There are only a reasonable number of items, many of them, however, being in large amounts, making apparently a heavy appropriation in the aggregate. A great proportion of the postal service under existing law fixes the compensation, and appropriations depending only upon the increase and changed conditions which flow from year to year in that large service. We have seen this enormous service increase in recent years until it is doubled practically every ten years. By comparison one year with another, however, it may be shown, and very clearly shown, that a careful scrutiny is had of the entire service by the Department. The estimates by the Department are in the main carefully drawn, and the committee have in the preparation of the bill in recent years, speaking only from my personal experience, given exceedingly great care in the preparation of the various items.

In bringing this measure to-day before the committee, carrying as it does $220,766,192, the committee has not only been actuated by an honest and patient effort at economy, but has striven industriously and intelligently, we believe, with such adequate and ample provision for the various branches of the service that the high standard of efficiency which the country has enjoyed in the postal service will be maintained.

The appropriations for the entire service for the present fiscal year amount in the aggregate to $212,091,193. Therefore the bill to-day recommended to the House carries an increase of appropriation over the current fiscal year in the aggregate of $8,674,999. That proportion is not as great as the estimates recommended by the Department by reason of the fact that the committee make some reductions in the estimates upon its own initiative, and the Department itself, by reason of a number of revised estimates, conceded a less sum than the original estimates carried. It is fair to say that under existing laws estimates are prepared by the Department in the early fall.

In a service increasing as rapidly as the postal service January is a better time to accurately estimate than August or September. Therefore, when the Department officials appeared before the committee at its hearings and were able, by reason of more accurate information than they had in the early fall, to submit revised estimates, the committee was better prepared to pass upon those estimates than the Department was prepared to the early fall, when the first estimates were prepared. Consequently the apparent great reduction by the terms of the committee from the original estimates are explained in large measure by the changed conditions which came before the committee when the committee's bill was under preparation. For example, in the Second Assistant Postmaster-General's bureau the revised estimate for railway mail transportation pay was $3,900,000 less than the first estimate. This grew out of the fact that the operation of the law passed at the last session of Congress and a new ruling of the bureau, known as "Order 412," concerning the method of computing transportation pay, had not gone into effect at the date of the first estimate, but the revised estimate was made at a time when all of those provisions had gone into effect, and therefore the change in the estimate resulted in a saving from the first estimate of $3,900,000. In the First Assistant's bureau the estimates of that officer were based in the early fall upon recommendations of that bureau for certain changes of legislation, and in the event Congress approved of those changes and new laws were passed then additional appropriation would be made, but, basing the estimates of the First Assistant's bureau upon existing law, without taking into account an assumption that new law will be made requiring a revision of the estimates in that bureau, it amounted in the aggregate to approximately $4,000,000. Consequently the heavy estimate of the Department first submitted to Congress in the usual way by preparation in the early fall was necessarily considerably reduced by the committee because of the facts that I have named. Among the recommendations from the Department that were not approved by the committee because they would require changes of legislation—and, in the first place, would have been subject to points of order when the measure was brought before the House, for a variety of reasons—were, briefly, the recommendation of the First Assistant to enlarge the field of free-delivery offices so as to permit them in communities where the gross receipts of the office were $5,000 a year and upward. The second was the recommendation of the extension of the classified act to the grades of employment above the grade of clerk in offices of the first and second classes, a recommendation for an increased vacation period, and a recommendation for an increase of 60 per cent in carriers of the $1,100 grade and of 50 per cent in clerks of the $1,100 grade, a recommendation to repeal the existing law relative to the method of appropriating for clerical services in offices of the third class, and appropriating a lump sum of $2,000,000. There may be some others, but the main reduction from the estimate of the First Assistant's office by the committee was due to the fact that his estimates were based originally upon the assumption of certain changes of law, and the committee believe the appropriation should be made upon existing law. We believe we have in each of the various branches of the service made a sufficient appropriation to maintain at the high standard of efficiency the service as it is now controlled by law.

I wish just in a brief way, but in what I think will give the committee full information, to take up in their order the five divisions of the postal service and note the general character of the changes in the appropriations. Under the Postmaster-General directly the committee recommends a reduction of the force of post-office inspectors, believing, as the committee does, that the large increase in that inspection service by merging with it the so-called rural agents and the rapid decrease of the work of the rural installation department will not require as large a number of post-office inspectors as in recent years. The committee therefore recommends that this force be reduced by twenty-two. In October last there were twenty-seven vacancies in the post-office inspection service, and I think at the time of the hearings there were twenty-one vacancies, something about that number, so that in the reduction recommended it will not necessarily mean the displacement of some employee, but failure to fill some vacancies which have not been filled because of the lack of necessity from the service itself. We recommend two small items of appropriation under the Postmaster-General which are new law, but the reasons are as follows: First, an item of $10,000 to cover the cost of purchase and installation of conveyors and other mechanical devices in the Washington city post-office. These mechanical appliances are for the improvement of the service in this city, and that office, it is found, can be greatly benefited in this service by this small item of expenditure. The second item of $10,000 is an appropriation authorized under the Postmaster-General for the investigation and testing of mechanical and labor-saving devices in the service. Under the general policy of Congress, wisely providing, as I believe, for a very general segregation of items of appropriation, it makes it exceedingly difficult at times for the service to receive in some particular cases appropriation for the investigation of new appliances and devices which an investigation might prove to be of great advantage, and the limited sum of $10,000 does not perhaps seem large, but there are a great many instances where they need no sum at all.

They have, for example, the question of the tying device for the ease and convenience of the post-office clerks and railway mail clerks for tying up bundles of letters that go to one common destination. There is a device of the mail catcher, which the Government has been struggling with for many years to ascertain a cheaper and lighter appliance. There is no fund now from which either one of these devices might be defrayed. The same is true about the stamp-vending machine. The committee hesitated about making a larger appropriation for such purposes in the absence of fuller and more complete knowledge. Under the First Assistant Postmaster-General's bureau, a bureau which carries almost half of the entire amount of the appropriation for the service, we have established in the preparation of the bill a policy governing us with reference to increase of salaries. That policy was that we would not make any provision for the increase of salaries of the employees now in the service. Of course I do not mean that we do not make provision, and adequate provision, to carry out existing law under the automatic scale of the classification act whereby clerks and carriers after a year's service in one grade are promoted automatically to the next grade upon proper efficiency record up to the $1,200 grade. Of course provision is made to carry that method of promotion, but there is no provision made for the increase of salaries other than that provided in the classification act passed last winter. There is one exception, and that is the grade of clerks of the $1,100 grade. Provision is made for the advancement of 15 per cent of the clerks of that class to the next class at $1,200. The reason for that is, briefly, that the appointment of station superintendents when necessary by reason of the establishment of new stations, occasioned either by the growth of the business or discontinuance of smaller post-offices adjacent to larger offices and creating instead of an office a substation, requires designation, as a rule, from the clerks of the $1,100 class, and in order to provide for the very strong probability a limited provision of increase to the extent of 15 per cent has been provided. It is true that the classification act passed last year creates a grade of $1,200 for carrier service, and there has been some demand for a provision for the increase of the $1,100 grade of carriers to the $1,200 grade of the law. The committee has not felt it proper to make that provision. The reason is that just one session ago we were very liberal in the appropriation for the increase pay of the employees, carriers among others, and under that provision approximately $12,000,000 were distributed for increases of salaries alone. We are making only a 15 per cent increase of the clerks of the $1,100 grade for the reason just stated. We are not providing for an increase of the remaining clerks of the $1,100 grade to the $1,200 grade for the same reason I have suggested. Furthermore, we have suffered in the last few months from a falling off in the postal revenues of the service, a condition which the history of the country shows follows each currency disturbance. How much it will be, no man can foretell. The losses to the postal revenues are sufficient in recent months to challenge the attention to the possibility of a continued falling off in the service at least for a period of half a year yet.

In view of that, the business of the service will not increase to such an extent as to justify an increase of salary to those employees. Furthermore, industrial concerns, private corporations, are not this year increasing salaries as liberally as they did last year, and in keeping with these general conditions, with no fear of an impairment of the efficiency of the service, the committee has thought it unwise to make at this session, immediately following a session of such liberal provisions, a second provision for an increase of salaries. Under the First Assistant of the Department, however, fall the third-class post-offices, where a few years ago we sought to inaugurate a method to cover the clerical cost of the service in those offices. The administration of the third-class offices is one of the most difficult things we have to contend with. The ripening of the third-class office into the second-class office brings with it immediately an enlargement of privileges and employment and salaries, which puts the second-class office upon a far different footing from the third-class office before it so ripened. We, therefore, a few years ago made provision for a schedule of allowances providing not to exceed $200 in offices where the salary of the postmaster was $1,100 or $1,200; an allowance not to exceed $300 to offices of the third class, where the salaries were $1,300, $1,400, and $1,500, and by one amendment later an allowance not to exceed $400 in offices of $1,600 and $1,700, and $500 in offices of $1,800 and $1,900 a year. It has been found, however, that the amount appropriated under this class has not been adequate to the conditions existing in a large per cent of these offices.

The appropriation for the current year for the clerical allowances at third-class offices is $800,000. The committee has recommended $1,125,000, an increase of $325,000 in that method of appropriation. But we have made a change in the schedule so as to provide the distribution of $500,000 of that total to the third-class offices where the salaries are below $1,600 a year, and $625,000 to be distributed to offices where the salaries are above $1,500 a year. It is believed, under a fair computation after inquiry, that that provision of appropriation will enable a very material increase of allowance for clerical cost in the third-class offices. The $625,000 will, under these estimates, provide for the payment of the maximum allowances in 92½ per cent of the third-class offices where the salaries are above $1,500 and allow the maximum allowance in the offices below $1,600 in 58.80 per cent of the cases. So liberal an allowance, therefore, will undoubtedly result in a better and a more sensible distribution of the fund for the benefit of those smaller offices.

In the item carrying the appropriation for rent, light, and fuel at first, second, and third class offices we recommend an increase in the maximum amount for rent which may be allowed from $480 to $500 a year and a maximum allowance for fuel and light, an increase from $80 to $100 a year, and have made provision by the aggregate amount of that item of appropriation sufficient to meet the differences by the increased cost of fuel and light and rental purposes in all the grades of offices of the first, second, and third class.

In the appropriation for the letter-carrier service of free-delivery offices, aside from our not making appropriation sufficient to pemit the increase of salaries of carriers in the $1,100 grade, ample provision has been made to carry out the provisions of the classification act under the automatic scale of promotion and to provide what is found to be a sufficient number of new carriers to meet whatever reasonable demand that may be occasioned by the increase of volume of the general service. The same is true with reference to the additional clerks in offices of the first and second class.

Under the Second Assistant Postmaster-General's items the chief point of interest has always been the railway-mail and post-office car appropriation. We make a very decided reduction in the amount carried by this bill from that which has been carried in former bills, occasioned by the legislation of the last Congress.

There have been four different things or transactions which have occurred in connection with the railway mail transportation pay and railway post-office car pay which have resulted in a decided reduction in the annual charge of expense. Last year Members will recall that we reduced the rate of pay for railway post-office cars; that we provided for a reduction in the rate of the railway mail pay on routes carrying in excess of 5,000 pounds of mail a day. We also provided two years ago, I think it is, for the gradual withdrawing from the mail, preceding immediately the weighing period in the four great territorial sections of the country, of the equipment, of supplies, furniture, and the mail bags not needed for immediate use and their carriage thereafter by freight. The purpose of this latter provision was to enable the Government to ship its equipment and supplies generally by freight at a lower charge than would follow when they are weighed as a part of the mails at the weighing periods in the four different sections. Since Congress adjourned, by order No. 412, of the Postmaster General, a different method in the computation of the weights was authorized, known as the "change of divisors." While the change of divisors, or order 412, has not yet gone into effect in all of the divisions, because under the rule of the Department it is made applicable only as new divisions of weight occur, still making the estimate based upon existing knowledge of the weights and the estimate for the divisions not weighed, the effect of the new divisor transportation in the annual charge upon the Government is a reduction of $4,619,285.85, or 9.65 per cent. The effect of the law of the last Congress relative to the change of rate in the transportation where the weight exceeds 5,000 pounds daily is a saving annually of $1,740,494.63, or a saving of 3.63 per cent.

The effect of the law of last Congress changing the rate of pay of railway post-office cars results in a saving of $935,974.09, or 16.36 per cent. And the effect on the annual charge by reason of the withdrawal of equipment under the same method of computation results in an annual saving of $805,679.13, or 1.77 per cent.

I will print in the RECORD at this point the table which I have read from, showing the effect in the different weighing divisions of the country and the items which make up the saving which I have just announced.

The table is as follows:

Contract section.	Effect of new divisor, transportation.	Estimated rate of per cent except in third division.	Effect of law of 1907, transportation.	Rate of per cent.	Effect of law 1907, R. P. O. pay.	Rate of per cent.	Effect on withdrawal of equipment.	Estimated rate of per cent.
First	$990,945.45	9.65	$547,909.01	5.33	$239,670.49	17.59	$181,758.90	1.77
Second	446,600.78	9.65	70,192.45	1.52	85,196.83	15.73	81,878.69	1.77
Third	1,787,378.10	9.65	759,145.88	4.10	442,755.76	16.70	283,251.50	1.77
Fourth	1,394,561.52	9.65	363,247.29	2.51	168,350.98	14.42	255,790.04	1.77
Total	4,619,285.85	9.65	1,740,494.63	3.63	935,974.09	16.36	805,679.13	1.77

We have, however, made provision, adequate, as we believe, with the appropriation of an amount quite sufficient to take care of this service, both transportation and post-office car pay, for the next fiscal year without detriment to the service.

In the item referring to the charge on freight and expressage on equipments, I say that that is a matter of guesswork almost entirely as to how much money will be required for freight charges when the equipment has once been withdrawn from the division, because there are no data upon which a safe estimate can be made in advance of the withdrawal to determine accurately just what that might be. I am inclined to think if the committee has erred at all in the item for express of freight and equipment, it has made a larger appropriation than might possibly be necessary; but with a view of making proper provision, we have been rather more liberal than not quite liberal enough. In the railway mail pay, or in the appropriation intended for the pay of the salaries of the railway mail service—clerks, chief clerks, assistant superintendents—we accepted the revised estimate of the Second Assistant's office, which resulted in a slight reduction. It is believed that after the Department had made very careful estimates, as the Department did, and its estimates have been scrutinized and analyzed by the committee, no better provision could be recommended than that which the superintendent of the railway mail service and Second Assistant Postmaster-General have recommended.

In the item for electric and cable car appropriation pay we make a new recommendation, to cover what seems to be a limited number of emergency cases. We provide that of the total appropriation made, not exceeding $30,000 may be used without regard to the present existing law governing the rate of pay for a cable-car or an electric-car service where it does not exceed the cost of the service under present conditions, and is, in the judgment of the Department, of advantage to the service. By that means we cover an incident which was called to the attention of the committee where because of the proximity of two communities a very frequent and efficient cable-car service was in progress, that would not accept the rate of pay which the law grants under the schedule of pay for the electric and cable car service, and the Government was compelled to resort to star service. The cost of the service by star service is greater than usual to the electric and cable car service, and the Department wanted to give it to the electric cable car company. Although it is larger than the schedule which the law provides for cable and electric car service, it will undoubtedly be of benefit to the service, and it will be cheaper service, more expeditious for the community, but it will be an increase over the existing rate.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will.

Mr. MANN. We require the steam railroads to carry the mails, as I understand, by law. Have we no such authority over the electric roads?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am inclined to think we have; but a further illustration of the explanation that I was giving would indicate that where there is but one coach carried, as in this instance, and the accommodations for the mail are exceedingly limited, not nearly the accommodations found upon steam railroads, and as in nearly every case a steam road parallels the line and does carry the mail, the Government would be slow, I should say, in compelling that road to carry the mail at a rate fixed by the regulations in the transportation law.

Mr. MANN. That is the reason for the change that the gentleman's bill proposes, and is not that no authority exists? The committee thinks that the present rate of pay is not sufficient in this case.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is my view of it, although I may say that there has never been any test of the law as to whether Congress had control over electric roads. I am inclined to think it has.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will allow me; I hardly think he intends to convey the impression that we have the right or that there is any authority now vested in Congress by any law to compel the railroads to carry the mail.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The exercise of the power of the Government over post-roads has been construed to mean at least what is equivalent to a compulsory law for the carriage of mails. It has never been put to a test, and I can not say whether or not there is any authority; but I think it would be that the Government would probably have the authority to compel the roads to carry the mail.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no question of the authority of Congress to designate certain roads as post-roads, and in a sense the railroads are post-roads, over which Congress has exclusive control, so far as postal transportation is concerned, if it wishes to exercise it; but there is no law, and I wish to direct the attention of the chairman to that fact, and I did not understand him to make such a broad statement, that gives Congress the authority to compel a railroad to carry the mails to the different points on its line; nor can Congress compel an electric car line without its consent to do a similar service.

Mr. MANN. The question which I addressed to the chairman went to our authority to declare these roads post-roads, and thus be authorized to compel them to carry the mails.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That was my understanding, and my answer was with that understanding.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman permit another question right on this point?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the gentleman desire to convey the impression that an ordinary electric road, chartered under some State law and entirely within a State, would be compelled, if Congress passed a law that said it should be a post-road, to carry the mail without its consent? Does the gentleman mean to say that we could do that?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I stated in answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that I was not prepared to say that we had complete authority, but that we never had tested it fully in relation to the electric roads. I am not sufficiently familiar with the precedents in the cases that have been tested to warrant an opinion as to just how far the authority of the Government in compelling all kinds of roads to carry the mail might go. I know that it was held in the early cases that the authority of the Government to determine what shall be post-roads was pretty broad, but I do not know of a single instance where that determination was sought to be exercised on a road lying entirely within the limits of a State. My recollection is that in one of the earliest cases, brought in the Pennsylvania courts, there was a strong leaning toward an affirmative answer to the gentleman's question; and I am inclined to believe—although I say it with a good deal of qualification and without thorough inquiry—that the power of the Government in a proper way to determine what may and shall be post-roads is pretty broad under the Constitution, and that when that power has been exercised and a given road has been declared and determined by the Government to be a post-road I think the Government would have the right to compel the carriage of the mail over it.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, the power to declare post-roads has nothing to do with the question of interstate commerce, and has no relation to the question whether a road is wholly within a State or whether it crosses State lines. The power to regulate commerce may depend upon interstate commerce, but the power to declare post-roads depends upon that paragraph of the Constitution which gives Congress authority to establish post-offices and post-roads.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, in the Third Assistant Postmaster-General's items of appropriation there are a very limited number of changes made, and those only because of the belief that the increased appropriations may probably be needed on account of the public demand. There is, however, one change which the committee has made, to which I wish to call your attention. That is with reference to the indemnity upon registered mail.

We have transferred from the department of the Second Assistant to the department of the Third Assistant the regulation of the disbursement of the indemnity for registered foreign or international mail. This was done both upon the recommendation of the Postmaster-General and of the Second and Third Assistants. We have increased the appropriation to $10,000, the amount recommended by the Department. We have increased considerably the appropriation for the indemnity of registered domestic mail of the first class. The last appropriation was for $5,000. We recommend $25,000. That recommendation is made in order to enable the Department to dispose of a very large number of cases now pending.

The evidence before the committee informed us that there are approximately 9,000 cases of loss of registered domestic first-class mail, the demands aggregating on their face approximately $25,000. Because of the limited amount of the appropriation it has been necessary to postpone the consideration of the cases from year to year, for the reason that if the cases were all determined there was not a sufficient amount appropriated to meet the charge. The rule and practice of the Department, followed universally wherever a loss of registered domestic first-class mail is reported, is at once to set in motion an inquiry to try and locate the trouble, and if found, either to return the article to its owner or to collect from the person who is chargeable with it the amount of the loss. This necessitates holding up all the claims until that entire proceeding has been gone through with. There is no disposition to change that practice or policy. The committee, however, have come to the conclusion that a larger appropriation for this fund will permit a wiser and more equitable administration of it than in the past. In connection with that the committee recommend the creation of an indemnity fund for the loss of registered first-class domestic mail.

That is to say, that hereafter whenever a fund has been collected by reason of registered matter, the owner can not be found, or something comes up which prevents the payment of it, instead of that being covered into the Treasury, as has occurred under recent appropriations, it goes into this fund and forms a segregated fund to be used in the payment of other indemnity, and if that fund should be sufficient from time to time by reason of the payments and application to the fund, it would become administered uniformly under the practice and care and attention and appropriate disbursement when collected.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Under what authority of law do people hold out money from control and deposit from the Treasury and deposit in a separate fund?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Heretofore the item of appropriation for indemnity for the loss of registered articles is an annual item of appropriation, and under the law an unexpended balance at the end of the fiscal year is returned to the Treasury; so it would not be segregated any longer than the limit of the fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman speaking of a new proposition?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The new proposition will be entirely new. If the House should ratify the recommendation of the committee and create a limited indemnity registry fund, then the amount which might be left or paid in by reason of the collection would remain intact and would not go into the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it desirable to create a fund about which Congress knows nothing, and concerning which the public knows nothing, so that nobody is informed as to the amount of the loss which may come from registered mail, and leave it there wholly in the control of officials, practically in a private way?

Mr. OVERSTREET. It comes under the general method of reports of that Department, and undoubtedly there would be an annual report of it. There must be.

Mr. MANN. The Constitution requires annual reports of officers, and yet I dare say the gentleman has never seen one; I never have. Does this bill carry any appropriation for this item?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. MANN. A permanent fund?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. I ask the gentleman because this very morning the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations called my attention to a communication he had received from the Comptroller relative to special deposits of funds which seemed to be entirely outside of the rule and the law regulating the appropriation of money out of the Treasury. I am afraid that is where this would go.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think the gentleman from Illinois perhaps failed to catch the provision which must be carried every year in this item and which necessarily will keep it related to Congress annually, so that it will have a proper report. The appropriation must be made or else there will be no payment of losses from that fund if that fund is exhausted. Therefore, annually, the committee preparing the appropriation bill for postal service must necessarily have information about this particular item, and know whether any additional fund will be necessary for the ensuing fiscal year.

For example, the appropriation this year is $25,000 for paying the indemnity of loss by registered mail of the first class. There is a statute fixing the charge upon the Government for such a loss, and the statute would be wholly inoperative unless there was an appropriation made of the item. We carry annually some appropriation to conform with that statute. The only change recommended in this bill is that hereafter when there is any fund collected upon the loss of registered matter where the party to whom it belongs can not be found, or whereby he has not the settlement of it, and later the collection of it, which had not been made in the first instance, that money would go into a fund, to be supplemented each year with whatever appropriation would be required to meet the requirements of the statute which governs that matter.

Mr. MANN. What is the objection to covering the money into the Treasury like all other money and then appropriating a sufficient amount to meet the demands which may be made upon it by reason of the statute?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well, the attitude of the gentleman from Illinois, under the exercise of his privilege of making a point of order, indicates that that probably will have to be done. I believe it is a wise provision and I am undertaking to call attention of the House to what the committee thought would be a more effective and uniform administration of that particular law. It is utterly impossible to tell how many losses may occur in a year on account of the registered matter.

The law fixes the amount of indemnity, and we appropriate to meet that situation and to make it easier for the Department to continue to consider these cases which are always before them. The docket is never clear. There is never a time when there is not a case before the Department. We thought it wise to provide a continuing fund, so that they would be able to meet these cases in less time than it now takes, and in order that those who have suffered by the loss with which the Government is charged might be repaid within a reasonable period.

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to take the gentleman's time nor to impose upon it, but the gentleman has not at all to my satisfaction shown any reason why creating this fund in this way would enable claimants to get their money any quicker.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Because it enlarges the fund as rapidly as there is an increment of increase there occasioned by failure to find a person who owns it, and by reason of the collection of the claim after the claim has been paid.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman's committee every year expects to bring in an appropriation item, and hence must take into consideration the probability as to the amount of the claims, and if the committee is mistaken, then the claimants will have to wait anyhow.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. MANN. No one pretends there is any large amount of this money.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I just stated there are 9,000 claims pending now.

Mr. MANN. I mean of the money to be paid into this special deposit.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Not a great amount of it.

Mr. MANN. Not enough except to give an excuse at all times that here is a fund that they can be paid out of, and no one knows how much it is.

Mr. HARDY. I would like to know if it ever has occurred that the amount of the collections from this registration fund, of sums not claimed, has exceeded the amount of expense for loss incurred.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, no; it could not.

Mr. HARDY. In other words, is not there always a deficiency necessary to be made up by appropriation?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, always; because all of the lost registered articles are not found and all of the persons responsible are not detected.

Mr. HARDY. I understand the gentleman's purpose to be by this method simply to make the account continuing, it is to keep it in one successive order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That was the purpose of it.

Mr. HARDY. And there is no surplus left anyhow.

Mr. OVERSTREET. No surplus left anyhow.

Mr. Chairman, in just a few moments I think I will be able to conclude my statement. In the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General's office, covering rural delivery and supply department, the committee has endeavored to appropriate, as in the other instances, an amount sufficient to meet the real demands of that department. Unfortunately, the estimates from the Fourth Assistant's office, so far as they related to supplies, were not sufficiently full and accurate to enable the committee to accept them. There has been much complaint in past years of the lack of supplies for post-offices of all classes, and in too many cases I think criticism has been made against Congress when Congress does not deserve the criticism. There was some excuse for the delay in the shipment of supplies last summer and early fall on account of the transfer of the supply depot. It was scattered in various places in this city, and under a provision of law authorized at the last session one supply station or house or home for supplies was provided and the transfer to that agency necessitated some delay. I am happy to say that the information from the Department now is that these supplies are not being delayed, but the demands are being met with unusual accuracy and sufficiency, and the items appropriated by the committee to meet the manufacture and shipment of supplies for the next fiscal year the committee believes are ample. The same is true of the rural delivery service.

There has been some controversy between the committee and the Fourth Assistant's bureau in the appropriations for the rural delivery service in the past. The committee does not appropriate this year the full amount estimated, and I wish to draw attention to that here in order to emphasize the fact that that reduction is not because the committee purposes any less attention to the rural delivery service. We believe we have appropriated amply to cover all the needs of that service for the next fiscal year, although we have reduced the amount from that carried in the estimate. In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, there was approximately $1,000,000 unexpended balance in the item for the rural delivery service under the Fourth Assistant. At the end of the fiscal year 1907, June 30, there was an unexpended balance of $1,596,498. The condition of this fund at the time of the hearings before the committee convinced the committee that there will be a very handsome unexpended balance at the end of the present fiscal year; and so far as your committee is concerned, hoping that it may impress the House with the care it takes in preparing a great bill carrying the number of items of detail that this carries, we are led to believe that it is foolhardy upon our part or upon the part of the bureau officer to recommend a heavy appropriation when it is clearly shown that it will not need all of it, and we have reduced that estimate.

But in that reduction I make the prediction now that there will be an unexpended balance in that item at the end of the fiscal year 1909, and I am satisfied that my associates upon the committee believe equally with me that that will occur. So that no one need fear that there is any change of policy with respect to proper administration and appropriation for the rural delivery service. There is one new item carried in the bill, under the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, where it is intended as new legislation, which does not apply to the Fourth Assistant's office, to which I wish to call attention in conclusion. Under existing practices when any of our war vessels are away from port there is no provision at all for the sailors, soldiers, and officers to receive their mail in any other way than the common practice of having it addressed to a specific vessel and carried to some certain port. The constant change of location of our war vessels and the large number of men carried upon them has resulted in great inconvenience to the men upon those vessels in the receipt and dispatch of their personal and registered mail. Our committee, therefore, following the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster-General, through whom the recommendation comes to our committee, makes provision of law authorizing the designation by the proper officer of the Navy of mail clerks, who will be under bond and under the regulations of the Post-Office Department and in all respects as in the others, with powers to take the mail addressed to the various men and officers upon these vessels, see to its proper distribution and delivery, and in turn take from them the mail for dispatch and see that it is properly dispatched from the nearest port. This also will safeguard the registered mail which very frequently is addressed to men upon these vessels. It carries no appropriation whatever, and merely grants authority with proper safeguards and limitations and provision for a bonding of these clerks the same as clerks for post-offices, leaving entirely to the Navy Department, if it shall see fit to exercise the authority, to make provision for any compensation which may be proper. With that statement, Mr. Chairman, I think I can add nothing further. I can only say what I said in the outset, that great care has been exercised in the preparation of this bill in all of its variety of service, and we believe in it ample provision has been made to keep the standard of efficiency in full measure up to what it now enjoys in the collection, dispatch, and delivery of mail.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question or two. Is there anything in this bill changing the present law with respect to second-class mail matter?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The rate; nothing at all.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. My next question is, Have you provided for an increase in the pay of letter carriers in accordance with the reclassification law passed by the last Congress?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I explained that fully at an early hour this afternoon. The gentleman perhaps was not present. We have made ample provision under the law known as the "classification act." We have not made provision for increasing the salaries of the $1,100 clerks and carriers.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That was provided for in the classification act—an increase from $1,100 to $1,200?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No, sir; there is a $1,200 grade of clerks and has been, and we appropriate to carry all these clerks who are in the service and 15 per cent additional for reasons which I stated at the time. There is a grade of $1,200 in the carriers under the classification act; but we have not made an appropriation to promote them, because, I stated, the handsome appropriation for increased salaries made last year we thought ought not to be followed under the present conditions the first session following that enactment by a further increase, and for the further reason we were not making increases of salaries of any employees in the service other than provided for by that law.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Now, one more question, Mr. Chairman. Have you made any provision to extend the annual leaves of post-office employees to the same extent that employees in other Departments enjoy, namely, from fifteen days to one month?

Mr. OVERSTREET. We have not; and I regret the gentleman from Missouri was not present when I explained that, and I went into that, I think, in much detail. We have made no provision for any increase of the vacation privilege.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Did the gentleman explain the reasons which actuated the committee in reaching that conclusion?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I did.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, under the former bill there was a graduated system of promotions provided for clerks in the first-class post-offices. Now, I am informed that, while that provision was made, there is no appropriation to carry such provision, and I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana if any provision has been made in this bill to cover the compensation of clerks who should be promoted under that former law?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I could answer that question with the simple word "no," but that, I am satisfied, would not carry the information which the gentleman wants. The point is that the gentleman evidently is referring to what is known as the "classification act," providing for the automatic promotion of clerks and carriers.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That I explained at the same time, as I stated to my friend from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] earlier in the afternoon, and if the gentleman had been present he would understand I was not seeking to overlook it.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I did not hear the gentleman's statement. I have a letter from these clerks.

Mr. OVERSTREET. This bill carries enough appropriation to provide for the classification act in the matter of the promotion covered by that law. Now, that law is this: That clerks and carriers in offices of the first and second class shall be appointed in the first instance at the $600 grade. There are six grades, namely, $600, $800, $900, $1,000, $1,100, and $1,200. One thousand dollars is the last grade in offices of the second class, and $1,200 is the limit or last grade in the offices of the first class. Under that bill, when a clerk or carrier has been appointed at the lowest, or $600, grade, thereafter he shall be promoted automatically to the next higher grade after he has served at least one year in the lower grade and has enjoyed an efficiency record which justifies a promotion. The automatic operation of that law stops arbitrarily at the $1,100 grade. There is no law that provides for the arbitrary promotion of either clerk or carrier to the $1,200 grade.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. That is very clear, but I am informed that there are some clerks under that automatic system of classification who are entitled to promotion, but there is not an adequate appropriation to pay them.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That can not be true, I am satisfied.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Then I was misinformed.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Of course there might have been a mistake in the amount carried.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman rectified that in the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Of course we have to make these estimates, and wherever there is a deficiency under the law it is provided for. Under the existing law the Department found that by reason of the increased number of clerks they would not have enough money to provide for the automatic promotion of the clerks, and at this session of Congress, in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, under the guidance of the Appropriation Committee, $750,000 was carried for that item.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Probably that will carry it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That may be. Now, so far as this bill is concerned, of course we may make a wrong estimate on it, but on the best estimate that can be made we have counted for the clerks and carriers in all of those grades from $600 to $1,000 to be promoted within the year, provided they have served at least a year in the next lower grade and have an efficiency record up to the standard. Now, it is not always the case that all of the clerks either have a full year's service in the next lower grade or have an efficiency record, but we appropriate in this bill for what is believed to be absolutely enough to cover that. But we make no provision for the increase of the carriers of the $1,100 grade, notwithstanding there is a grade of carriers at $1,200. There is no law that requires it. It depends entirely upon the item of appropriation. The reason, as I stated, and which I would just as soon repeat for the benefit of the committee, is that, in the first place, we made an appropriation last year for increases of salary for all the postal employees, city and country carriers, post-office clerks and railway mail clerks, that aggregated approximately $12,000,000. Let me say in passing that if that provision for appropriation for increases of salary had not been made there would not have been a deficit at the end of the present fiscal year. In other words, the administration of the service and the method of appropriation for it has been such that if we had withheld the liberal appropriation for the increased salaries of employees last winter we would have had a surplus in the postal receipts over expenditures at the end of the present year, in my judgment. That was a wise provision. But we made no provision, because we did make a very liberal provision last session, and we doubt the propriety of making a provision of appropriation for increases of salaries alone at the next succeeding session. If we had made it for the carrier, then also for the clerk. If we had made it for the clerk, then also for the railway mail clerk and rural letter carrier. But under the condition of a handsome appropriation last winter, the strong probability of a falling off in postal receipts during the next several months as they have in the past few months, the fact that no industrial business concern is increasing salaries of employees this winter as they did last, the committee felt justified in withholding it.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. The statement of the gentleman has been very complete. The case that I have in mind is the case of a clerk who is entitled to a promotion. I have received a letter from the Department in which the Department says that, although entitled to the promotion, there is no appropriation adequate to pay it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. When did the gentleman receive that letter?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. In the last month, I think.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know who your informant is, but I venture the assertion that I could convince him in five minutes he is mistaken, provided that the clerk has served a year and has an efficiency record.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. If that be true, he is entitled to the increase.

Mr. OVERSTREET. He is entitled under the law. We have added to the appropriation for clerks of the first and second class post-offices $750,000 for this year, which we think will be ample. Maybe your letter antedates the signing of the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. One other question. There are some third-class post-offices which in postal receipts and volume of business almost equal second-class offices, and yet under the maximum allowance for assistants and separation of the mail the amount given these third-class offices is very inadequate. Has that been corrected in this bill?

Mr. OVERSTREET. In the interest of time, I must ask the gentleman to refer to my remarks. I went over it and explained it fully.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I have listened attentively to the gentleman's statement, and I do not remember that he made any reference to the compensation of the postmasters of fourth-class post-offices.

Mr. OVERSTREET. There is no change at all.

Mr. SCOTT. Does not the chairman think that the fourth-class postmasters, as a rule, are paid smaller compensation than any other postal employees?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well, I am not prepared to say that; but even giving them the benefit of the doubt, I do not think this is an opportune session to recommend increases of salaries of postal employees and postmasters in view of the action of the last session of Congress. It is true the fourth-class postmasters were not in the category of increases. There was a recommendation from the Department for a change of the basis of the pay of postmasters which would have benefited the fourth-class postmasters. The committee, under the policy that I have announced, decided to make no further increases, and therefore did not recommend it.

Mr. SCOTT. I appreciate the wisdom of the policy, but I know one post-office where the compensation of the postmaster, who gives his entire time to the work, is only $35 a month; and I think probably that this is a matter which could well have the attention of the committee in the future.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, if he will yield.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I wanted to know what has been the estimated deficiency. Has the committee made an estimate as to whether it will be greater or less than that of this fiscal year?

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is very difficult to answer, for this reason: The Department in its estimate estimated that the expenditures would be $230,441,016, and, of course, recommends an appropriation covering that amount.

But by reason of revised estimates, and the fact that the committee did not follow the recommendations for changes of law which would have required additional appropriation, instead of appropriating $230,441,016, appropriated in this bill $221,766,192. Assuming that the estimates of the Department for the expenditures had been $230,000,000, that would assume the deficit which they estimate. They estimate $10,318,004.70. But my judgment is, notwithstanding we have not carried in the bill the full amount of appropriations originally estimated by the Department, that by reason of the falling off of the receipts which we fear will occur on account of the currency disturbances and industrial conditions, I am very much afraid that the deficiency will be very close to $10,000,000.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him about three questions?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly.

Mr. BENNET of New York. First, did the committee in determining not to increase the appropriation for the $1,200 carrier grade take into consideration the fact that $800 carriers that would have now been receiving $1,000 are now only getting $900, and therefore the country was saving the amount of salary?

Mr. OVERSTREET. We took into account that fact, and in detail the whole scope of the classification law, and thought it unwise to make a provision to increase the salary of any of the employees that would undoubtedly have resulted in an increase of the $1,100 grade. Now, then, your carrier receiving $1,000 goes to $1,100; therefore I do not think that question would make much difference if he would make it apply to the $1,200.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Of course the $1,100 is the grade to which the $1,000 man must go.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Therefore the $800 clerk has not been interfered with.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The person is interfered with.

Mr. OVERSTREET. So that, without the suggestion which I have made, I am inclined to the belief that the RECORD, if left at the point where the gentleman left it, would create the impression that his $800 friend had not been cared for.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Oh, yes; he has.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly, he has.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certain, he has. I had no intention of leaving that impression.

In the second place—and in this I may not have heard the gentleman; I was occupied part of the time, although here—did the committee consider and lay aside for any particular reason the recommendation of the Department relative to the classification of the clerical force in first-class offices above $1,200?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I did refer to that, but the committee did not think it advisable to enlarge the classification, because it would result in increases; and we established the policy in the committee that we would not make any provision either by change of law or by appropriation which would increase the salaries of employees.

Mr. BENNET of New York. And similarly, has the committee considered the question of a classification of clerks in charge of contract stations?

Mr. OVERSTREET. It has not considered it.

Mr. PARSONS. In the grade above $1,200 no increases are allowed, as I read the bill?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No increases of salary. Increases of clerks are provided to meet the probable increase of the volume of business. There are some changes.

Mr. PARSONS. Outside of the $1,200 grade there is no increase over the appropriation bill of last year?

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is right. There is no change above the $1,200 grade.

Mr. STAFFORD. If my committee colleague will allow me, while there is no change, there are at present several vacancies in several of the grades, which permit of accommodating increased business throughout the country.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is what I was going to state.

Mr. PARSONS. In New York, for instance, we have opened two new stations during the year. Now, therefore we ought to have an allotment of more superintendents.

Mr. OVERSTREET. What sort of stations are they—lettered or numbered?

Mr. PARSONS. Lettered stations. But I find here no increase that would warrant a superintendent for one of those new stations being advanced in salary or an assistant superintendent being advanced in his salary.

Mr. OVERSTREET. There is no provision for that increase of salary. There is provision, as I have suggested, for an increase of the $1,100 to $1,200, of 15 per cent, to take care of those substations where the salary is ordinarily $1,200. Now, if these New York substations were more than $1,200 there would not be any provision for any salaries higher than that, but there is some provision, where the salary would not be in excess of $1,200, for a superintendent of such a substation.

Mr. BENNET of New York. When you say substation you mean branch office?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes; a lettered station is a branch office.

Mr. PARSONS. I notice in the bill a change in the form of the appropriation for labor. What is the effect of that? Does that change the salaries at all?

Mr. OVERSTREET. It does not. Under the classification act, the general law regulating clerks and carriers alone, we provided for an automatic increase by grades. The laborers, watchmen, and mechanics, and those other designated employees, were not provided for in the way of annual promotions in the classification act. Therefore we took out of the general item of appropriation just the laborers, watchmen, etc., at the salaries provided in the current law which they are now receiving, and simply put them in a separate item.

Mr. PARSONS. Then the watchmen, messengers, and laborers provided for in this bill in first and second class post-offices are to get the same salaries that they now receive?

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is right; and I will say that the $400 grade is abolished, and those in the $400 grade are covered into the $500 grade.

Mr. PARSONS. I hope we have no $500 grade in New York.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Not in New York.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. MANN. In reference to the matter of contract stations. The Department calls them numbered stations; the Post-Office Department calls them substations. You have an item of $250,000 for contract stations above $300 salary?

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is an increase of $10,000.

Mr. MANN. Does the Department think that is a sufficient increase?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will say to the gentleman that that is one of the items that was so confused in the general estimates of the First Assistant that I am unable to answer his question. He wanted to cover these stations under some other head and allow a different method of appropriation. He prepared a bill which covered his various numerous recommendations and made his estimates upon the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Instead of making his estimates on the existing law, he made them on some sort of an imaginary bill?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes; and we had to separate it and reduce it to make appropriations according to existing law.

Mr. MANN. Now, if the gentleman from Indiana will permit me to make a statement in reference to that—I do not want to take the gentleman's time——

Mr. OVERSTREET. Very well.

Mr. MANN. The salaries of the contract stations as now regulated by the Department are fixed on a basis of the amount of money orders and registered business done at each station. They have the figures, but they have not been able to adjust those salaries according to official regulations, for the reason that we appropriate so much money for salaries less than $300, and another amount for salaries above $300, and there is no way of getting out of the $300 class into the $400 class when the business justifies it. That is the reason they made a proposition to put the two sums together.

I have a number of cases in the city of Chicago where they transact the business required by the Department under the regulation basing it on certain salaries, and are told in advance that when that business reaches that amount they will receive the salary, but they do not get it. I have had a number of resignations in my district on account of it, and in some places where it is impossible to get anyone to take the place.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin to answer the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. STAFFORD. In reply to the criticism of the action of the committee in not making larger appropriations for the higher class of stations, I wish to say that we follow the recommendation of the retiring First Assistant Postmaster-General, of several years ago, when he said it would be far better for the service to create additional stations at the salary of $300 and under than to increase those of the higher-priced stations from $400 to $1,000. The committee has followed that recommendation by providing adequately for a larger number of contract places of the $300 grade and under, as it brought the conveniences of the postal service more generally to the people in the cities than if we increased the high-priced stations. The appropriations for these stations of $300 and under have been more than adequate to meet the demands of the service.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is not mistaken.

Mr. MANN. Oh, you have money left in the fund, but you can not get it out.

Mr. STAFFORD. The money is there by several thousand dollars and is available at present for new stations. Of course the Department has not granted every request to establish a contract station. They follow the rule that there shall not be any new stations within a half a mile of each other. Every corner drug store wants to have a station, because it attracts trade, but the Department is following the rule, and there is ample appropriation at present for the $300 grade.

Mr. OLCOTT. I want to say that I hold in my hand a letter which I will ask to have read, where one of these substations does a great deal of business and receives a compensation of $4 a week.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is not the fault of the law or the Appropriation Committee. There is money in the fund unexpended, and the gentleman should present his case to the Department.

Mr. OLCOTT. I would like to have the letter read.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would suggest that it be deferred until we reach this item under the five-minute rule.

Mr. OLCOTT. Very well.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Now, Mr. Chairman, if there is no other inquiry on any item in the bill, I will yield the floor to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], if he cares to occupy any of his time.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. PATTERSON].

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentlemen of this House who have indulged in speechmaking at this session of Congress have taken a very wide range and have discussed in an able, intelligent, interesting, and exhaustive manner a great variety of subjects, embracing legislative, judicial, executive, and political. It seems to be the rule in general debate upon a bill for the Member addressing the House to speak about anything and everything except the subject-matter of the pending measure, and I will not at this time make an exception to the rule, but will take advantage of the time allotted to me to address the House upon two subjects, contained in separate bills which I have introduced at this session of Congress. To my mind these are very important matters, and I trust that the Members of this House will give me their attention and these measures that due and careful consideration which they deserve.

The first of these to which I ask your attention is H. R. 16758, which provides: "That no judge of any court of the United States inferior to the Supreme Court shall issue any writ of injunction or prohibition in any case wherein the validity of a law of any State of the United States, or the act of any officer of any such State done, or required to be done, in pursuance of such law, is called in question." In view of the recent acts of Federal judges, fresh in the minds of the people, assuming powers never delegated to them, this question becomes of great interest and importance. Such an assumption of power by the judges of the United States courts can not be too severely criticised and condemned. It is calculated to bring about a clash and conflict between the State and Federal authorities, and a check should be placed upon them and they should be compelled to respect the sovereign rights of the States to enact laws and to enforce them, subject only to interference by injunction of the supreme court of the State or of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Since the expiration of the Fifty-ninth Congress the people of the United States have witnessed many things tending to demonstrate the correctness of Jefferson's solemn declaration that Federal judges are the "sappers and miners" of despotism. We have seen Federal judges attempting to nullify the laws of the States by granting injunctions forbidding and restraining the officers of the States of Virginia, North Carolina, Alabama, and Minnesota, who are charged with the execution of the laws of those States, to execute those laws, unless and until the Supreme Court of the United States has passed upon their validity, thus making State laws enforcible only upon a condition never contemplated by the framers of the Constitution of the United States. And we have seen this new usurpation of authority followed immediately upon the suggestion of the President, who appointed the particular judges guilty of such usurpation, that the Constitution needed to be remodeled by executive, legislative, and judicial constructions, and not by amendments in the proper and authorized manner, in order to adapt it to the needs of the times. In this way, by the appointment to judgeships of men who are overzealous to please their benefactor, the President is seeking and securing what amounts to a veto upon all State legislation, absolutely destroying the sovereignty of the State by indirection.

While the States are being shorn of all initiative in the matter of legislation for the protection of their citizens against the oppressions and abuses of corporations, through the instrumentality of the former attorneys of those same corporations whom the President has transformed into judges, the initiative of the Federal Government, or, rather, of the President of the United States, has been correspondingly increased by means of commissions of all kinds, exercising legislative, executive, and judicial powers all at once. As the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] said in a speech at the Jamestown Exposition on Constitution day—

> We are all to be regulated in our business and modes of life by gentlemen sent out from Washington, and the gentlemen sent out from Washington are to be regulated by one man in the White House. Would it be possible to conceive of a more ideal centralized paternalistic government?

The judges are not removable by the President, but these Commissioners are; so that, in effect, we have a new semi-judiciary system, by means of which the President may put in train whatever measures he may like through instruments dependent upon himself for their offices and emoluments; and besides this, a perverted judicial system by means of which he may nullify all measures adopted by the States which do not please him.

Our condition in these respects is worse to-day than it was in 1798, when Jefferson and Madison aroused the nation with the Kentucky and Virginia resolutions. Federalism, or nationalism, as it is now called, had then run wild, indeed, under John Adams; but not so wild as it has run under Theodore Roosevelt. Many useless offices had been created as means of propagating the faith and perpetuating the power of the Federalist party; but the number was insignificant, and the emoluments still more insignificant, when compared with the 36,000 new offices and $36,000,000 in new salaries created by the Fifty-eighth and Fifty-ninth Congresses. The alien and sedition laws had been passed by Congress under the whip and spur of the Administration in violation of the Constitution; but those were as nothing compared with the tariff bills, the subsidy bill, the financial bills, and other measures intended to benefit special interests at the expense of the public, which have passed this House in recent years. Nor were the direct usurpations of undelegated powers committed by Adams to be compared with those which the present President has committed.

I have not the time to go into the details of all these matters; but in respect to the judiciary system, as it was treated by the Sixth Congress under Adams and the Seventh under Jefferson, I wish to speak at length, in order to show that Congress has complete authority to destroy, as well as to create, courts inferior to the Supreme Court, and therefore to abolish judicial offices and to deprive those persons who hold them of their salaries.

After Jefferson had been elected in 1800, and before he had taken his seat in 1801, President Adams conceived the design of perpetuating his "policies"—all enemies of the Constitution have "policies"—by creating new Federal courts and filling them with judges who could be depended on to nullify any law passed by the new Congress or by any State legislature which might conflict with his monarchical policies. In his fourth annual message, November 22, 1800, he said:

> It is in every point of view of such primary importance to carry the laws into prompt and faithful execution, and to render that part of the administration of justice which the Constitution and laws devolve on the Federal courts as convenient to the people as may consist with their present circumstance, that I can not omit to once more recommend to your serious consideration the judiciary system of the United States.

And having received from a House of Representatives devoted to his service a complacent reply, he added on the 27th of November the following:

> I thank you, gentlemen, for your assurance that the various subjects recommended to your consideration shall receive your deliberate attention.

The President was greatly interested in the "improvement" of the judiciary system. He contended that after courts had once been created and judges appointed those courts could not be abolished or those judges removed by Congress.

In pursuance of this theory, the Sixth Congress, the last Federalist Congress, with its expiring gasp, passed "An act for the more convenient organization of the courts of the United States," which was approved by President Adams, February 13, 1801—less than a month before Jefferson was inaugurated. This act created certain new judicial offices and also established certain new courts, called "circuit courts of the United States." In virtue of appointments made by President Adams in pursuance of this act, William Tilghman, Oliver Wolcott, Richard Bassett, Charles Magill, Samuel Hitchcock, Benjamin Bourne, Egbert Benson, Philip B. Key, William Griffith, Jeremiah Smith, and George K. Taylor became judges of said circuit courts, with salaries of $2,000 a year each. These judges were known as "John Adams's judges," and were extremely objectionable to the Democrats, then called Republicans, of whom Jefferson was the leader. In order to get rid of them, Jefferson, in his first annual message, December 8, 1801, suggested the repeal of the act. His remarks will be found in volume 1 of Richardson's Presidents' Messages, p. 331:

> The judiciary system of the United States—
> Said he—
> and especially that portion of it recently enacted, will of course present itself to the contemplation of Congress; and, that they may be able to judge of the proportion which the institution bears to the business it has to perform, I have caused to be procured from the several States, and now lay before Congress, an exact statement of all the causes decided since the first establishment of the courts, and of those which were depending when additional courts were brought in to their aid.
> And while on the judiciary organization, it will be worth your consideration whether the protection of the inestimable institution of juries has been extended to all cases involving the security of our persons and property. Their impartial selection also being essential to their value, we ought further to consider whether that is sufficiently secured in those States where they are named by a marshal depending on Executive will, or designated by the courts, or by officers dependent on them.

In the first place, then, Jefferson showed that these Federalist courts were unnecessary and expensive. That was of itself a valid objection to them. But in the second place, he raised a far more serious objection by reference to "the inestimable institution of juries" in all cases involving the security of persons and property. He foresaw, even then, that these Federal courts would, in the very nature of things, resort to government by injunction—to the decision of cases without the intervention of a jury. The Pritchards and Joneses of to-day were not hidden from his prophetic vision. Nor were the abuses of the jury system, even when trial by jury was not dispensed with, overlooked by him. He abhorred the idea that a Federal judge should without a jury try any case whatever involving personal or property rights.

The legislature of North Carolina, on the 17th of December, 1801, instructed the Senators and requested the Representatives from that State to urge the repeal of the act of February 13, 1801. And immediately afterwards a bill to that effect was introduced in the Senate. It was entitled "A bill to repeal certain acts of Congress respecting the organization of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes." When it reached the House it was referred to the Committee of the Whole House and was debated at great length. The discussion of its constitutionality was opened by Henderson and Williams, of North Carolina, on the 6th of February, 1802. (See Annals of Congress for that day.) Henderson opened the debate. He deprecated the fact that the legislature of North Carolina had instructed the Senators and requested the Representatives of that State in Congress to vote for the repeal of the act of 1801. He then made several points against the constitutionality of the repealing bill, all of which were taken up by Williams seriatim and fully answered. I regret that I can not conveniently insert this great speech in my remarks on this occasion. Those who wish to examine it will find it reported in the Annals of Congress for February 16, 1802, at pages 530–533. I would also call attention to the remarks of Philip R. Thompson, of Virginia, made in reply to Henderson on the following day (ib., p. 547).

There were great debates in both Houses of Congress on this bill repealing the act of 1801, by which the John Adams circuit courts were established; and it was finally passed; thus proving the right of Congress to deprive judges of all judicial power.

At the next session of Congress, on January 27, 1803, the deposed judges presented petitions in which they said:

> That, by an act of Congress, passed on the 13th day of February, 1801, entitled "An act for the more convenient organization of the courts of the United States," certain judicial offices were created, and courts established, called circuit courts of the United States, the petitioners became vested with the offices so created, and received commissions, authorizing them to hold the same, with the emoluments thereunto appertaining during their good behavior; that, during the last session, an act of Congress passed, by which the above-mentioned law was declared to be repealed, since which no law has been made for assigning to the petitioners the execution of any judicial function, nor has any provision been made for the payment of their stipulated compensations; that, under these circumstances, and finding it expressly declared in the Constitution of the United States that "the judges both of the Supreme and inferior courts shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office," the petitioners are compelled to represent it as their opinion, that the rights secured to them by the Constitution, as members of the judicial department, have been impaired; that, "with this sincere conviction, and influenced by a sense of public duty, they most respectfully request of Congress to review the existing laws, which respect the offices in question, and to define the duties to be performed by the petitioners, by such provision as shall be consistent with the Constitution and the convenient administration of justice;" that, "the right of the petitioners to their compensations, they sincerely believe to be secured by the Constitution, notwithstanding any modification of the judicial department, which, in the opinion of Congress, public convenience may recommend; this right, however, involving a personal interest, will cheerfully be submitted to judicial examination and decision in such manner as the wisdom and impartiality of Congress may prescribe; that judges should not be deprived of their offices or compensations, without misbehavior, appears, to the petitioners, to be among the first and best established principles of the American Constitution; and, in the various reforms they have undergone, it has been preserved and guarded with increased solicitude; that, on this basis, the Constitution of the United States has laid the foundation of the judicial department, and expressed its meaning in terms equally plain and peremptory;" that, "this being the deliberate and solmen opinion of the petitioners, the duty of their stations requires that they should express it to the legislative body. They regret the necessity which compels them to make the representation; and they confide that it will be attributed to a conviction that they ought not, voluntarily, to surrender rights and authorities intrusted to their protection, not for their personal advantage, but for the benefit of the community."

This matter was debated in Committee of the Whole House on the same day, and the House again decided that Congress had the right to deprive the judges of all judicial powers; and also that it had the right to deprive them of their salaries wherever the office was disestablished. In other words, the House, by a vote of 61 yeas to 37 nays, adopted a resolution declaring:

That the prayer of the petitions of William Tilghman, Oliver Wolcott, Richard Bassett, Charles Magill, Samuel Hitchcock, Benjamin Bourne, Egbert Benson, Philip B. Key, William Griffith, Jeremiah Smith, and George K. Taylor ought not to be granted, and that the petitioners have leave to withdraw their petitions.

(Annals, Seventh Congress, second session, p. 440.)

And on the same day (p. 439) the House by a vote of 57 noes to 35 ayes rejected a resolution declaring—

That provision ought to be made by law for submitting to judicial decision the right of (the same persons, naming them) late judges of the circuit courts appointed under an act entitled:

"An act for the more convenient organization of the courts of the United States, passed on the 13th day of February, 1801, which said act was repealed at the last session of Congress, to their compensations."

Now, in view of this history, I desire to call attention to a publication of the Department of Justice, issued during the present year, and entitled "A list of United States Judges, Attorneys, and Marshals." This document shows that since his accession to office in 1901 President Roosevelt has appointed Federal judges as follows:

Supreme Court of the United States, three associate judges—one-third of the membership of that great tribunal.

Circuit courts of the United States, twelve of the twenty-nine judges, or 41.7 per cent.

District courts of the United States, forty-two of the eighty judges, or 52.5 per cent.

Judging these appointees by the character of Judges Pritchard and Jones, we may assume that some of them, at least, hold the opinions of the appointing authority respecting the necessity of changing the Constitution by judicial construction in order to meet the exigencies of those corporations which contribute most liberally to the corruption fund of the Republican party.

And before his present term expires the President will probably have the opportunity of packing the courts with enough men of the same class to insure the perpetuation of his so-called "policies," by judicial action, unless we act as our predecessors did in 1802, and deprive some of these useless and time-serving judges of some or all of their judicial powers. Disregarding the fact that before March 4, 1909, there is a probability of our having seven Roosevelt judges on the Supreme Court bench, we may by that time have in office for life seventeen of the twenty-nine circuit court judges and forty-seven of the eighty district court judges. If Mr. Roosevelt should be reelected, as many of our Republican friends anticipate, we should probably have on the bench by 1913, as Roosevelt appointees, twenty of the twenty-nine circuit court judges and fifty-nine of the eighty district court judges. If this should happen the hands of Congress and of every State legislature would surely be tied hard and fast by judicial usurpation. Will the people of the Union submit to this? Will we, as the representatives of the people of the States, submit to it? I think not. I know that it ought not to be submitted to. We have the power to abolish these inferior Federal courts. Cujus est instituere ejus est abrogare. Shall we be dominated, abused, insulted, racked, and ruined by our creatures, or shall we put an end to their insolence and their usurpations by following the precedent established in 1802? In principle it is our right to abolish these inferior courts.

As to the question of expediency, it lies wholly within our legislative discretion to continue them under proper restrictions of jurisdiction and powers, or to discontinue them and provide a different system, to be administered by new appointees, whose antecedents prove that they respect the "inestimable institution of juries" and are not disposed to exercise usurped power in order to nullify the laws of the States and the constitutional rights of citizens by means of writs of injunction or prohibition or by punishments inflicted for constructive contempts of court. To this end I favor the complete reorganization of the Federal judiciary, and shall, in all probability, introduce a bill for that purpose, unless the evils of the present system can be remedied by milder means.

The other bill I have reference to is H. R. 16952, which amends the act of 1887 as to removal of causes from the State courts to the United States courts and fixes the sum or value involved in any suit of which the circuit courts of the United States have original cognizance, concurrent with the courts of the several States, at $20,000 instead of $2,000 as now provided by said act.

This, too, is a matter of great importance to the citizens of this country. Under the law as it is at present, if a suit between a citizen of South Carolina and a citizen of another State or a foreign corporation involves the sum or value of $2,000 or more the defendant may remove the same to the circuit court of the United States.

This law appears upon its face to be unfair, unjust, and discriminating in favor of the citizen of another State or a foreign corporation and against the citizen of the State in which the suit was brought, in that it gives to the citizen of another State, and to the foreign corporation, the choice of one of two tribunals in which to try his case, whereas the citizen who sues another citizen of his own State has no choice but to sue in the courts of his own State. These removals cause great complaint and dissatisfaction, especially at this time when foreign corporations are so numerous, doing business as common carriers, express, telephone, and telegraph companies, being incorporated in one State and doing business in a dozen or more States. It works a hardship, especially upon the citizen in moderate circumstances, and often results in a denial of justice to the poor man, the widow, and the orphan, who have not the means to conduct and carry on a lawsuit with a foreign corporation in the United States circuit courts. It may be and often is many miles distant from the home of the plaintiff, owing to the very few courts established in any one State. It is against the policy and principles of our Government and of all civilized nations to place the machinery of the courts of justice beyond the reach of the poorest and humblest citizen who seeks redress for a wrong or remedy for an existing evil. [Applause.]

The act of 1875 fixed the right of the foreign corporation to remove the cause when the amount involved in the suit was $500 or more. This act was amended in 1887 and the amount of $2,000 fixed as the limit. Twenty years have elapsed since this amendment, and it has been twenty years of such progress and prosperity as were never known or experienced by any nation or government in the history of the world. We have advanced in wealth and material prosperity by leaps and bounds unknown to any people of any nation or of any age of the world's history, and a suit now involving $20,000, considering the comparative wealth and prosperity of the country, is no greater and involves relatively no more values than a suit of $2,000 twenty years ago. If it was wise legislation in 1887 to raise the value limit of removals from $500 to $2,000, would it not reflect greater wisdom and more justice and equity to raise the limit of removal in this the year A. D. 1908 to the sum or value of $20,000? In justice, equity, and good conscience I say that it should be done at once. [Applause.]

For further good and sufficient reasons why this bill should become a law I will state what you all know, what has been shown in the experience of every practicing lawyer in this country, that the Federal courts are held by the people of the country in more awe than the State courts; they are not looked upon with favor or regarded with the same degree of confidence as State courts; they are far removed from the people and frequently are presided over by judges appointed by the President from other and distant States from that in which they preside; they are personally unknown to the people, and I regret to say that the knowledge or information the people have gathered concerning some of these judges is not reassuring and not calculated to inspire confidence, respect, or esteem. [Applause.]

The people value more highly than any other the right of trial by jury. That right is often ruthlessly swept aside by a Federal judge in charging a jury upon the facts or in instructing a verdict. For these and many other reasons the people and litigants generally throughout the rural districts are restless and dissatisfied under the present judicial system of the United States and look upon the Federal courts, as now established, as foreign tribunals, whose presiding officers are not in touch or sympathy with the masses of the people and who are altogether ignorant of the character, habits, and customs of the people over whom they wield judicial authority after the manner of a tyrant of the sixteenth century; under this system equity, justice, and mercy are oftentimes most conspicuous by their absence. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. I move the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. He also presented the memorial of David Gray Archibold, of Newark, N. J., remonstrating against the adoption of certain amendments to the present copyright law relating to photographic reproductions, which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

SUNDAY LEGISLATION.

Mr. KEAN. I present a memorial of the Seventh Day Baptists of the United States, signed by Stephen Babcock, of Yonkers, N. Y., president, and Rev. Abram Herbert Lewis, of Plainfield, N. J., corresponding secretary. I ask that it be read.

There being no objection, the memorial was read, as follows:

MEMORIAL AGAINST SUNDAY LEGISLATION.

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress Assembled:

The Seventh Day Baptists of the United States, for and in behalf of whom this memorial is laid before you, beg leave to call attention to their record as advocates and defenders of constitutional, civil, and religious liberty ever since their organization in Newport, R. I., in 1671 A. D. That record includes colonial governments, the Continental Congress, where they were represented by Hon. Samuel Ward, the services of German Seventh Day Baptists of Ephrata, Pa., and other points of interest. Having such a history and inheritance, we respectfully and confidently ask and petition that you will not enact any of the following bills, now in the hands of the Committees on the District of Columbia, namely:

"S. 1518. A bill to prevent Sunday banking in post-offices in the handling of money orders and registered letters.

"H. R. 4897. A bill to further protect the first day of the week as a day of rest in the District of Columbia.

"H. R. 4929. A bill prohibiting labor on buildings, etc., in the District of Columbia on the Sabbath Day.

"H. R. 13471. A bill prohibiting work in the District of Columbia on the first day of the week, commonly called 'Sunday.'

"S. 3940. A bill requiring certain places of business in the District of Columbia to be closed on Sunday."

We base this memorial on the following grounds:

First. The Constitution of the United States declares that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." That Sunday legislation is forbidden under this act is shown by the records of Congress from 1808 to 1830. The question came to the front under an act of April 30, 1810, establishing the Postal Department and requiring the opening of post-offices and the transmission of mail on every day in the week. Remonstrances and petitions followed the enactment of this law. Postmaster-General Gideon Granger, January 30, 1811, reported that he had sent the following instructions to postmasters:

"At post-offices where the mail arrives on Sunday the office is to be kept open for the delivery of letters, etc., for one hour after arrival and assorting of the mail; but in case that would interfere with the hours of public worship, then the office is to be kept open for one hour after the usual time of dissolving the meetings for that purpose."

He also reported that an officer had been prosecuted in Pennsylvania for refusing to deliver a letter on Sunday not called for within the time prescribed, and said he doubted whether mail could be legally refused to any citizen at any reasonable hour on any day of the week. (American State Papers, vol. 15, p. 45.)

Reports, discussions, and petitions concerning Sunday mails crowd the annals of Congress from 1811 to 1830. Mr. Rhea, chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices, reported adversely concerning efforts to secure a change in the law requiring Sunday opening on January 3, 1812; June 15, 1812, and January 20, 1815. Postmaster-General Granger made adverse report January 16, 1815, saying:

"The usage of transporting the mails on the Sabbath is coeval with the Constitution of the United States."

January 27, 1815, Mr. Daggett made an adverse report, that was considered by the House in Committee of the Whole February 10, 1815, and after various efforts at amendment was passed, as follows:

Resolved, That at this time it is inexpedient to interfere and pass any laws on the subject-matter of the several petitions praying the prohibition of the transportation and opening of the mail on the Sabbath."

March 3, 1825, an act was passed "To reduce into one the several acts establishing the Post-Office Department," section 11 of which reads as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That every postmaster shall keep an office, in which one or more persons shall attend on every day on which a mail shall arrive, by land or water, as well as on other days, at such hours as the Postmaster-General shall direct, for the purpose of performing the duties thereof; and it shall be the duty of the postmaster, at all reasonable hours, on every day of the week, to deliver, on demand, any letter, paper, or packet, to the person entitled to, or authorized to receive, the same."

This renewed the discussion throughout the country, and Congress was flooded with petitions and counter petitions, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, of which Richard M. Johnson was chairman. He made an elaborate report to the Senate January 19, 1829, and to the House March 4 and 5, 1830. These reports were exhaustive and able documents. They centered around the question of Congressional legislation on religious subjects, all phases of which were considered with marked ability and candor.

When he presented the report before the Senate Mr. Johnson said:

"Now, some denominations considered one day the most sacred and some looked to another, and these petitions for the repeal of the law of 1825 did, in fact, call upon Congress to settle what was the law of God. The committee had framed their report upon principles of policy and expediency. It was but the first step taken, that they were to legislate upon religious grounds, and it made no sort of difference which was the day asked to be set apart, which day was to be considered sacred, whether it was the first or the seventh, the principle was wrong. It was upon this ground that the committee went in making their report." (Register of Debates in Congress, vol. 5, pp. 42–43.)

Representative passages from Senator Johnson's report are as follows:

"Extensive religious combinations, to effect a political object, are, in the opinion of the committee, always dangerous. This first effort of the kind calls for the establishment of a principle which, in the opinion of the committee, would lay the foundation for dangerous innovations upon the spirit of the Constitution and upon the religious rights of the citizens.

* * * * * * *

"Congress has never legislated upon the subject. It rests, as it ever has done, in the legal discretion of the Postmaster-General, under the repeated refusals of Congress to discontinue the Sabbath mails.

* * * * * * *

"While the mail is transported on Saturday, the Jew and the Sabbatarian may abstain from any agency in carrying it from conscientious scruples. While it is transported on the first day of the week, any other class may abstain from the same religious scruples. The obligation of the Government is the same to both these classes; and the committee can discern no principle on which the claims of one should be respected more than those of the other, unless it should be admitted that the consciences of the minority are less sacred than those of the majority." (S. Docs., 2d sess., 20th Cong., Doc. 46; also Register of Debates, vol. 5, Appendix, p. 24.)

The adoption of Mr. Johnson's report settled the question of Sunday legislation by Congress for many years. Its revival calls forth this memorial asking that Congress will not reverse its decision made in 1830.

Second. In addition to the fact that after a discussion lasting twenty years, Congress determined to abide by its constitutional restrictions touching Sunday laws, we offer another objection to the bills now before it. Leaving out the historic fact that Sunday laws have always been avowedly religious, we call attention to the religious elements and principles contained in the bills now before you. They create crime by assuming that secular labor and ordinary worldly affairs become criminal at 12 o'clock on Saturday night and cease to be criminal twenty-four hours later; they assume that the specific twenty-four hours known as the "First day" of the week may not be devoted to ordinary affairs, because of the sinfulness and immorality resulting from such use of those specific hours. The fact that religious leaders are the main promoters of Sunday legislation shows that religious convictions are at the basis of Sunday laws and that religious ends are sought through their enforcement. The terms used, although somewhat modified in modern times, denote that the proposed laws spring from religious conceptions. There can be no distinction between "secular" and "sacred," "worldly" and "unworldly," except on religious grounds. There is no reason, either in logic or in the nature of our civil institutions, why the first day of the week should be legislated into a day of idleness any more than the fourth day. Through all history cessation from "worldly pursuits" on either the seventh or the first day of the week has been considered a form of religious duty.

Actions and transactions intrinsically right which promote prosperity, good order, and righteousness can not be changed into crimes at a given moment—by the clock—and purged from criminality "by act of Parliament" twenty-four hours later.

If there be need of protecting employed persons from abuse or overwork, that need will be met in full by some law like the following:

"Be it enacted, That every employed person shall be entitled to one day of rest each week. The claiming of this right shall not prejudice, injure, nor interfere with any engagement, position, employment, or remuneration as between employed persons and those by whom they are employed."

In view of the foregoing and of many similar reasons, your memorialists respectfully urge Congress not to enact any of the Sunday-law bills now before your honorable body.

FEBRUARY, 1908.

Some of the facts referred to in the opening of the foregoing memorial are these: Through the Hon. Samuel Ward and others, Seventh-day Baptists took a prominent part in the struggle by which the nation was brought into existence. Being then governor of the colony of Rhode Island, Mr. Ward was the first of the colonial governors who refused to enforce the stamp act of 1765. His published letters—Westerly, R. I., December 31, 1773, and Newport, R. I., May 17, 1774—had much influence in the formation of the Continental Congress that met at Philadelphia, September 5, 1774. Mr. Ward and Stephen Hopkins were the first two delegates to that Congress elected by any colony. They were chosen June 15, 1774. Mr. Ward was a member of subsequent Congresses until his untimely death, March 26, 1776, because of which his name did not appear among the signers of the Declaration of Independence. He was one of the most prominent and efficient men in the Congress. John Hancock called him to be presiding officer of Congress, sitting in "Committee of the Whole" May 26, 1775, in which committee all the important work of Congress was formulated. Mr. Ward occupied that place almost continually during the sessions of 1775 and 1776. In his official capacity, June 15, 1775, he reported the appointment of Col. George Washington, of Virginia, to be Commander in Chief of the Continental forces. His published correspondence with Washington and others are important documents touching the work of the Continental Congress. Mr. Ward's son, Samuel, was a captain in the Twelfth Rhode Island Regiment. George Washington wrote to Governor Ward, from Cambridge, Mass., in August, 1775, speaking highly of his son as a competent officer.

The assembly of Rhode Island led in the movement for a colonial navy. On the 3d of October, 1775, Mr. Ward presented the recommendations of the Rhode Island assembly, and on December 11 of that year Congress acted upon those recommendations, and the first thirteen ships were ordered, these being the nucleus of the Navy of the United States. Mr. Ward's last letter was dated at Philadelphia, March 6, 1776. It was a high type of Christian patriotism, and his relations with Benjamin Franklin are shown in the closing sentence: "Doctor Franklin does me the favor to take charge of this letter." March 15, he was compelled to leave his place while Congress was in session. Virulent smallpox developed, from which he died March 26, 1776. The Continental Congress, the general assembly of Pennsylvania, and the mayor and councilmen of the city of Philadelphia attended the funeral officially and the Members of Congress wore mourning crape for a month in memory of Mr. Ward. The published correspondence of John Adams describes Mr. Ward's funeral and speaks in high terms of his ability and influence.

IN PENNSYLVANIA.

The German Seventh-day Baptists of Pennsylvania were also prominent supporters of the Colonial Government through their representative at Ephrata, Pa. After the battle of Brandywine, September 11, 1777, the public buildings of the Seventh-day Baptists and their private homes were thrown open as hospitals, in which not less than 500 sick and wounded soldiers became the guests of the Seventh Day Baptists during the dreary winter of 1777–78. "Typhus" became epidemic and many soldiers died, together with a number of Seventh-day Baptist women who acted as nurses. These soldiers were buried in the Seventh-day Baptist Cemetery, where a fitting monument stands above their dust.

When the Declaration of Independence was to be sent out, through which the infant Republic asked place among the nations of the world, Peter Miller, a Seventh-day Baptist scholar of Ephrata, translated that Declaration into various foreign languages, and copies of these were prepared in the printing office of the Seventh-day Baptists at Ephrata.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What reference does the Senator from New Jersey desire to have made of the memorial?

Mr. KEAN. It should be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, I think.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in connection with the memorial I feel it my duty, as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, to make a very brief statement.

For several years we have had bills before that committee along the lines of the bills that are named in the memorial, and I believe there is one such bill before the committee at the present time. During the last Congress the committee had one or more hearings on the subject, but no conclusion was reached. The bill now before the committee will have consideration in the near future to the extent of a hearing, to which all the parties in interest, of course, will be invited.

I think it is proper I should say that, in respect to Sunday legislation, the District of Columbia is somewhat unique. Only a few days ago I was in a photograph gallery in Washington when a man employed there said to me, "I wish Congress would enact some legislation looking to Sunday as a day of rest." I inquired how it affected him, and he said, "Simply because our photograph gallery is open all day Sunday; we are doing work here precisely as we do on week days; and we are compelled to do it because all the other galleries in the city of Washington are open for that purpose."

Mr. President, I am not going to intrude upon the Senate my views on this subject, but I do think it is of sufficient consequence to have the matter thoroughly heard before the committee and thoroughly discussed in this body; and as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia I shall endeavor to see that that shall be done in the near future.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15653) to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late civil war, the war with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late civil war, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2326) to provide for the purchase of a site for the erection of a custom-house and Federal court building thereon at Wilmington, N. C., reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon.

ROCK RIVER BRIDGE, ILLINOIS.

Mr. PILES. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 17422) to authorize the counties of Henry and Rock Island, in the State of Illinois, to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in said State, to report it favorably without amendment. I call the attention of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] to the bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND WARRANTS AND CERTIFICATES.

Mr. BANKHEAD. From the Committee on Public Lands, I report back with amendments the bill (S. 1036) for the relief of locators of military bounty-land warrants and surveyors-general's certificates, and I submit a report thereon.

Mr. McLAURIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Alabama.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to be a rather complicated bill, as I have listened to it, and I should like to have some explanation of it.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, the bill practically explains itself.

The Secretary of the Interior made a ruling that military bounty-land warrants and surveyors-general's certificates could be used in the purchase of land anywhere in the United States. Afterwards the Land Department reversed that decision and held that they could only be used to purchase land in Missouri. Afterwards that decision was reversed and the Land Department went back to the original decision. Now, I understand that the Land Department has again reversed itself.

During the time the decision of the Land Department was in vogue a number of persons who held these warrants and certificates used them in purchasing land in other portions of the country than Missouri. They have purchased lands and made improvements upon them. The lands have in some instances, I suppose, been conveyed to vendees and subvendees, so that their titles are very much complicated. The warrants have been canceled, and to validate those sales would be only an act of justice to the men who, relying upon the decision of the Land Department, used their certificates and warrants in the purchase of land.

Mr. LODGE. How much land is involved?

Mr. McLAURIN. I do not know the amount of land that is involved. I do not think there is a large amount of land involved, but I am not prepared to state the amount. I am not prepared to say that there is not a considerable amount involved, but not enough, I think, to raise any objection to the bill. I think the bill is one that is properly guarded.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. McLAURIN. With pleasure.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I suggest that there is a letter from the Secretary of the Interior accompanying the bill which explains fully the situation and the necessity for its passage. If the letter is read it will give the information desired.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McLAURIN. With pleasure.

Mr. TELLER. This is a bill, I understand, reported this morning. I have on various occasions objected to taking up any bills except bridge bills, or something of that kind, when reported. I do not mean to antagonize this bill, but I think it ought to be laid over and the report ought to be printed. There is a long report with it and it is an important measure. It affects the public lands. Therefore I object to its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made and the bill will go to the Calendar.

Mr. McLAURIN. I ask that in the printing of the bill and report the letter of the Secretary of the Interior be also printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be printed with the report.

RELIEF OF MADISON COUNTY, KY.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5349) for the relief of Madison County, Ky., to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask unanimous consent that the bill just reported by the Senator from North Carolina may be considered by the Senate. A similar bill passed the Senate in the last Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to audit and adjust the claim of Madison County, Ky., for internal-revenue taxes on dividends on shares of stock or bonds owned by that county in the Louisville and Nashville Railroad to the extent that such taxes were deducted from any dividends due and payable to the county, any statute of limitations to the contrary notwithstanding; and it authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Madison County, Ky., the amount of the claim so audited and adjusted.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to hear the report accompanying that bill.

Mr. McCREARY. I, of course, am perfectly willing to have the report read, but I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that this bill passed the Senate unanimously at the last session, and is reported favorably now.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator from Kentucky state that the bill was reported favorably last year?

Mr. McCREARY. Yes; it was reported favorably last year and passed the Senate unanimously at the last session.

Mr. LODGE. Then I make no objection to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 5856) granting pensions to officers and enlisted men of the military and naval service of the United States who served ninety days or more during the war of the rebellion, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5897) granting a pension to Martha J. Kellogg; and

A bill (S. 5898) granting an increase of pension to P. R. Williams.

Mr. BOURNE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 64) providing for the operation of the dredge in maintaining channel depths in the inner harbor of Coos Bay, Oregon, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SIMMONS submitted an amendment providing that hereafter the rate of postage on books and merchandise mailed at distributing post-offices for rural free-delivery routes shall be 5 cents for the first pound and 2 cents for each additional pound or fractional part thereof, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the post-office appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McENERY submitted an amendment relative to the purchase of all repairs and wagons, automobiles, and harness, and purchase of all feed for horses and cows, other than for hospitals, under the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, Navy Department, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. WHYTE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15372, known as the "omnibus claims bill," which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

On motion of Mr. KNOX it was Ordered, That 5,000 additional copies of the bill (S. 5508) to establish a system of postal savings banks, and for other purposes, be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKING LAWS.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning after the routine morning business I will submit some remarks on Senate bill 3023 and answer some of the objections which have been made to the bill.

BANK LOANS UPON COLLATERAL SECURITY.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas many banks in cities where stock exchanges are located loan money of depositors which are trust funds upon worthless stocks and bonds traded in on these stock exchanges on terms that make such loans most dangerous, putting banks making such loans in position of menace to the public: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Comptroller of the Currency be directed to send to the Senate at the earliest day possible a detailed statement of all loans made by the national banks in New York City upon collateral security during the six months from June 1, 1907, to December 1, 1907, such statement setting out in full names of borrowers, amounts of loans, lists of stocks and bonds deposited with each loan as collateral security, and also stating whether such loans are time or call loans and whether call loans are made by executive officers of the several banks or by order of the board of directors of the several banks.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the resolution go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

Mr. TILLMAN. In explanation to the Senator from Rhode Island, who is very solicitous that we shall do only the wise thing here, I want to say, with the permission of the Senate, that stock gambling is recognized by a great many people, if not by the Senator from Rhode Island, as one of the most pernicious, dangerous, and devilish of all the present pernicious, dangerous, and devilish things that are being done in New York. In order to get at the facts, Mr. HEPBURN has introduced a bill at the other end, and is rushing it to its death or to its enactment, to put a tax on all these transactions, I believe. Evidently something needs to be done.

I want the facts, that is all. I am perfectly willing to let the matter go over until to-morrow, so that the Senator from Rhode Island can examine it and see what special interests are jeopardized by it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that from hearing the resolution read and without being able to take in its full scope, perhaps——

Mr. TILLMAN. I am perfectly willing that it shall go over.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that he should not confine his investigation to New York.

Mr. TILLMAN. But that is the head center of devilment in stock gambling.

Mr. ALDRICH. But there are stock gamblers outside of New York, and if we are to have the names of all the persons who borrow money from national banks——

Mr. TILLMAN. I am perfectly willing the resolution shall go over. I thought the Senator would object to it because it would take in New York. I am perfectly willing to take in every city in the country.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator ought to do that, in justice, because if we are going to publish the names of the banking people who loan money on collateral security, I think it ought to take in everybody.

Mr. TILLMAN. All right. If the Senator will agree to that, in the morning we can arrange it to entire satisfaction, so far as I am concerned.

RIVER IMPROVEMENTS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. SIMMONS submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause surveys and examinations to be made of Neuse River from Pamlico Sound to Kinston, N. C.; of Trent River from its junction with Neuse River to Trenton, N. C.; of Tar River from Pamlico Sound to Washington, N. C.; of Pasquotank River from Albemarle Sound to Elizabeth City, N. C.; of Roanoke River from Albemarle Sound to Weldon, N. C.; of Chowan River from Albemarle Sound to a point opposite Winton, N. C., with a view to improving the navigability of all said rivers and providing channels of 10 feet depth, so as to conform the depth of said rivers from their mouths in said sounds to the points specified with the depth of the canal authorized by the river and harbor act of 1906, to connect the waters of Pamlico Sound and its connecting sounds with the Atlantic Ocean at Beaufort, N. C.

RIVER IMPROVEMENTS IN DELAWARE.

Mr. du PONT submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made, and to submit a plan and estimate for dredging and otherwise improving the navigation of each of the following-named waters:

The upper waters of the Pocomoke River from the town of Snow Hill, Md., up to or near the town of Gumboro, Del.;

The Nanticoke River from the town of Seaford to the town of Middleford, in Sussex County, Del.;

The Christiana River from the city of Wilmington to the town of Christiana, in Newcastle County, Del.;

The Laurel River in Sussex County, Del., from the town of Laurel to its mouth.

That the expense of such surveys and investigations be paid out of the fund appropriated for such examinations and surveys.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

H. R. 12773. An act granting to the city of Woodward, in the State of Oklahoma, lot 2, in block 48, for park and other public purposes;

H. R. 12803. An act allowing Chandler Bassett to perfect final proof in his homestead entry;

H. R. 15725. An act to relinquish, release, and confirm the title of certain lands in California to the Western Power Company;

H. R. 15852. An act to confer title in fee and to authorize the disposition of certain lots now situate on Hot Springs Reservation, in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 16770. An act granting land to Anna Johnson.

DISPOSITION OF CHICKASAW FUNDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. TILLMAN, as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that on the 24th day of June, 1905, a grand jury of the United States of America duly selected, summoned, impaneled, sworn, and charged to inquire fully in and for the body of the southern district of the Indian Territory in the name and by the authority of the United States of America did, upon the oaths of the members thereof, find, present, and charge that one D. H. Johnson, one P. S. Mosely, one George Mansfield, one J. F. McMurray, and one Melvin Cornish, and others to the grand jurors unknown, on certain days in the year 1902, within the southern district of the said Indian Territory, did unlawfully and feloniously commit the crime of conspiracy to defraud (an offense against the laws of the United States) by defrauding the Chickasaw Nation out of the sum of $28,876.90, the exact amounts fraudulently obtained from the Chickasaw Nation and the exact times and places where and when the said fraudulent transactions occurred being set out in said indictment; and

Whereas it is alleged that on or about the 15th day of December, 1905, the Attorney-General of the United States did direct one W. B. Johnson, then United States attorney for the southern district of the Indian Territory, to dismiss, by entering a nolle prosequi in said case, the said indictment; and

Whereas it is alleged that the said W. B. Johnson refused to dismiss the said indictment as directed by the Attorney-General of the United States; and

Whereas it is alleged that the Attorney-General of the United States on or about the 15th day of January, 1905, removed the said W. B. Johnson from office, said removal being by telegraphic communication, and said removal being based upon the refusal of the said W. B. Johnson to carry out the directions of the Attorney-General of the United States; and

Whereas it is alleged that the said Attorney-General of the United States did, on or about the 15th day of January, 1905, by telegraphic communication, reinstate the said W. B. Johnson in the office of United States attorney for the southern district of the Indian Territory; and

Whereas it is alleged that the said W. B. Johnson refused and continued to refuse to dismiss the said indictment against the said persons during his term of office; and

Whereas it is alleged that on or about the 13th day of November, 1907, the Attorney-General of the United States did send a telegram to the United States attorney for the southern district of the Indian Territory, one George R. Walker, directing him to "be sure" and dismiss the said indictment against the said persons "before the Territorial courts pass out of existence and the creation of the new State;" and

Whereas it is alleged that on or about the 14th day of November, 1907, the assistant United States attorney for the southern district of the Indian Territory (the United States attorney being absent at the time), one James E. Humphrey, did cause an order to be entered upon the records of the United States court for the southern district of the Indian Territory, sitting at Ardmore, dismissing the said indictment with the notation "by the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States:" Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate a true and correct copy of the said indictment, all correspondence of every kind and description that has passed between the Department and the United States attorney or attorneys and his or their assistant attorney or attorneys for the southern district of the Indian Territory, and all correspondence of every kind and description between any officer of the United States Government and any other person or persons pertaining or appertaining to said indictment.

That the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate why said indictment was dismissed and whether it is customary for the Attorney-General to interfere with the prosecution of persons against whom an indictment or indictments have been returned in the State or Federal courts of the country, and whether other indictments have been dismissed by direction of the Attorney-General within the past five years, and if so, what indictments, and the cause therefor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I desire to amend the resolution. On page 3, in the last "whereas," strike out the words "with the notation" in the second line in the paragraph.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina modifies his resolution as stated.

Mr. TILLMAN. And strike out the quotation marks on that line and on the last line before "Therefore," and strike out the balance of the resolution and insert the following.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The modification will be made. The modified resolution will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the resolving clause and insert:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate a true and correct copy of the report of Special Agent J. S. Mosby, upon which report the said indictment was returned; the minutes of the grand jury and the documentary evidence presented to said grand jury; a true and correct copy of the indictment; all correspondence of every kind and description that has passed between the Department and the United States district attorney or attorneys and his or their assistant attorney or attorneys for the southern district of the Indian Territory; all correspondence of every kind and description between any officer, agent, or employee of the United States Government, and any other person or persons whomsoever pertaining or appertaining to said indictment.

That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate why said indictment was dismissed, whether upon insufficiency of law or fact, and particularly whether the facts alleged were in the form of documentary evidence, and the guilt of the defendants thereby established beyond question; and whether it is customary for the Attorney-General to interfere in the prosecution of persons against whom an indictment or indictments have been returned in the State or Federal courts of the country; and if so, by what authority of law; and whether other indictments of a similar nature have been dismissed by direction of the Attorney-General within the past five years; and if so, what indictment or indictments and the cause therefor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

TECHNOLOGY BRANCH IN THE GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Morning business has closed. The Calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order. The Secretary will state the first business on the Calendar.

The joint resolution (S. R. 35) to provide for a mining technology branch in the Geological Survey was announced as first in order.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I want to object to that joint resolution. I ask that it go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go to the Calendar under Rule IX at the request of the Senator from Colorado.

PAY OF THE ARMY.

The bill (S. 4030) to fix the pay of the Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, as I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in the Chamber at present, I will ask that the bill may go over until he is present, keeping its place on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Colorado.

OCEAN MAIL SERVICE.

The bill (S. 28) to amend the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports and to promote commerce," was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that bill go over, Mr. President, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICT IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

The bill (S. 4132) creating an additional land district in the State of South Dakota was announced as next in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a memorandum accompanying this bill to the effect that the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE] desires to be present when the bill is considered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over, Mr. President.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, no request has been made of me to delay the consideration of this bill. It is a matter of great importance to the region of the State affected by it and should be passed. It was favorably reported to the Senate on February 5, and its consideration has heretofore been objected to and action thereon delayed. If, however, it is the desire of my colleague to be heard upon the measure and substantial objections can be urged against its passage, of course I shall not now insist upon the consideration of the bill in his absence. Time is rapidly passing, and this delay endangers the possibility of the bill becoming a law at this session of Congress. The creation of this land district is strongly urged by the Interior Department.

The proposed district embraces an area of about three or four million acres in the northwest part of the State, far removed from the adjoining land offices. Its eastern boundary is about 200 miles from the land office immediately east, and its northern boundary is over 150 miles from the land office in which it is now situated. The present land office is inaccessible to the settlers in this particular section and will be to the prospective settlers. They have to drive nearly a hundred miles to reach the railway, and then it is a distance of 50 miles to reach the land office. Many applications for filings are made through commissioners, and such filings are very frequently duplicated. This leads to delay and to great inconvenience to settlers.

Upward of 350,000 acres were taken in this region during the last fiscal year, and there is a large area of public land in the proposed district still open to prospective settlers. The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway has recently extended its line westward through the northern part of the State, reaching this region. The creation of this land district would make the land office accessible and convenient to settlers. Its establishment is strongly urged, not only by the Interior Department, but also by the people in that region of the State immediately interested therein.

I regret exceedingly an objection should be interposed to the passage or consideration of the bill. I have no disposition to insist upon its consideration if anyone has a valid objection to it, or can give substantial reasons why the measure should not be passed. I, however, do not want its consideration so delayed that its passage may be defeated at this session as a result. Action thereon has already been unduly delayed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill, the title of which has been stated?

Mr. NELSON. I dislike to make any objection, Mr. President, but the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE] having indicated his desire to be present——

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. GAMBLE. I do not want the Senator from Minnesota to understand that I shall insist upon the consideration of the bill in the absence of my colleague. I simply desired to make the statement I have so that my position may be understood. Of course if there are substantial reasons for delay——

Mr. NELSON. Very well, then, let the bill go over, retaining its place upon the Calendar.

Mr. GAMBLE. Retaining its place on the Calendar. I was anxious the bill should be considered, and hoped no objection would be interposed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

MATERIAL AND EQUIPMENT FOR THE PANAMA CANAL.

The joint resolution (S. R. 40) to provide for the transportation by sea of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal was announced as next in order.

Mr. FRYE. Let that go over, retaining its place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over at the request of the Senator from Maine, retaining its place.

SPOKANE RIVER BRIDGE IN IDAHO.

The bill (H. R. 15247) to authorize the Idaho and Northwestern Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Spokane River near the city of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

The bill (S. 48) to reimburse depositors of the late Freedman's Savings and Trust Company was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over under Rule IX, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. FLINT subsequently said: At the request of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] Senate bill 48 went to the Calendar, under Rule IX. I desire to have it restored to its place on the Calendar, and he has withdrawn his objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California asks that the bill be restored to its place on the Calendar, under Rule VIII. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PATENT FOR SANTEE RESERVATION LANDS IN NEBRASKA.

The bill (S. 4549) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee simple for certain lands of the Santee Reservation, in Nebraska, to the directors of school district No. 36, in Knox County, Nebr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee simple to the directors of school district No. 36, Knox County, Nebr., for a tract of not exceeding 2½ acres from the lands reserved for the Santee Agency, Nebr., described as the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 13, township 33 north, range 5 west of the sixth principal meridian, Nebraska, upon compliance with such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe; the tract to be used for school purposes under the laws of the State of Nebraska.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNAPPROPRIATED AND UNRESERVED LANDS IN MONTANA.

The bill (S. 3639) to amend the homestead laws as to unappropriated and unreserved lands in the State of Montana was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask that that bill go over under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over under Rule IX at the request of the Senator from Kentucky.

SPECIAL LEAVE PRIVILEGES FOR MILITARY ACADEMY OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 650) to extend the special leave privileges authorized for officers of the Military Academy by section 1330, Revised Statutes, to certain instructors and student officers at service schools was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LODGE. I offer a committee amendment to come in at the end of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill the following:

And such student officers of the Coast Artillery School as may have completed the first year's course and may be detailed to pursue the second year's course.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 1330, Revised Statutes, authorizing leaves of absence to certain officers of the Military Academy, during the period of the suspension of the ordinary academic studies, without deduction from pay and allowances, be, and are hereby, extended to include officers on duty exclusively as instructors at the special service schools or at the Staff College, and to include such student officers for the Staff College or the Signal School as may be detailed from the graduates of the latest class at a special service school and such student officers of the Coast Artillery School as may have completed the first year's course and may be detailed to pursue the second year's course.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PATENTS TO SANTEE INDIANS.

The bill (S. 3202) to authorize patents to Santee Indians was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to cause a patent to issue under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887 (24 Stat. L., p. 388), and the amendments thereto, to any Santee Indian to whom lands were assigned under the provisions of the treaty of April 29, 1868 (15 Stat. L., p. 637), who has not heretofore obtained a patent to his land under the provisions of that treaty.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARIZONA AND CALIFORNIA RAILWAY COMPANY.

The bill (S. 2948) to provide additional station grounds and terminal facilities for the Arizona and California Railway Company in the Colorado River Indian Reservation, Ariz., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "That," to insert "subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior;" in line 4, after the word "area," to insert "adjacent to its approved right of way;" in line 7, after the word "granted," to insert "for additional station grounds and terminal facilities;" and on page 2, line 6, after the word "purposes," to insert:

Provided, That such additional lands are granted subject to the right of the United States to cross the same and the works constructed thereon, with canals or water conduits of any kind or with roadways, or transmission lines for telephone, telegraph, or electric power, which may in the future be built by the United States across such lands; and the said company shall build and maintain at its own expense all structures that may be required at crossings, and in accepting this grant shall release the United States from all damages which may result from the construction and use of such crossings, canals, conduits, and lines.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, additional lands not exceeding 40 acres in area adjacent to its approved right of way in the Colorado River Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Arizona, be, and the same are hereby, granted for additional station grounds and terminal facilities to the Arizona and California Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of said Territory, subject to the payment by said company of full compensation therefor in the manner provided in section 3 of the act approved March 2, 1899, entitled "An act to provide for the acquiring of rights of way by railroad companies through Indian reservations, Indian lands, Indian allotments, and for other purposes:" Provided, That such additional lands as are granted subject to the right of the United States to cross the same and the works constructed thereon, with canals or water conduits of any kind or with roadways, or transmission lines for telephone, telegraph, or electric power, which may in the future be built by the United States across such lands; and the said company shall build and maintain at its own expense all structures that may be required at crossings, and in accepting this grant shall release the United States from all damages which may result from the construction and use of such crossings, canals, conduits, and lines.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN WISCONSIN.

The bill (S. 5253) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Wisconsin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of Wisconsin, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, at some suitable point to be selected by the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEES AND COSTS IN DISTRICT PROBATE COURT.

The bill (S. 3507) to fix fees and costs in the probate court of the District of Columbia and to provide for the collection and payment of the same, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] objected to this bill on yesterday, and as he is not in his seat I ask that the bill go over, retaining its place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

CALAVERAS BIG TREE NATIONAL FOREST.

The bill (S. 1574) to create the Calaveras Big Tree National Forest, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game with amendments on page 2, line 13, after the word "and," to insert "shall;" in line 15, before the word "reproduction," to insert "promote the;" on page 3, line 16, after the word "resources," to insert "within the State of California;" in line 20, after the word "sell," to insert "any trees;" and in the same line, after the word "improvement," to strike out "cutting any," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture, to secure and protect for all time the big trees scientifically known as Sequoia washintoniana, is hereby empowered, in his discretion, to obtain for the United States the complete title to any or all of the following-described lands in the State of California: In township 4 north, range 15 east, Mount Diablo meridian, the northeast quarter of section 1; in township 4 north, range 16 east, Mount Diablo meridian, the north half of section 6; in township 5 north, range 15 east, Mount Diablo meridian, the southwest quarter of section 14, south half of section 15, north half of section 22, northwest quarter of section 23, and southeast quarter of section 36, and in township 5 north, range 16 east, Mount Diablo meridian, the west half of section 28, the east half and southwest quarter of section 29, the southeast quarter of section 30, all of sections 31, 32, and the northwest quarter of section 33. And such area or areas, as fast as complete title is acquired, shall be known as the Calaveras Big Tree National Forest and shall be administered, protected, and improved by the Secretary of Agriculture to prolong the existence, growth, and promote the reproduction of said big trees, and to make said national forest accessible and convenient for the public: Provided, That the owners of land acquired hereunder shall convey to the United States full title to any of the above-described areas approved for said national forest by the Secretary of Agriculture, the completeness of such title to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior in each case, and shall be reimbursed therefor only in any or all of three ways: They may be given the right to file with the Secretary of the Interior, within sixty days after any such conveyance, selections for an equal area of surveyed, unreserved, unappropriated, nonmineral public lands which shall, if found subject to such lieu selection, be patented to said owners in lieu of the land conveyed, and if any selection is rejected other selections may be made under conditions applicable to the one rejected; or the Secretary of Agriculture may grant to any such conveying owner the right to cut from national forest reserve land an amount of timber and wood, the stumpage value of which is equal to the value of any land conveyed, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture; or any money subscribed privately or appropriated by the State of California for such purpose may be used by the Secretary of Agriculture to pay wholly or in part for any land acquired under the terms of this section: And provided, That the special forest-reserve fund obtained from charges now made for timber, grazing, and for the use of other forest-reserve resources within the State of California is hereby further appropriated and made available, as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, to administer, protect, and improve said Calaveras Big Tree National Forest; and the Secretary of Agriculture may sell any trees for improvement except the big trees within said Calaveras National Forest, the proceeds to be deposited in and become part of said forest-reserve special fund.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not rise to oppose this bill, but to make the suggestion that the Senate has passed a bill creating a forest reserve in the Appalachian and White Mountains. It has gone to the other House, and I think I am not transgressing the rules of the Senate when I say that that bill has been sent to the Committee on the Judiciary of the other body to inquire into its constitutionality. I had never before supposed that the Government of the United States could not constitutionally make a purchase of land for a park, but it seems to be questioned in a certain place. I simply wanted to call the attention of the Senator from California to this fact, which possibly he has looked into, as to whether or not we can constitutionally buy the big trees of California, which I think ought to be taken care of, or whether that proposition will encounter constitutional difficulties in another place.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, this bill makes no appropriation whatever for the purchase of these trees or any land. It simply authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture, under certain conditions, to make exchanges. I think it can be better explained by asking the Secretary to read the letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, on page 1 of the report, which explains the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that be inserted in the RECORD without reading. I do not object to the bill at all.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator, in lieu of taking the time in having the letter read, if I understand him correctly to say that the bill proposes simply to make a certain interchange of land; in other words, that certain public lands shall be exchanged for the land on which these trees stand?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, the Calaveras Big Tree Grove belongs to private individuals. They have asked an exorbitant sum for it in trying to sell it. There is land adjacent to this grove in a Government reservation, and the object of this bill is to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture, in his discretion to make an exchange of timber that is better and more merchantable timber than these big trees the Sequoia gigantea and the Sequoia washingtoniana. The people of California have formed an improvement association and propose to raise a certain sum of money for this purpose and donate it to the purchase of these trees, thus perpetuating them for all time and give the Government title. I should like to have the Secretary read the letter from Secretary Wilson, which I think fully explains the purpose and the provisions of this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested by the Senator from California.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 28, 1907.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with your request made to the Forest Service, I have the honor to report upon the propriety of S. 8117, for the creation of the Calaveras Big Tree National Forest.

During the last field season the Forester caused a survey and complete examination to be made of the areas in California in which the big trees are located. I inclose maps and a report on the investigation, in which the location of the Calaveras Big Tree Grove, the ownership of the land especially desirable for a national forest to protect and prolong the life of the big trees, the number and size of the big trees and other species found with them, and a liberal estimate of the value of these groves have been set forth with care and detail.

Unless the principal owner of these groves will not accept a reasonable offer, I believe it will be possible in one or all of the ways authorized by S. 8117 to procure the title to the desired area without a direct appropriation from Congress. The Forester has received a definite suggestion from a citizen of California that it might be possible to procure by private subscription money amounting to one-third of the necessary purchase price. If this can be brought about it ought to be possible, either under the lieu selection provision or the stumpage exchange authorization, or both, to make up the remaining two-thirds.

I can not express too strongly my feeling that these great national wonders, famed throughout the world, should become the property of the nation and be protected from intentional or accidental destruction as far as possible. It has taken thousands of years to produce many of these trees, and if they were once destroyed no skill or expense could bring similar wonders of creation into existence within a time represented by the known history of the world.

Very truly, yours,

JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

Hon. GEORGE C. PERKINS,
United States Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF KENYON STREET, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 2995) to provide for the extension of Kenyon street from Seventeenth street to Mount Pleasant street, and for the extension of Seventeenth street from Kenyon street to Irving street, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within ninety days after the passage of this act to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary to extend Kenyon street from Seventeenth street to Mount Pleasant street with a width of 80 feet and to extend Seventeenth street from Kenyon street to Irving street with a width of 90 feet; but the entire amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in the proceeding as damages for and in respect of the land to be condemned for said extension, plus the costs and expenses of the proceeding, shall be assessed by the jury as benefits, and nothing in subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of said Code shall be construed to authorize the jury to assess less than the aggregate amount of the damages awarded for and in respect of the land to be condemned and the costs and expenses of the proceeding hereunder, etc.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF OAK STREET NW., DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 31) authorizing the extension of Oak street NW., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: :

That under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, within ninety days after the passage of this act, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension of Oak street northwest from its present terminus east of Center street to Fourteenth street northwest with a width of 50 feet: Provided, however, That the entire amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said proceeding as damages for and in respect of the land to be condemned for said extension, plus the costs and expenses of said proceeding, shall be assessed by the jury as benefits: And provided further, That nothing in said subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of said Code shall be construed to authorize the jury to assess less than the aggregate amount of the damages awarded for and in respect of the land to be condemned and the costs and expenses of the proceeding hereunder.

That there is hereby appropriated, one-half from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages, to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessments for benefits and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the United States in equal parts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUSINESS STREETS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 4118) in relation to business streets in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment in section 1, on page 2, line 7, after the word "business," to insert "street and there exists adjoining such portion a block or more," so as to make the section read:

That the last proviso of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled "An act to vest in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia control of street parking in said District," is amended so as to read as follows: "That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to denominate portions of streets in the District of Columbia as business streets and to authorize the use, on such portions of streets, for business purposes by abutting property owners, under such general regulations as said Commissioners may prescribe, of so much of the sidewalk and parking as may not be needed, in the judgment of said Commissioners, by the general public, under the following conditions, namely: First, where in a portion of a street not already denominated a business street a majority of a frontage not less than three blocks in length is occupied and used for business purposes; second, where a portion of a street has already been denominated a business street and there exists adjoining such portion a block or more in continuation thereof a majority of whose frontage is occupied and used for business purposes; and, third, where a portion of a street has already been denominated a business street and there exists at some point not at the end of such business portion of said street a block or more of adjoining and intersecting street a majority of whose frontage is occupied and used for business purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIM OF CONTRACTORS FOR BATTLE SHIP "INDIANA."

The bill (S. 3126) to carry into effect the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the contractors for building the U. S. battle ship Indiana was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over, under Rule IX, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. At the request of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER] I ask that the bill go over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

INVESTIGATION OF RAILROAD SWITCHES.

The joint resolution (S. R. 24) directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate and report on facing point switches and the appliances for the automatic control of such switches was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with an amendment, on page 2, after line 3, to strike out:

To carry out and give effect to the provisions of this resolution the Commission shall have power to issue subpœnas, administer oaths, examine witnesses, require the production of books and papers, and receive depositions taken before any proper officer in any State or Territory of the United States.

So as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and it is hereby, directed to investigate and report on the use of facing point switches, their number, and the necessity for protecting them on railways in the United States, and also as to the appliances for the automatic control of such switches. For this purpose the Commission is authorized to employ persons who are familiar with the subject, and may use such of its own employees as are necessary to make a thorough examination into the matter.

In transmitting its report to the Congress the Commission shall recommend such legislation as to the Commission seems advisable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPUTY CLERK AT BIG STONE GAP, VA.

The bill (H. R. 14282) to authorize the appointment of a deputy clerk at Big Stone Gap, Va., was announced as the next business in order.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask that the bill be passed over at the request of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

STATE EXPENSES IN WAR WITH SPAIN.

The bill (H. R. 3923) to fix the limitation applicable in certain cases was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the limitation of the act approved April 27, 1904, entitled "An act to amend an act approved March 3, 1899, entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain," approved July 8, 1899,' etc., and for other purposes," and the limitations of the acts of which it is amendatory, shall be January 1, 1910.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CERTAIN LANDS IN FORT HALL, IDAHO, RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 4916) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee to the Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church for certain lands situated in the State of Idaho was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to insert at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That the said patent shall not issue until the Indians of the said reservation shall have given their consent to the grant through their business committee or council in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior shall provide.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent in fee to the board of missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States for certain lands heretofore set apart and used for church purposes, and more particularly described as follows:

The southeast quarter of section 36, township 4 south of range 34 east of Boise meridian, county of Bingham, State of Idaho, containing 160 acres, more or less, being a part of the lands included within the Fort Hall Indian Reservation: Provided, That the said patent shall not issue until the Indians of the said reservation shall have given their consent to the grant through their business committee or council in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior shall provide.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

S. R. GREEN.

The bill (S. 213) for the relief of S. R. Green was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to S. R. Green, of Clackamas County, Oreg., $85, being the amount deposited by him for office fees in connection with the survey of certain mining claims, which survey was duly abandoned.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC PARK ON GEORGETOWN HEIGHTS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 33) to provide a public park on Georgetown Heights, in the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to acquire for a park the tract of land known as Montrose, on Georgetown Heights, containing 16 acres, more or less, at an expense not exceeding $150,000; and for that purpose the sum of $150,000 is appropriated, payable one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half out of any money in the Treasury.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CERTAIN LANDS IN WIND RIVER RESERVATION, WYO.

The bill (S. 4801) granting certain lands in the Wind River Reservation, in Wyoming, to the Protestant Episcopal Church was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It authorizes the enlargement, improvement, and equipment of the light-house depot at Yerba Buena Island, California, at a cost not to exceed $100,000, which sum is appropriated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WHITE RIVER UTES, ETC.

The bill (S. 5038) for the relief of the White River Utes, the Southern Utes, the Uncompahgre Utes, the Tabeguache, Muache, Capote, Weeminuche, Yampa, Grand River, and Uinta bands of Ute Indians, known also as the "Confederated Bands of Ute Indians of Colorado," was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill go over under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. TELLER subsequently said: Mr. President, what became of Senate bill 5038?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was passed to the Calendar under Rule IX at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. TELLER. I desire that the bill may keep its place, if the Senator from Massachusetts does not object.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to its keeping its place on the Calendar, but the bill carries an immense sum of money, and I desire to enter my objection to its being passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], who reported the bill, is not in the Chamber, and I should like to have it keep its place on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be passed over without prejudice.

J. M. BLOOM.

The bill (S. 1204) for the relief of J. M. Bloom was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "one hundred and," to strike out "eighty-nine dollars and twelve cents" and insert "eighteen dollars and eighteen cents," and on page 2, line 4, after the words "one hundred and," to strike out "eighty-nine dollars and twelve cents" and insert "eighteen dollars and eighteen cents," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the account of J. M. Bloom, late postmaster at Clearfield, State of Pennsylvania, to be credited with the sum on $118.18, and that he cause said credit to be certified to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, being on account of loss of $123 in postal funds by robbery of said post-office on the 10th day of February, 1897, and $66.12 for expenses incurred in the effort to apprehend the burglars, it appearing that said loss was without fault or negligence on the part of said late postmaster; and the sum of $118.18 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay said claim.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REIMBURSEMENT OF CERTAIN POSTMASTERS.

The bill (S. 1751) to reimburse Anna B. Moore, late postmaster at Rhyolite, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar, and was read.

Mr. OVERMAN. Was the clerk employed by authority of the Post-Office Department? Let the bill go over under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will go over to the Calendar under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from North Carolina.

The bill (S. 1752) to reimburse Garrett R. Bradley, late postmaster at Tonopah, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance, was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not see why we should reimburse a postmaster for money expended for clerk hire. What right has a postmaster to employ clerks unless he has authority from the Postmaster-General?

Mr. LODGE. That is all stated in the report.

Mr. OVERMAN. If there is any explanation for it, I should like to hear it.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest that the report be read. I think those bills are all right. Unless the Senator from North Carolina has a particular objection to the bill previously passed over, let the report in that case be read.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no particular objection to the bill, but I want to know the facts in the case.

Mr. LODGE. I have no interest whatever in the bills, but I suggest that the report in the case of Anna B. Moore be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the report, submitted by Mr. PENROSE February 21, 1908, as follows:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1751) to reimburse Anna B. Moore, late postmaster at Rhyolite, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill has the approval of the Post-Office Department, as will appear by the following letter:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 4, 1908.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In reply to your letter of the 29th ultimo relative to the merits of Senate bill 1751, "to reimburse Anna B. Moore, late postmaster at Rhyolite, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance," I beg leave to quote from a letter addressed to you by my predecessor under date of January 26, 1907, in answer to yours of January 19, 1907, inclosing a copy of Senate bill 7922 of the same title, introduced in the second session of the Fifty-ninth Congress:

"The post-office at Rhyolite was established in June, 1905, and owing to the rapid increase in the receipts became Presidential on October 1, 1906. The $1,852 claimed by Mrs. Moore represents the amount paid by her for clerical assistance from September 1, 1905, to June 30, 1906, while the office was of the fourth class.

"Under date of October 20, 1905, the postmaster applied to the Department for an allowance effective October 1, 1905, sufficient to enable her to employ one clerk. On January 10, 1906, she renewed her application, suggesting that the allowance be made effective November 1, 1905.

"The only appropriation available for the payment of clerical assistance at the Rhyolite office during the period mentioned was the appropriation for 'unusual business at third and fourth class post-offices.' The appropriation, however, was so far depleted at the time the postmaster at Rhyolite made an application for an allowance that the Department found it impracticable to allow but $30, effective April 1, 1906, to cover the months of April, May, and June, 1906.

"The conditions obtaining at Rhyolite during the nine months when the postmaster made the payments for which she asks reimbursement were extraordinary and the need for clerical assistance was undoubtedly an urgent one, and notwithstanding that the conditions at fourth-class offices are frequently such that the postmaster is obliged to use a portion of his or her own salary to maintain the service, it is hardly reasonable to expect that the postmaster at Rhyolite, whose compensation was derived from cancellations and could not exceed in amount $1,000 per annum, should employ assistance costing at the rate of not less than $4 per day, as was necessary, according to the correspondence on file in the Department, both from the postmaster and from the field representative of the Department whose station is in that section of the country. But it is difficult to determine the precise amount to which the postmaster is justly entitled. Inasmuch as the postmaster at no time during the nine months involved suggested the necessity for employing more than one clerk, and as late as May 25, 1906, mentions the fact that she had employed one since October, 1905, it is believed that the claim should be reduced to the equivalent of $4 per day from October 1, 1905, to June 30, 1906, which would amount to $1,092. This would be in addition to the $30 allowed by the Department for the quarter ended June 30, 1906.

"Therefore I am of the opinion that Mrs. Moore is entitled to relief as contemplated by the bill to the extent of $1,092."

It will be observed from the concluding paragraph of the above letter that this Department is of the opinion that Mrs. Moore is entitled to relief as contemplated to the extent of $1,092.

Faithfully, yours, G. V. L. MEYER.

Hon. BOISE PENROSE,
Chairman Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from North Carolina has no further objection, I suggest that we return to the bill to which the report relates.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1751) to reimburse Anna B. Moore, late postmaster at Rhyolite, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1752) to reimburse Garrett R. Bradley, late postmaster at Tonopah, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance. It proposes to pay the beneficiary $442.14 for the purpose stated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES A. RUSSELL.

The bill (S. 3848) for the relief of James A. Russell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to James A. Russell, for transporting the mail from New Smyrna to Indian River, Florida, from January 1 to March 31, 1861, the sum of $100.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASES OF PENSIONS TO CERTAIN PERSONS.

The bill (H. R. 598) granting an increase of pension to William Poor was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Stephen H. Sanborn, late of Company D, Third Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David Stidd, late of Company D, One hundred and twenty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sarah K. Adams, widow of Benjamin Adams, late of Company C, Thirty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Hiram L. Russell, late of Company I, First Regiment Vermont Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Andrew J. Fillmore, late of Company C, Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Andrew C. Gibson, late of Company L, Fourteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Richard F. Williams, late of United States ships Grampus, Great Western, and Rattler, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel Carter, late of Company M, First Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George Collins, late of Company C, One hundred and ninety-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Lambert, late of Company A, Sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas J. Spencer, late of Company A, First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Light Artillery, second lieutenant Company E, First Regiment Middle Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and Company K, First Regiment Alabama Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Frederick J. Meyer, late of Company M, Fifth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Theodore F. Ray, late of Company F, Seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move to strike out lines 11, 12, 13, and 14 on page 37. The reason for the amendment to the amendment is the death of the beneficiary.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors."

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LE MARS, IOWA.

Mr. SCOTT. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4833) to provide for the erection of a public building at Lemars, Iowa, to report it with amendments. I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds were, in line 8, to strike out "Lemars" and insert "Le Mars" and at the end of the bill to insert:

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults and heating and ventilating apparatus, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office at Le Mars, Iowa, the cost of same not to exceed $75,000. The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Le Mars, Iowa."

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OTTUMWA, IOWA.

Mr. SCOTT. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report favorably the bill (S. 4832) to provide for the erection of a public building at Ottumwa, Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that that bill may now be put on its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause the United States post-office building at Ottumwa, Iowa, to be taken down and a new building to be erected on the site thereof, at a total cost to the Government complete not to exceed $225,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FORT DODGE, IOWA.

Mr. SCOTT. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5709) for extending, repairing, and improving the public building at Fort Dodge, Iowa, to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the site now owned by the Government, at Fort Dodge, Iowa, to suitably extend, repair, and improve the present public building. The building, when completed, shall not exceed in the aggregate the sum of $130,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED PATENT LEGISLATION.

The bill (S. 3970) to revise and amend the statutes relating to patents was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. LODGE. I think this bill and the next one, being the bill (S. 3972) to amend section 4885 of the Revised Statutes, should go over. The Senator in charge of them is not here, and they are very elaborate, complicated measures relating to the patent laws.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Massachusetts, the bills referred to by him will be passed over.

S. R. GREEN.

The bill (S. 212) to reimburse S. R. Green, postmaster of Oregon City, Oreg., for moneys lost by burglary, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to repay to S. R. Green, postmaster at Oregon City, Oreg., $206.40, to reimburse him for key-deposit funds lost by burglary.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS TO CERTAIN PERSONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5255) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which were, on page 2, to strike out lines 11 to 14, inclusive; on page 3, to strike out lines 9 to 13, inclusive; on page 4, line 11, after the word "volunteers," to insert "war with Mexico;" on page 5, to strike out lines 10 to 13, inclusive; on page 5, to strike out lines 18 to 20, inclusive.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 5110) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent children of such soldiers and sailors, which was, on page 14, line 22, to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty."

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4376) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows of such soldiers and sailors, which was, on page 12, to strike out lines 11 to 14, inclusive.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

RECLAMATION OF SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS.

The bill (S. 4855) appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States to the construction of works for the drainage or reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands belonging to the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. TELLER. That is a pretty important bill. It involves some questions that I think ought to be discussed.

Mr. LODGE. The bill should be passed over.

Mr. FLINT. It seems to me if one would be kind enough to read the report there certainly could not be any objection to such a meritorious measure.

Mr. TELLER. It is a bill dealing with the public lands of the several States. It establishes a new principle. It may be a proper one; I do not mean now to say that it is not; but for that reason I do not believe it can ever be considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. LODGE. I think it is rather a large bill to be considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. TELLER. I think it will present some constitutional difficulties. At all events, it can not be properly considered under the eighth rule. Therefore I object. Let it go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. FLINT. I ask the Senator to let the bill retain its place on the Calendar.

Mr. TELLER. No; I do not want to discuss it under the eighth rule. I want it to be where it can be properly discussed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX at the request of the Senator from Colorado.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT APPLETON, WIS.

Mr. STEPHENSON. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. 2317) for the erection of a public building at Appleton, Wis.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments, on page 1, line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five," and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out the remainder of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected on a site already purchased by the Government a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices in the city of Appleton and State of Wisconsin, the cost of said building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $75,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LODGE. Let us have the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts demands the regular order.

DAM ACROSS CHOCTAWHATCHEE RIVER, ALABAMA.

The bill (H. R. 6195) to authorize A. J. Smith and his associates to erect a dam across the Choctawhatchee River in Dale County, Ala., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGISTRATION OF TRADE-MARKS.

Mr. LODGE. The next three bills on the Calendar are the bill (S. 3973) to amend the laws of the United States relating to registration of trade-marks; the bill (S. 3971) to amend section 4896 of the Revised Statutes, and the bill (S. 3969) to amend the laws of the United States relating to the registration of trade-marks.

These are very important bills, and they can be passed over. The Senator in charge of them is absent. I ask that they may go over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bills will go over without prejudice.

LANDS IN OTOE AND MISSOURIA RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 5212) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey by fee-simple patent certain lands in the Otoe and Missouria Reservation, Okla., to the Society of Friends was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMPLOYMENT OF CHILD LABOR IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 4812) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let the bill go over under Rule IX.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust the Senator will not insist upon that.

Mr. NELSON. I think it is a bill too important to pass by unanimous consent.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it retain its place.

Mr. NELSON. Very well; that is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, retaining its place.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will suggest if it shall become necessary to move in the near future to take up the bill for consideration I shall make such a motion. I think it is very important legislation, and we ought to consider it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to say that I am not opposed to the bill. I desire certain amendments made, which I think ought to be made to it. I want to protect newsboys, particularly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to state to the Senator from New Hampshire at this time that I trust he will not ask for the consideration of the bill during my absence, if that will be convenient to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall certainly not do so, Mr. President, but I will venture to make the suggestion that I trust the Senator from Indiana will not embarrass it by offering the amendment he did last year, which was so broad that I am sure it will defeat the purpose of those of us who desire this legislation.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not think I can agree with the Senator's view. I do not see that the opportunity to vote on any amendment would embarrass the measure itself. However, that is a question we can discuss when the matter comes up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. McLAURIN. As I came into the Chamber a few moments ago, I thought I heard something said about the bill (S. 48) to reimburse depositors of the late Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and I understood that the bill went over under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It retains its place on the Calendar.

Mr. McLAURIN. Under the order, retaining its place on the Calendar, will it be debated under the five-minute rule?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Yes; under Rule VIII.

Mr. McLAURIN. If it is not too late to object, I wish to object. I do not think the bill ought to be limited to five minutes debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill went to the Calendar under Rule IX. Then at the request of a Senator it was restored to its place on the Calendar under Rule VIII, and if it comes up for consideration under Rule VIII it can only be debated under the five-minute rule.

Mr. McLAURIN. If it is not too late, I object to its being restored to the Calendar under Rule VIII.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would state to the Senator that by consent, of course, there can be longer debate than five minutes under Rule VIII, but by the strict terms of the rule debate is limited to five minutes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. McLAURIN. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I was only going to say that the bill was retained on the Calendar under Rule VIII at the request of the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT], who is not now in the Chamber, and of course the Senator can send it to the Calendar under Rule IX, whenever it comes up, by a single objection.

Mr. McLAURIN. With that understanding, I make no further objection to it now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

PAYMENTS IN LAND ENTRIES.

The bill (H. R. 15660) to provide for the repayment of certain commissions, excess payments, and purchase moneys paid under the public land laws was announced as next in order.

Mr. CULBERSON. That seems to be a very important bill. I ask that it may go over. I do not insist that it shall go to the Calendar under Rule IX particularly, but——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will say to the Senator that it is a very important bill, and the explanation of it is very simple and very short.

Mr. CULBERSON. I notice that it gives almost unlimited authority to the Secretary of the Interior for refunding money in certain cases.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; I will state what is the situation, if the Senator will allow me before formal objection is made.

Up to a short time ago payments made for lands, erroneously or otherwise, until the final adjudication of them in the General Land Office, were retained in the local offices. When it was found that moneys had been erroneously paid, without fraud upon the part of the entrymen, the moneys were then in a position where they could be repaid to the entryman.

The accumulation of these moneys in the hands of the local officers became so great that their bonds would not protect the amount. So a new practice was inaugurated—that of turning the money into the Treasury of the United States. There is no way now by which a man who has paid an excessive amount or an amount through error in the Land Office itself, can recover the money, nor can the Secretary of the Interior refund it, except by special act of Congress. The bill is to cover those cases, and only those cases. There is a very short letter from the Secretary of the Interior covering the matter. It is in the House report, if the Senator will care to have it read.

Mr. CULBERSON. There is no report accompanying the bill. I should like to look into it further. I insist that it shall go over.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have no objection, if the Senator desires to examine it further.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

MINING TECHNOLOGY BRANCH.

Mr. DICK. I ask the consent of the Senator for the restoration to its place on the Calendar of the joint resolution (S. R. 35) to provide for a mining technology branch in the Geological Survey.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks that Senate joint resolution No. 35 be restored to its place on the Calendar under Rule VIII. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. Who asked to have the joint resolution go over under Rule IX.

Mr. DICK. The senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

Mr. LODGE. He is in his seat.

MEMORIAL TO JOHN WESLEY POWELL.

The bill (S. 4469) for the erection of a memorial to John Wesley Powell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that there shall be erected on the brink of the Grand Canyon, in the Grand Canyon Forest Reserve, in Arizona, a memorial to the late John Wesley Powell, in recognition of his distinguished public services as a soldier, explorer, and administrator of Government scientific work; and appropriates for the purpose of procuring and erecting said memorial, with a suitable pedestal if necessary, $5,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING IN BEATRICE, NEBR.

The bill (S. 1073) to authorize the extension and enlargement of the post-office building in the city of Beatrice, Nebr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the post-office building in the city of Beatrice, Nebr., to be extended and enlarged at a total cost to the United States of not to exceed $50,000, including all necessary changes in, additions thereto, alterations of, and repairs to the present building, and of the heating and plumbing systems therein, and drainage and approaches thereto, which may be incident to such extension and enlargement of said building.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to enter into contracts within the limit of cost hereby fixed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIM OF FIRE INSURANCE COMPANIES.

The bill (S. 1368) to reimburse certain fire insurance companies the amounts paid by them for property destroyed by fire in suppressing the bubonic plague in the Territory of Hawaii in the years 1899 and 1900 was announced as next in order.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Texas.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN GEORGIA.

Mr. CLAY. The next in order on the Calendar are the bill (S. 2736) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of La Grange, Ga., and the bill (S. 2732) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Cordele, Ga. Let the bills be passed over for the present, retaining their places on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bills will be passed over without prejudice, retaining their places on the Calendar.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKING LAWS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3023) to amend the national banking laws.

Mr. ALDRICH. It was my purpose this morning to request the Senate to fix a time for taking a vote on the bill, but I was asked by the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] yesterday, he having been ill for two weeks, to defer that request until later in the week. In compliance with his suggestion I do not make the proposition at this time, but give notice that I shall ask the continued consideration of the bill at an early day.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I would suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich	Cullom	Hopkins	Rayner
Allison	Curtis	Johnston	Scott
Ankeny	Dick	Kean	Smith
Bacon	Dillingham	Knox	Smoot
Bankhead	Dixon	Lodge	Stephenson
Beveridge	Dolliver	McCreary	Stone
Bourne	Du Pont	McCumber	Sutherland
Brandegee	Elkins	McLaurin	Taylor
Briggs	Flint	Martin	Teller
Brown	Foster	Nelson	Tillman
Bulkeley	Frazier	Newlands	Warner
Burrows	Fulton	Nixon	Warren
Carter	Gallinger	Owen	Wetmore
Clark, Wyo.	Gamble	Overman	Whyte
Clarke, Ark.	Gore	Paynter
Clay	Guggenheim	Perkins
Culberson	Heyburn	Piles

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Sixty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the disgrace of this age, in my opinion, is the inefficiency of our monetary system. The progress of the world during the last century has been phenomenal. It is keeping clearly within demonstrable facts to assert that we have progressed further during the last century than during the previous five hundred years of the world's history. Mechanical inventions and appliances have given us a new industrial and commercial world, while instantaneous communication, rapid transportation, and universal education have given us a new intellectual world. Progress along every line of human activity has forced a corresponding progress along every other line.

There is one important exception to this general progress. It can scarcely be said that our monetary system has shown any material improvement for several centuries. It certainly has not kept apace with advancement along industrial and commercial lines. Never having had a stable foundation—subject to great variations in its production, affected enormously by the balance of trade—there is, of course, some excuse for the failure of the circulating medium of the world to meet either the exigencies of trade or the demands of justice.

But the real wonder is that human ingenuity, with its phenomenal advancement along every other line of science, has never evolved a proper solution of the monetary question—has utterly failed to invent a new and reliable system, or to patch up the old one so as to make it work satisfactory results.

Mr. President, a currency that shrinks in its purchasing value during every day of the year, and which during the last ten years of these prosperous times has depreciated at least 4 or 5 per cent annually, is not a fit currency for any civilized community.

We have been continually experimenting with the subject until we have demonstrated that many theories were pernicious and dangerous, but have never succeeded in approximating a perfect system. The knowledge gained has been of a negative value only. We have learned by experience what not to do, but have failed to learn what to do to maintain either financial safety or financial integrity.

It has always been preached to us that the great financiers of the country, as they are called, the great captains of industry, were better qualified to determine these intricate questions of finance than those of us who are said to be outside of its golden circle. But, Mr. President, if observation and the history of the last ten years count for anything, it has demonstrated that these great bankers and financiers have wandered further from the line of safety in their intense desire to get rich quickly than the ordinary business men of the country.

The reasons of this are quite apparent. We can no longer regard any one of these great banking institutions as a separate entity, operating entirely for its own exclusive benefit and that of its stockholders and to the exclusion of outside interests. Every year they are becoming more and more connected with industrial promoters and managers of large interests. The stockholders of other industries, the great commercial and transportation lines, are also stockholders of these great banks, and vice versa.

They are becoming so interwoven with other interests that they can no longer be said to be separate entities, but form a component part of one great whole.

They have used the banks to assist them in unloading their promoters' and their irrigated stock. The banks have given credit on these stocks on speculative values as such values have been upheld in the exchanges by the gambling instincts of the public or by the delusion that our abnormal prosperity of the past few years would continue without abatement.

We have had a most novel experience during the last few months, novel in that while heretofore monetary crises have been brought about by the distrust of the public culminating in that panicky sentiment which is always followed by a run on the banks; in the present instance the banks themselves have been panic-stricken while the public have shown most commendable common sense and forbearance.

The banks themselves have done everything in their power to invite discredit in the future, to create the very distrust which they have been in the habit of ardently denouncing. But so far they have failed to stampede the people. They have said to every depositor in the country, present and prospective: "Place your money with us and when times are easy and you do not need it it will be subject to your check, but when credit is bad and you do need it, you can not get it."

The banks, after having given a credit of about $10,000,000,000 on about $1,000,000,000 of available circulating medium, have been attempting by hoarding and by keeping their money within their vaults to secure an amount to pay off this entire indebtedness, assuming that one dollar would pay off the ten dollars of their indebtedness and forgetting that the only way that one dollar will ever pay ten dollars' liability is to keep that one dollar moving.

I sometimes become suspicious, Mr. President, of what we call "expert knowledge" upon any given subject under consideration, for the reason that the expert, in his close analysis of all the intricate questions which beset him, is too liable to forget all about the great governing principle which we can all understand and comprehend. So in the consideration of any subject, which by reason of its ramifications becomes exceedingly complex, I like to get hold of these great first principles which we can thoroughly and at all times understand, and to hold onto them. Our newspapers, during the critical period of our financial history of the last few months, made the demand—a demand that they have always made under like conditions—that we expand the volume of our circulating medium; in other words, that we debase the currency temporarily for the purpose of meeting an abnormal condition. They said that if we could increase the volume of our currency three or four hundred million dollars it would enable the great concerns to wipe out the debts which were demanding immediate payment; and when those debts were paid, the money could be again contracted and we could go on again in the old lines of business. Not having such a bill as is proposed here to help us out of that situation, the country was forced to adopt another mode of procedure, and this result was to be brought about by a very simple device: The Secretary of the Treasury, already having placed Government money to the extent of about $135,000,000 in the several banks of the United States, deposited about $60,000,000 more.

Then he proposed to issue $50,000,000 of 2 per cent interest-bearing bonds. The banks could then take $50,000,000 of this $60,000,000, which had already been deposited with them, purchase those bonds, and issue upon them a currency to the amount of $50,000,000. The Government would then again place back $40,000,000 out of this $50,000,000 which it received in the purchase of these bonds, and thus, without the expenditure of one single cent, the banks of the country would suddenly find themselves in the possession of $100,000,000, which they could loan at exceedingly remunerative rates of interest during those precarious times.

That such a scheme is unjust, everyone will admit; that it may have been the only safe remedy at that time we will concede, and excuse it upon that ground. In fact, I think it was the only remedy to prevent enormous losses to the people of the country, and that the whole country was not overwhelmed by a great financial catastrophe was without doubt due to the timely and energetic action of the Secretary of the Treasury.

These papers are, of course, correct in a sense. There is a money stringency whenever money ceases to move and whenever the day of payment of credit arrives, and the greater the amount of credit the greater the stringency. A man who has property worth $10,000 under ordinary circumstances, but who, in a period of eight or ten years of exceedingly prosperous times and good prices, has made that property net him 50 per cent more income than before and who has therefore placed an additional value of 50 per cent upon his property, has borrowed $15,000 upon it, can fully understand when that debt becomes due and conditions return to the normal and he must go back to the old normal income, that there is a stringency in the money market of the country. And he naturally thinks that if he can increase the quantity of money 50 per cent he may be able to liquidate without loss. That is just exactly the condition of the country to-day—an inflated valuation of our properties and too great an issuance of stock or bonds for the income-bearing value under normal conditions.

When we began to return to normal conditions the owners who, to a great extent, were speculators got caught with property on hand. They were unable to sell it to the public, and thereby spread the burden of loss over a larger number and trouble followed.

Mr. President, we are now again brought face to face with the arguments that were made in 1896. The followers of the Nebraska statesman declared that there was not enough money in circulation to do the business of the country. The followers of McKinley declared that there was not enough business in the country to keep the money in circulation. Bryan said: "We want more money, and then there will be work for all." McKinley said: "We want more work, and then there will be enough money for all. Without work the present volume of currency can not circulate." The two great parties went to battle upon that simple issue. The American people, in their good judgment, supported the McKinley principle, the sound-money principle, and that principle is just as sound to-day as it was twelve years ago.

I am opposed to any expansion of the currency of the country at any time of the year or under any conditions whatever, unless it be to save the country against some great catastrophe. There can be no such thing, Mr. President, as an expansion of our currency one month, or two months, or three months, or any other number of months without causing more or less injustice to some of the American people.

A few months ago the country was in an exceedingly prosperous condition. All of our mills were in operation; the manufacturers were receiving orders for goods beyond their capacity to fill them; our merchants were stocking up for a good winter's business, and money could be obtained in any of the banks of the United States at reasonable figures. There was enough money then, Mr. President, in the United States to do all of the business of this country. Then, suddenly following a run upon a single banking institution in the city of New York, every one of the leading banks of the country immediately closed its doors so far as performing the usual functions of a bank is concerned. They refused to pay out money which they had on deposit; they refused to make loans upon the very best security which could possibly be offered them; and we were immediately met with a cry for an increased currency to meet those conditions. The money available for circulation during that time was the greatest that it had ever been during all the previous years of our prosperity.

I want to call attention briefly to the conditions which are shown by the reports from the Treasury Department for the last few months. On October 1, 1907, just prior to the panic, we had in circulation $2,812,133,694. That was a per capita circulation of $33.08. On December 1, when perhaps the panic was at its worst, we had in circulation $2,869,074,255, or a per capita of $33.63. On January 1 the amount was increased until it had reached $3,078,989,298, or $35.48 per capita. On February 1 it amounted to $3,094,362,699, or $35.65 per capita.

It will therefore be seen, Mr. President, that we have been increasing our volume of currency which is available for the business of the country during all this period. From October 1 to February 1, it increased $282,229,000, or more than one-half of the entire amount that it is proposed to increase the volume of currency under the Aldrich bill.

Mr. President, if that amount of the influx of money from abroad and from the Treasury of the United States was insufficient to relieve the industrial condition of this country, what hope have we in the proposition that adding $500,000,000 is going to seriously affect our industrial condition? It seems to me that it demonstrates one thing, and that is that the expanding of our currency does not expand the confidence of the public in American securities. As we are led by our argument to conclude that an expansion of currency is not the remedy, then we are led by the logic of that conclusion to infer that we will have to find some other means of getting our money into active circulation. It is but fair to say, however, for the author of this bill, that he does not pretend to claim that it will act as a tonic to our industrial conditions, but that it will meet an exigency in the matter of runs upon banks in a particularly precarious period, which may arise at some time in the future. For that particular purpose we might be inclined to support it. That would be the only basis in the world, it seems to me, upon which it could invite the support of anyone, namely, that it would prevent a worse condition, which might happen without it.

Due to the cause which I have mentioned, the closing of the banks to the ordinary business of the country, money ceased for a time to perform its functions, and the remedy of currency expansion was immediately proposed. In other words, it was proposed to increase the stock of money a sufficient amount to pay off pressing debts without the use of that which is now stagnant. The weakness of the proposition is that it does not propose a means of moving the stagnant currency. It is claimed that men are now being discharged from employment at the rate of a great many thousands a month and that by next spring there will be a quarter of a million laboring men out of employment, and all the money that we could put into the banks would not change those particular conditions.

That the scheme that was devised was unjust every thinking man must necessarily admit. That it was necessary under conditions as they then existed, Mr. President, we may well admit, and we excuse the action of the Secretary of the Treasury for that reason. I believe myself it was absolutely necessary, and I believe that the action of the Treasury Department—although I may have some doubts of its legality—saved this country from a great catastrophe. What we are now interested in is to find some means of avoiding a repetition of that particular result. We can not do it by expanding our currency.

Mr. President, I read a good many years ago that the Chinese Government, ascertaining that the poor people did not have enough money to buy the goods of the country, ascertaining that the goods, in other words, were too high and money too dear, concluded that they would issue some cheaper money. They thereupon issued iron money, instead of their old brass and silver coin. Immediately the prices of all goods rose to an amount equal to the issue. They made a second attempt, and again the prices of goods went up to meet the extra issue. They made a third attempt, and the prices of goods went up to the very skies; and when at last it required two Chinamen to carry enough money to buy soup for one, it was apparent that their particular scheme of relieving the country was not a successful one.

It will not be any better, Mr. President, in this country. We never seem to thoroughly impress ourselves with the lesson that it is the activity and not the bulk of money that pays debts; that a dollar that is stagnant pays nothing; that a dollar in active operation may pay ten dollars in a single day. When the whole American people become impressed with that simple proposition in finance and understand and thoroughly digest it, we will not have the clamor of the great press of the country, every time we have a financial flurry, for a debasement of the currency of the country.

I repeat, Mr. President, that there can be nothing but injustice result by adding to the circulating medium of the country suddenly and only for a few months. Other things being equal, the volume of money and the price of a commodity will always balance each other. There is as close a relation between the volume of the currency in the United States and the price of the great articles of commerce as there is between the water in two vessels so connected that the fluid may pass unobstructed from one to the other. One will always level itself exactly with the other. Cheaper methods of production and varying demands may, within this general law, advance or lessen the comparative values of specific articles, but will not change the rule as applicable to the commercial commodities of the country taken as a whole. This being true, our volume of currency ought to maintain an approximately fixed relation to something. That something must necessarily be either bulk of material property or population, and as bulk of property acquired and being acquired changes rapidly, varies greatly from year to year, and is out of all proportion to the number of individuals owning it, it follows that the nearest approach to a just, fair, and honest system of currency would be one whose increase in volume would keep exact pace with increase in population. The per capita available volume of currency should remain about stationary. If we compare the increase per capita, for instance, in the volume of the currency for the past ten years with the increase in the price of our commodities within that period, we will find that the one exactly balances the other. It may be that the price of the bare necessities of life have not kept pace with the advance in the volume of the currency per capita, but when we take into consideration all the things which advanced civilization produces for the people, and admitting that each one of us is entitled to his proportionate share according to his means of purchasing it, it will be found that the rule of equilibrium still holds good.

The bill which is now before the Senate, Mr. President, is in response to a strong demand over the entire country for an elastic currency. While I am not generally in favor of any elasticity in our currency, believing that such elasticity is absolutely pernicious, and almost as bad as an elastic conscience, nevertheless I can conceive that, if our monetary conditions are unchanged and if our industrial conditions are unchanged, there will necessarily arise a condition again that will demand that elasticity in order to prevent a great catastrophe to the country. For that single purpose, and that alone, and influenced somewhat, I may admit, by the universal demand of the people of the United States for an elastic currency, I am willing to vote for this bill, with some amendments which I think should be made for the purpose of answering the demand of the public and meeting those conditions if they shall arise.

The only excuse for a measure of this character, which necessarily carries with it an injustice, is that it will prevent a greater injustice. I want to impress upon the Senate the injustice of the expansion of our currency under any conditions. Who lose and who gain by the expansion? No matter whether it is for one month or whether it is for ten months, every payee of a contract based upon present values will necessarily lose by it.

It is safe to say, Mr. President, that every depositor in every savings bank in the country will lose by this expansion. It is also true that every man who pays for an insurance policy will necessarily lose by an expansion of our currency, and, in my humble opinion, the reason that the great insurance companies of the country have been able to maintain an unimpaired credit in the face of what the world understands to be, and what I think are, extravagances, and great extravagances in their conduct, is due to the fact that a twenty-year policy is paid in a 50-cent dollar, so far as its purchasing value is concerned. A dollar which ten years ago represented in the lowest channels of labor eight hours of the energy of one man with the spade or the pick will represent only half as many hours of the same expended energy to-day.

Who else suffers? Every laboring man necessarily suffers. The merchant and the manufacturer can change the price tag upon his goods overnight to meet any sudden expansion of our currency. The laboring man can secure a raise in his wages only after extreme and long-continued effort, and during the time that elapses between the sudden expansion of our currency, and the consequent rise in the price of all goods which he must purchase, and the raise of his wages he necessarily loses enormously.

The next man who loses, Mr. President, is the man who contracts in the present condition of the money market. If I agree to sell 1,000 bushels of wheat which I own, and which constitute my asset, to another for $1,000, which constitutes his particular asset, and then the Government comes in the very day that that sale is to be consummated and immediately dilutes his dollars so as to make them $1,500, can anyone deny that that has been a fraud upon me? All of the business conditions of the country are conditions of trade. If one-half of the American people agree during the next month to sell to the other half $2,500,000,000 worth of property which, approximately, is the amount of the circulating medium of the United States and which is also approximately the amount that does pass from the one one-half to the other during a single month, that if you dilute that money $500,000,000 and make $3,000,000,000 out of $2,500,000,000, can any man say that has not operated as a fraud upon those who must accept that diluted money for their property?

It seems to me, Mr. President, that it is unjust that we should accept this bill unless upon such conditions that it will not be able to operate for more than from a month to two months during the year, so that our financial system may immediately get back to normal conditions.

Mr. President, what is the real cause of the panic we have had? What is the remedy? Admitting that financial crises are not due to the stringency of money, to what condition are they due? The answer is quite a simple one. They are due to the expansion of the values of all classes of American securities beyond their inherent value. That is the cause that is back of these panics, and back of that, you may say, is the weakness of our human nature—weakness in the matter of its overzealous desire to get rich without the expenditure of time or money. We can not remedy the defects and imperfections of human nature, but we can legislate so as to remedy the conditions upon which those peculiar characteristics may operate, and thereby prevent to a considerable extent the disastrous consequences which otherwise would naturally follow.

It is said that 90 per cent of all our business is done on credit, and it is truthfully said also that a proper confidence is absolutely essential for business credit. If we will consider the reverse of this—which proposition is equally true—that a proper credit is essential to the confidence of the people, we will have taken our first step, and a long step, toward remedying the conditions which we have had to meet during the last few months.

If A has invested in a manufacturing plant $100,000, and that plant has averaged him a net income over and above the expenses for say fifteen years, of $7,000, the plant and business will safely carry $100,000 of bonds, or in lieu of that $100,000 of stock. Any bank can safely give credit of 75 to 90 per cent of the face value of such stock or bonds. Whenever the bank desires to realize on this stock, if the debtor is unable to pay, there will be found thousands of persons who will be glad to take it at its face. But if the owner of this business during the last ten years of abnormally profitable times has increased the capital stock or the bonded indebtedness to $300,000, and 75 to 90 per cent credit is secured upon that, it can only be sold at an enormous sacrifice. Speculation, the efforts of promoters supported by the banks, may for a short time hold up speculative values, but sooner or later these values will reduce themselves to a level with earning capacity under ordinary conditions, and some one must lose. This is the present condition throughout the eastern portion of the country.

That is exactly the condition which resulted just previous to the panic in New York. Swollen securities could not be immediately sold. They were held by the banks, and the money had been used to float some great project. The securities which embarrassed the banks were not the good securities that have been selling at a fair price for years, because they have always brought, under normal conditions and even under these conditions, a fair sum; but it was that class of securities of which the public itself was suspicious. The public believed, and honestly believed, that these conditions could not continue indefinitely, and they were looking for this cramped condition when the time of the payment of credit should arrive, and those banks which were overloaded with those swollen stocks were unable to dispose of them, and the result we all know.

During these years of unexcelled prosperity we, as a people, have forgotten the one truth—that all excessive prosperity is abnormal and must come to an end. We have builded hopes upon the theory not only that this prosperity must continue, but that it must increase as well. We have issued stocks and bonds upon our lighting plants, our street railways, and other property two or three times in excess of the first cost, depending upon the prosperity of the public to make the business pay a dividend upon the excessive increase.

Mr. President, the most that can be said against these policies of the Government which have brought about a condition of speculation during the past ten years is that they have made the country too prosperous; that they have made it so prosperous that it has incited men to speculation; they have made it so prosperous that we have had a balance of trade of $500,000,000 a year in our favor, making $5,000,000,000 in the last ten years that have come from across the ocean and have been piled up on this side. It has filled the banks to overflowing. It has raised the value of all classes of property. It has infused the speculative spirit into all of our American citizens, and the result is that shrewd men, taking advantage of these conditions, have been able to amass mighty fortunes and to a certain extent to control many of the industries upon which the people of the United States are dependent.

Mr. President, we all know when things go wrong the first impulse is to place the blame on someone. So, when certain lines of business, some of whose methods had been rebuked by the President, were having trouble in securing credit, they naturally placed upon him the responsibility for their woes, forgetting that every thinking man in the country has for several years past been prophesying just such a condition when the day of payment of the immense credits should arrive and when there would be a halt in our enormously prosperous conditions.

Those who are against his policies declare that his acts and words have so destroyed confidence in American securities as to paralyze that credit so essential to business development and prosperity. There is no foundation whatever for this charge. That confidence has been shaken must be admitted. But the reasons are the well-known inflation of all values and the growing feeling that we are advancing at too rapid a pace for safety. Nor can we lose sight of the influence of lurid and sensational journalism upon which we have been fed for several years, publications which have exaggerated all the bad and minimized all the good in the great business concerns of the country.

There are many reasons outside of any assertions made by the President of the United States why the public are suspicious of the conditions as they exist to-day. One is the overvaluation of all property. The other is the sensational and the lurid articles that we have been fed on through the press of the country and the great magazines for the last six months.

When we place side by side the declarations of the President of the United States in his efforts to protect the business of the country against unlawful acts with his declarations in favor of the high character of our American securities and American business, we can but have a renewed faith in the industrial future of the United States. They who are opposed to that policy declare that it threatens to destroy the remunerative employment of capital. I want to undertake to refute that proposition by a single paragraph in the last message of the President to Congress, and every message has been replete with the same character of utterances. He says:

> In fixing the charges of our railroads, I believe that, considering the interests of the public alone, it is better to allow too liberal rather than too scanty earnings, for, otherwise, there is a grave danger that our railway development may not keep pace with the demand for transportation.

Is there anything there that threatens the remunerative employment of the railroads of the country if they should be placed more or less under Government control?

They say that his messages discredits the business of all our great exchanges. Let that same message answer again that proposition. He says:

> The great bulk of the business transacted on the exchanges is not only legitimate, but is necessary to the working of our modern industrial system, and extreme care would have to be taken not to interfere with this business in doing away with the "bucket-shop" type of operation.

Does not this answer that charge?

They say he attacks property and wealth. I answer that with another paragraph from the same message of the President. He says:

> Under no circumstances would we countenance attacks upon law-abiding property or do aught but condemn those who hold up rich men as being evil men because of their riches.

And further:

> Sweeping attacks upon all property, upon all men of means, without regard to whether they do well or ill, would sound the death knell of the Republic.

If the press of the country would give one-half of the attention and space to these great declarations of the Executive in favor of American securities and American finance and American business and industries that they give to the few words of condemnation against some of the evils, there would be little cause to complain of the utterances of the President of the United States.

Mr. President, we can not change human nature. It is doubtful whether the evil which is sought to be corrected by this very bill may not be accentuated by it. If the knowledge that there is $500,000,000 which can be drawn on at any time to meet any run upon banks will have a tendency to eliminate the timidity and the suspicion of holders of bank certificates or those having deposits in them, will not the same knowledge tend to give a new and effective support to the speculative spirit which in time may consume the entire $500,000,000, and at the end of that time we find a demand for at least another $500,000,000?

I do not think there is any immediate danger of that, because I do not believe it is possible for us to continue times as prosperous as we have had them in the last ten years, and I believe there has been a lesson which will check speculation on the part of the American public. I also believe that before the time arrives to test the efficiency of this measure we will have probably found some means to deal not only with this everlasting overcapitalization, but also improve our general monetary system.

What is the remedy, then, against these panics? Mr. President, the remedy against panics and runs on financial institutions is the riddance of the country of these puffed and swollen securities. Every bond and every certificate of stock ought to represent approximate face value. But the question is asked, "How will we determine the value of property?" The answer is, "Just as any sensible business man would determine the value of any property, and that is on the basis of its net income." By that I mean its net income under ordinary conditions which may be determined by running over a number of years. The remedy therefore is for the Government of the United States, so far as lies within its power under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, to control the stock issues and the bonds of every industry entering into interstate commerce, and when it has succeeded in eliminating all these overswollen bonds and stocks there will be but little left for the gambling instinct of the American public to act upon.

The Government should see to it that all stocks and bonds and all property that go into the exchanges should as near as possible represent face value. I do not believe in putting the commerce of the country into a strait-jacket, but I do believe in sufficient Government control to insure honesty and fair competition, and the securing of those two essentials—honesty and competition—should measure the extreme limit of governmental interference.

We are compelled to conclude that a remedy of business methods is the only real preventive against a recurrence of the conditions through which we have just passed. That we have not applied a remedy before is due to the one weakness of our dual form of government. The States have allowed the great corporations a free hand in overcapitalization and inflation. The Government will not allow a national bank to start on wind, nor to continue on water. The result is that bank stocks of the country are always regarded as good security; they do not go begging for customers. If anyone has a fear that Government control tends to limit profits, let the bank dividends of the country answer that fear. If I am correctly informed, the average dividend of all the banks for last year was about 13 per cent upon the stock of such banks.

Mr. President, before closing my argument on this bill I want to say just one word with respect to the suggestion that was made yesterday. The argument of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to me was the most startling. As I reduce it down to a simple proposition it means this, that there was no objection to the Government of the United States providing for an emergency currency, but that in accepting securities and in determining what securities it would adopt, the Government should not take the very best possible securities. Why? Because by accepting them it would naturally discredit others that are not so good. I can not imagine how we are going to have a currency based upon other than bonds of the United States Government unless we base it upon the most safe and reliable securities in the United States.

For my part, instead of contracting the class of securities I believe we ought to expand it to the greatest possible extent. I would have no objection to basing it upon certificates for wheat, if it could be done, for the wheat has to be consumed; the world consumes all the grain that is raised, and it is pretty good security. The only trouble is that it is transient. It can not be kept. It passes out of existence at the end of the year. I would have no objection to cotton as security. The world has to have the cotton crop that is raised in the world during the year. The stability of the price of cotton, like grain, is pretty good, but I would not issue currency upon them, because you can not hold on to the property itself. It passes out of existence. I would have no objection to taking in any kind of bonds that would be long-running bonds and would have a fixed valuation in the markets of the country.

I can see no reason why we should not take in the Philippine bonds, which have been described by the Senator from Michigan. The interest on those bonds for thirty years, if I remember rightly, is guaranteed by the Government of the United States, and I can not imagine anything that would have a more stable value than bonds whose interest and income were provided for by the Government.

Now, why should we expand as far as possible the class of securities? Because we want to have those securities in such a condition that any bank can easily get hold of them. We want the class so broad that in times of stringency, when we draw upon the Government for an extra issue, we may have forthcoming immediately that upon which the issue must be based, and we can not afford to so contract and limit the class of securities that they can be controlled by a few banks of the country and the prices sent up to the skies just exactly at a time when we need them the most. Therefore the idea of expansion of the class of securities should be indulged in rather than the idea of contraction.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] says that the acceptance of these bonds for this purpose will have a tendency to give a black eye to or to discredit all other bonds of the same class. It will have a tendency, to a certain extent, to discredit every other kind of security. Any of us would sooner take any kind of security that the Government has placed its stamp upon and says is all right. We would naturally reach for such securities. It will affect all other securities. You and I, if we ever succeed in saving enough money to buy a bond of any kind, would naturally prefer to buy one that the Government has investigated and has said "it is good," without reference to whether it is a railroad bond or whether it is any other kind of a bond.

But I again call the attention of the Senator to the fact that there are six billions of railroad bonds in the United States, and the entire amount accepted could not be over 7 per cent of all the bonds in the country; and many of these railroad bonds may be in other countries. So it could not reach more than 7 per cent, and if half of the issue was based upon municipal bonds, then there would not be over 3½ per cent. I can not believe that accepting as good and putting in the vaults of the Government 3½ per cent of any class of securities is going seriously to affect all of the other 96½ per cent.

Let us admit, as the Senator from Michigan has said, that naturally it will enhance the value of those which the Government will accept. I would sooner accept a note which had been passed upon by a bank than one that I did not know, because I have confidence in the bank. But the fact that I would be compelled under the law to accept only those which a bank had passed upon I would not regard as being detrimental to the interest of other persons who desired to circulate their negotiable paper. It seems to me there is no great reason for fear along that line.

If I follow that a step further I find that about two years ago, if I remember aright, we made provision whereby the Secretary of the Treasury could accept these very bonds, bearing such and such interest and so forth, as a basis for deposits. I do not know whether he accepted any or not, but the fact is that the bill, as I remember in the bill—if I am mistaken I can be corrected—described the character of those securities, and it has not in the slightest degree given a black eye to other securities.

Another complaint is made; and this is a general complaint, I think, of the western banks. I want to say that the banks of my State have written me very little upon this subject. I do not know a single bank in the State which did not continue its business in its accustomed manner during all this time. I am aware that they tried to encourage depositors not to draw too heavily, but they never refused to cash a draft or check drawn upon them, and not a single bank closed its doors during all this time. I think for the most part they are practically satisfied with the present conditions.

But the western banks generally make this complaint, if I am properly informed. They say, "These securities, the municipal bonds and the bonds of railways, are in eastern banks, that eastern banks hold them, and they will not be available if we need them." There is not a single security that you and I would have any confidence in which is not exactly in the same condition. That is absolutely true of municipal bonds. All of the municipal bonds of the Northwest are sent to the East and sold. Nearly all of the railroad bonds are held in the East. We deal more in negotiable instruments in the West, and I do not believe our banks would ask to use those negotiable instruments for the basis of an issue of money. If not, what will they use? It forces them either to say they will have to adopt securities something like those that are mentioned in this bill or else they can not have any security whatever, unless they will go further and say they want a currency based upon assets. That is really what it means. So we are forced in either instance to go to the East for these particular securities.

There is another objection that I have to this bill——

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to make a brief statement in connection with this matter of securities?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. NELSON. I understand it is a fact that out of the one hundred and eighty-five or one hundred and ninety million dollars of outside bonds, not Government bonds, deposited for Government deposits during the recent year, about one hundred and sixty or one hundred and sixty-five millions were actually borrowed; that is, that the institutions which deposited them borrowed them from other institutions, mainly in New York City.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course they will have to be borrowed anyway in the future. There would be nothing gained by these particular banks under this bill if they have to pay out currency for the bonds and then issue currency upon them.

Now, on the question of the priority of lien, I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island why this priority of lien is given to the Government over the depositors. Are we going to secure confidence on the part of the depositors of the country by lessening their security and making it subject to a prior lien? Why does the Government need a priority? The Government has it in its power to say, "I will take this bond or that bond. I will not issue more than 75 per cent upon this or 90 per cent upon the other bond." Then why should it come in and say, in addition to having the absolute control over what security it will accept, the poor man who deposits his money in the bank must be subordinated to the rights of the Government of the United States, which can afford to lose if there is going to be any loss whatever in the transaction?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the securities are as absolutely safe as the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] indicated yesterday, then giving a priority to the Government on those securities could not possibly hurt the depositor, could it?

Mr. McCUMBER. It could not, but the fellow who comes here from another country, and who has been at work and has earned a hundred dollars and put it in the bank will not understand and reason it out quite as fully as the Senator from Indiana. If he has knowledge that somebody else has a prior lien, he at least will understand naturally that that lien is better than his, and that he will be subordinated. So I believe if we are going to inspire confidence and if we do not need this priority, then certainly we should not ask it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The question of a prior lien then is a question of insuring confidence—a mental state—in the issue based on those bonds, is it not?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I hardly think so.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Wait a minute. If it is not, then there is no point to it.

Mr. McCUMBER. No.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It brings us back to the point made by the Senator from Michigan yesterday, that it was not so much a matter of discrimination, as I understood him to say, but a question of the entire adequacy of those securities.

The Senator will remember that he pointed out that on account of many business conditions or political conditions there might be a great deal of difference in the value of these securities from year to year, and even though this does not imperil the currency issued upon it, because the credit of the whole Government is back of the currency, nevertheless it goes to the very question the Senator is raising now—the question of the confidence of this fellow from a foreign shore, not only in the bank in which he has his deposit, but in the securities on which the Government thinks it is necessary to have a prior lien in order to secure the currency issued upon it.

Mr. McCUMBER. The first proposition is that all would have confidence in the issue backed by the Government, whether there was one dollar of property to sustain it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. We have confidence in that anyway, because the Government will take care of it. I am speaking as the average American citizen will look at it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the Senator will not leave that last statement unmodified, because the Senator will see in a minute, if he leaves that statement unmodified, that any currency issued by the Government, regardless of security or whether it has any security, would have the confidence of the people. He at once is in favor of any issue of greenbacks or anything else, Treasury notes, without any security whatever, except the credit of the Government. I do not understand the Senator to take that position. If that proposition of the Senator is true, then, of course, all of this arrangement for securities for a currency issue is not only unnecessary but absurd, and we come back to the greenbacker's proposition of issuing any amount of money we want to issue simply upon the credit of the Government. So I hope the Senator will not leave that unmodified.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think I need to modify my statement in connection with the matter under discussion. I stated that the people of the United States would have confidence in the fact that this money issued for a temporary purpose—this money alone; issued for a temporary purpose, bearing such a rate of interest as to force it back into the hands of the Government, and thereby be destroyed—that the Government would take care of it, and that they would suffer no loss whatever, whether there was any security back of it or not. That is the proposition I desire to make.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks it would affect the purchasing power or the confidence in this emergency currency that we propose to issue if there was written across the face of each note as it left the engraver, "This note is secured by a railroad bond?"

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not, Mr. President. I am free to say I would put no more confidence in it, and I do not think any other American citizen would put more confidence in it than if it said, "This is emergency currency that has got to go back to the Government, and is issued only for the emergency, and the Government is back of it."

Mr. SMITH. Then it would make no difference, if I understand the Senator, if it were to be stated upon that note that it was redeemable by the street railway company of the city of Wichita, Kans.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is not the proposition, of course, but I do not care where it is redeemable, so that finally the Government redeems it. The Government is on a gold basis to-day. The American people understand that it is on a gold basis. They understand that every dollar that will be issued by the Government will be taken care of on a gold basis. That is all the confidence that they need.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to say to the Senator that the condition suggested by the Senator from Michigan can not arise for this reason. This currency is issued by the Government of the United States. The United States simply uses the banks as agencies in getting the currency out. The bill holder looks to the Government and not to a railroad out in Kansas or any other place. He takes this security and he knows it will be safe. In dealing with the note holder, it is a matter between the note holder and the Government.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator from North Dakota will permit me——

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. SMITH. I did not intimate that this currency was to be redeemed by any corporation.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understood that the Senator put simply a supposable case.

Mr. SMITH. I wanted to see how far the Senator would go in relieving these circulating notes from actual security value.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McCUMBER. In just one moment. The Senator understands well that since the world began we have been educated to believe that gold is the basis of all values. That is almost an inherited belief by the people of the world. They have a confidence in gold that is superior to confidence in governments. They know that the gold is the same everywhere in the world and has like values. They know that nothing that is not based upon gold has an equivalent value anywhere else in the world. So if we go into such a broad subject as the basis of human confidence, we have finally got to get back to that simple proposition. But, subject to that, the people have confidence in any money issued by the Government of the United States, because they know that as long as the Government is on a gold basis that money will be as good as gold and interchangeable for gold. I now yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think the Senator made a very hazardous statement, of which I should like to hear from the Senator from Texas, when he said that gold was universally recognized as the sole standard of value. I understood that the Senators on that side of the Chamber but recently had different views on that subject, but I suppose they have changed.

The question I rose to ask the Senator is this: He said, in answer to my question about confidence, that he was speaking directly as to the issue contemplated by this bill, and that the people would have confidence in an emergency currency which had the backing of the Government and was taxed, and so forth. Why would the people have more confidence in an emergency currency than in ordinary currency?

Mr. McCUMBER. They will not have any more confidence in an emergency currency than in any other.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then that takes away the Senator's limitation.

Mr. McCUMBER. They will have confidence in any currency issued by the Government of the United States so long as the Government is upon a gold basis.

Now, Mr. President, there is one other proposition——

Mr. SMITH. If it will not interrupt the Senator——

Mr. McCUMBER. Never at all. I am glad to be interrupted.

Mr. SMITH. The point I was seeking to make is that back of every twenty-dollar gold note there is $20 in gold, and back of every silver certificate there is the amount which pretends to carry on its face an equivalent.

Mr. McCUMBER. And back of every silver dollar which is back of that is gold again.

Mr. SMITH. Is supposed to be the gold again. Now, then, back of the greenback there is the fiat of the Government.

Mr. HOPKINS. There is $150,000,000 of gold reserve.

Mr. SMITH. The point I make is this: If the Senator can go so far as to say that he would merely deposit these railroad bonds without any reference to their market value and keep them there as security, then I say that the people who take the notes of the Government must take them upon the faith of the Government, and they are just about as well off without the security mentioned as they are with it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly, Mr. President; the security is for the benefit of the Government.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Government is the people.

Mr. McCUMBER. But we differentiate between the people who make the deposits and the Government which backs the deposits. In this case we are taking these securities to protect the Government. The Government in its turn will protect the people. The Senator is indulging in a very violent presumption if he assumes that I have suggested that we should take any railroad stock without reference to its value. On the contrary, I want the very best of the railroad stock and the best of all other stock, and all the stock we can possibly get, so that it can not be cornered by any combination of capitalists.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator from North Dakota will pardon me a moment if I ask the Senator from Michigan if he weighed his words when he said the greenback was supported simply by the fiat of the Government. The Senator used the word "fiat."

Mr. SMITH. Well, there is a goodly quantity of gold in reserve also.

Mr. BACON. The difference between a fiat issue and an issue payable upon demand is very great. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, as the Senator well knows, a fiat bill is one in which the Government stamps upon a note the declaration that that is a dollar, but when the Government makes a promise to pay and has $150,000,000 in the Treasury to make that promise good, it can not be said with any proper construction of the word "fiat" to be a fiat bill. There is no such issue by the Federal Government as a fiat bill.

Mr. SMITH. I meant to designate that character of note which stands merely upon the pledge of the Government to redeem it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In what?

Mr. SMITH. In the standard of value that the Government attempts to maintain, and that standard of value with us is gold.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It might or it might not be. Taking the case of greenbacks, what was the promise to pay there? The United States promised to pay the bearer on demand $1, whatever the standard of value at that time might be. The Senator says it might be gold, or it might be something else.

In reference to the criticism of the Senator from Georgia of the Senator from Michigan, everybody understands perfectly well the common expression that the fiat of the Government was the term currently used with reference to the issue of greenbacks, but as a matter of fact it comes very nearly down to that because suppose we would issue $1,000,000,000 of greenbacks and had $150,000,000 to redeem those greenback promises to pay on demand. Of course there would not be any money to pay on demand. It would be practically upon the faith in the solidity of the Government that people took them, and the depreciation of those greenbacks would be measured precisely by the faith of the people in the ability of the Government to redeem them.

So the statement of the Senator from Michigan was not so far wrong after all as a practical matter, although it was incorrect from the very technical point of view.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Michigan will be very greatly obliged to the Senator from Indiana for offering his assistance in this slight controversy which we have. Nevertheless, I stand to the proposition, and I think the Senator from Michigan has put himself in much better light than the explanation of the Senator from Indiana would put him in.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator from Georgia, after having said that the greenback did not depend for its validity as currency merely upon the faith of the people in the Government to redeem it at its full value, is satisfied with that statement of what a greenback is, or what a promise to pay is, or what a demand note is, then I am satisfied the rest of the Senate is satisfied with the Senator's knowledge upon that subject, because the Senator certainly knows—when he thinks a moment or for half a minute—that if we issue an enormous amount of promises to pay and have only one hundred million or one hundred and fifty millions of gold to redeem them, their value as current money does depend upon the faith of the people in the Government to redeem them, and not in any securities at hand.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from North Dakota will pardon me just a moment——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. As far as the Senator from Michigan is concerned, he does not need, I take it, the aid of the Senator from Georgia to thank me for any contribution I may make to this debate. The Senator from Georgia is in the habit of making universal contributions to debate, and no person criticises him for doing so.

Mr. BACON. I am satisfied the Senator from Michigan is so thoroughly grateful to the Senator from Indiana that no assistance from me in that regard is needed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Nor from anyone else.

Mr. BACON. I simply wish to say that upon calling the attention of the Senator from Michigan to his use of the word "fiat," which I thought was not exactly justified, the Senator made a response which I think set him entirely right. It was to the effect that he had used it in a general way, not intending that it should import what the word literally means, fiat; but the explanation and the apology of the Senator from Indiana puts the Senator from Michigan in an entirely different light, as justifying the use of the word as a correct word from the fact that there are not $346,000,000 of gold in the Treasury. Therefore the Senator from Indiana deduces the conclusion that it must be fiat.

Now, Mr. President, I state as a proposition, if I correctly understand the use of the word "fiat," that if there was not a dollar of gold in the Treasury, and if the Government of the United States were to issue $346,000,000 of promises to pay, it would still not be fiat. It would be promises to pay. Everybody knows what "fiat" means. It is a Latin word, which commands a certain thing shall be. Fiat, let it be. It is putting upon a piece of paper an inscription which shall constitute that as money. But whenever there is a promise to pay there is no command that it shall be money. There is simply a promise that upon presentation it will be redeemed, and even if that promise is not redeemed it will not be fiat money, and I do not understand that the Senator from Michigan intended it to be so understood.

Mr. SMITH. With the permission of the Senator from North Dakota, I will say that I used the word as I have qualified it advisedly, but I yield very gracefully to the technical construction of the Senator from Georgia, who is usually correct in his use of words.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, passing out of the kindergarten discussion of finance, I want to consider another proposition that is in this bill. It provides for an emergency currency. That emergency currency bears 6 per cent. The object of that currency is to be used only under grave and apprehensive conditions. It is assumed that that 6 per cent is sufficient to drive it back in a very short time. I am a little doubtful whether it will in some sections of the country. I can not conceive of its being very dangerous times or very close times when money will not demand more than 6 per cent.

Now, this is money in a certain sense. It is borrowed capital, to be sure—that is, borrowed for the purpose of loaning again to pay off debts. It is borrowed, then, from the Government at one-half of 1 per cent a month. It could be loaned out in my

State the year round at 8 and 9 and 10 per cent. It will be profitable for every bank in the State to hold that money and hold it the year round. If it gets out into that State under present conditions, and almost anywhere in the West, it would not be very quickly driven back and out of the channels of trade. Many bankers that I know are paying all the way from 4 to 6 per cent on certificates of deposits where they are held for one year. They can loan that money profitably above 6 per cent a year. So I fear that this money will not be soon driven out of the channels of trade, unless we place upon it a percentage that is so great that it could not afford to be used except in very extreme emergencies. I would not place the interest myself less than 8 or 10 per cent.

I am aware that in the old countries 5 per cent is sufficient to drive the currency back again whenever it is issued as an emergency, but I am aware, also, that the conditions of the Old World differ very materially from the conditions in this country. When you can not afford to pay 10 per cent during the time of an emergency, I do not believe that the conditions are so bad in any part of the country that we need to issue an emergency currency so as to make the money worth less than that.

The idea of this bill is to issue a currency which will get back and out of the channels of trade where it is disastrous to the value of money as soon as it is possible to drive it back, and I would not vote for it under any conditions if I believed that a dollar of it would stay longer than three months in circulation.

Mr. HOPKINS. I suggest to the Senator that that objection can be remedied by an increase each month. Under the bill it is one-half per cent per month. At the end of three months it can be made three-quarters of a cent, and at the end of six months 1 per cent. That certainly would drive it out of circulation.

Mr. McCUMBER. It would in time. I am certainly in favor of raising it by a gradual scale or in the first instance, so it can not stay out and debase all of the balance of the currency of the country.

Now, Mr. President, there is another method of preventing these raids upon the banks. There is another method of securing confidence. There is another method proposed of keeping every dollar of the currency in circulation. That is by a guaranty of all the deposits in our national banks. Is such a scheme feasible? Is it a hardship upon the banks themselves or upon the individuals? I know there is objection against this policy upon the ground that the Government ought not to guarantee private contracts. But I know many Senators who have objected to that feature have even voted in favor of the Government guaranteeing private contracts of very much less value to all the American people than that of securing bank deposits.

Let us take the Philippine railroad bonds. There is a guaranty of the payment of 4 per cent for thirty years, if I remember rightly. I did not vote for it myself, because I did not think it was right. We recount many instances in which the Government, for the benefit of the public, has guaranteed a private contract, and if it can guarantee it for a very few of the public without danger, I can see no reasonable objection to its guaranteeing that which would benefit every depositor in the country, abolish runs upon the banks, and at the same time cost the banks comparatively nothing.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the proposition is not to guarantee absolutely the depositors, but simply to provide a fund out of which those depositors are to be paid.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is the same thing, because in providing for a fund we provide a fund that will be sufficient, or which we believe will be absolutely sufficient to guarantee the deposit. So it does not make any difference whether it is done directly by the Government or whether it is indirectly done by a tax upon the banks.

Now, why can it not be done? What objection is there to it? What cost would it be to the banks themselves? What wonderful benefit it would be to the banks and to the business of the country, every thinking man must comprehend.

In October, 1907, there was $4,319,035,402 on deposit. Now, suppose that we tax the average yearly deposit of each bank one-thirtieth of 1 per cent. That certainly is a mere bagatelle; and it would produce $1,439,678 for a fund to guarantee the payment of all the deposits.

The annual loss by reason of runs on banks and from all other causes from 1865 to 1903 was an average of $851,000 per year. That is only one-fiftieth of 1 per cent of the entire amount of the deposits. The average deposit during this time was $1,281,147,136. The amount of loss during those years was one-sixtieth of 1 per cent of the entire bank deposits.

Now, remember, Mr. President, that if we secure these deposits we will eliminate that cause which has forced the banks into bankruptcy, the runs upon the banks, and which is probably responsible for at least four-fifths of all the failures. In other words, probably four-fifths of them would get out in some way if they were allowed to go on without having a raid made upon them. The expense is absolutely nothing when we consider the amount of benefit that will accrue from it.

What would be the effect upon our State banks, Mr. President? It would be disastrous unless every State would also guarantee the banks as well. My own belief is that it would be better for every one of the State banks to nationalize. To be sure, we have a great number of State banks with a capital of $10,000 and from that up to $15,000, and they could not nationalize without increasing their capital stock; but in case the State itself did not pass similar legislation for the protection of the depositors, which I believe it would do, they would have to nationalize in order to receive the deposits of the country. So that nothing would be lost in reality by the State banks.

There is another objection, Mr. President, that I have to the present law, and that is the provision in regard to reserve centers. From my study of the banking law I can not see anything that has been gained by adopting the system of great reserve centers.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. FULTON. Before the Senator from North Dakota leaves the subject of the guaranty of deposits I should like to ask him a question which has occurred to my mind. I understand the Senator favors a guaranty and would go further than the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. NELSON) proposed to go, who, as I understand, proposes to create a fund by a tax which he assumes, and is confident, will be a sufficient guaranty.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will say, in answer to that, so that we can understand each other, that it would make no difference to me whether the Government guaranteed it absolutely and then raised the tax to meet the guaranty, or whether it would fix a certain sum which would be assumed to be sufficient, because I believe the result would be absolutely the same.

Mr. FULTON. I am not certain but what that is a correct position, and I am not arguing against it. The question I want to ask the Senator is this: If he has thought, in view of the adoption of some proposition of that character, whether or not any provision should be made for requiring a new bank, which is just starting, to contribute more than the old banks have contributed? For instance, suppose that the law has been in operation for ten years and a fund has accumulated to which the existing banks have contributed and in which they have an interest. Now a new bank starts up. It has contributed nothing to the tax. Should there not be some provision that it shall in some way become responsible at once for its proportion of this guaranty fund of which it gets an equal benefit with those banks which have been contributing to it for years?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, Mr. President, undoubtedly a fair estimate could be made of the deposits for a single year, if that were necessary. It is assumed that the amount levied and collected, whether it is one-sixtieth of 1 per cent of the deposits or whether it is one one-hundredth of 1 per cent, would be sufficient for that year and that there would be no greater sum levied in any other year than experience would prove to be necessary for the losses of that year. Then the bank which is organized that year would only pay its proportionate share, which probably would be paid at the end of the year. It may be that it would not furnish its proportionate part for losses that occurred in the very beginning of that time, but it would be but one of the constituents of a composite whole, and, considering it in that light, it would be paying its proportion as it comes into existence.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not think that the comparison he made between the Government guaranteeing the interest on the Philippine railroad bonds for thirty years and the Government guaranteeing the bank deposits was unhappy for the reason that the Government, in guaranteeing the interest on the Philippine railroad bonds, does so after having passed specifically upon the work done upon the railroads, and knowing positively that the work had been done before they ever issued the bonds, but in the case of bank deposits anybody can go and deposit money in the banks, and the Government has no supervision over it whatever? I think the Senator's comparison in that respect is a very unhappy one.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thank the Senator for his suggestion. I think he did not consider his last statement, that the Government has no supervision over the banks, or he scarcely would have made it. I base my statement upon the proposition that the Government has supervision over the banks. The Government declares, in the first instance, that a bank can not start on wind and that it can not continue on water. It must have the actual money paid in, in the first instance, equivalent to the amount of the stock. It must then loan upon good security. The Government keeps its agents constantly out to see that a bank is doing business in a proper manner. Those agents may not always succeed in keeping the banks in a safe line of conduct, but, on the whole, they have a salutary effect. The Government can say to the bank, "The securities which you are holding for these notes are not good; they are not sufficient. By the next time that the bank examiner comes around we want you to call these loans in or to get some additional security. Your bank does not appear to be in the best condition." The Government can practically force the officials of the bank to keep it solvent at all times. It is under the control of the Government; it is a Government institution, in fact, and is run as much for the business of the people as it is for the interest of the stockholders themselves. The Government regards it as a quasi public corporation, as a part of the great machinery of the Government, and in passing upon its securities is interested in keeping it solvent.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I certainly agree with the Senator from North Dakota that as to the supervision of the bank itself and the organization of it the Government has control. My statement, however, did not apply to that branch of the question. It had reference to the question of depositors. The Government has no supervision over the deposits of a bank. It can not say whether they shall be $1,000 or $100,000, or $10,000,000; but if it is going to guarantee the deposits, it would have to guarantee them whether the bank had $100,000 or $10,000,000 of deposits.

Mr. McCUMBER. It would make very little difference to the Government so long as the Government had control over the assets of the bank and the method of doing business by the bank. The Government, if it does its duty, can compel the bank to do business in a safe and conservative manner. If the Government officials do their entire duty, and if they are competent officials, it will compel them to do a safe and conservative business. Inasmuch as the tax, if levied, would be upon the total amount or the average amount of deposits throughout the year, the Government would be protecting itself upon the amount of deposits in every one of the banks.

But, Mr. President, I was stating something about abolishing these reserve centers. I have failed to see any good which has been accomplished by them. We require the country banks to keep in reserve 15 per cent of their deposits, and then we say that they can take about 7 per cent of that, or something like that, and deposit it in a reserve center, and that reserve center can deposit somewhere else. The result is that the money travels gradually to the great centers, and whenever they close down, the bank, which should have had 15 per cent of its currency available, is unable to get it. If the requirement of 15 per cent is too great, then we ought to modify the law and make it a less amount, but we ought to keep in the banks the amount which we consider necessary for protection and then allow them to deposit wherever they see fit.

Money will naturally go to the place which demands it. If the bank should be in my State, it would naturally deposit in the great cities of Minneapolis, St. Paul, Chicago, and New York, and it would keep deposited in those banks only a sufficient sum to answer the demands for the payment of checks and drafts which it might issue. Money will go naturally where it is demanded, and I believe it is far better to let it take its natural course than to attempt to steer it one way or another by reason of any law which we may place upon the statute book. For that reason, Mr. President, I myself believe that it would be better to entirely abolish the system of central reserve agents.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I arise to inquire as to the Senator's understanding with reference to the amount necessary to meet the requirements upon this proposed guaranty fund. I understood the Senator to say that about $800,000 per annum on the average would have been adequate to meet the losses in national banks.

Mr. McCUMBER. As I understand, the losses to depositors during the years from 1865 to 1903.

Mr. CARTER. Now, Mr. President, in order to make this proposed guaranty fund at all efficient for the purpose of inspiring confidence and thus preventing runs on banks, it would obviously be necessary to provide an adequate fund, not to pay the ultimate losses, but to promptly pay all the depositors of a failed bank when the receiver is appointed. It is well known that the ascertainment of the loss frequently requires many years of patient liquidation and a realization upon the assets. The fund suggested by the Senator of $800,000 per annum would be so clearly inadequate that I think it necessary to place in the RECORD, with the Senator's permission, some of the figures which prove the fallacy of the position.

For instance, in 1897 the aggregate liability of the failed banks, disclosed by proved claims of depositors, amounted to $25,535,553—twenty-five millions and a half, in round numbers.

Now, Mr. President, an accumulated guaranty fund of less than $25,500,000 in 1897 would not have been adequate to meet the demands upon the fund. It is true that, after the lapse of some time and a process of liquidation, it was ascertained that the net loss to depositors finally was only $1,244,145. It is not, however, the $1,244,145 ultimate loss, but $25,000,000, the aggregate amount of the deposits, which would constitute the measure of the demand; because I assume it to be a fact which will not be controverted that if the depositor understands that if the bank fails he must wait for his money until all the assets are realized on, he will go to the bank and withdraw his deposit on the first scare just as he does to-day.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him for one moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly; but I am speaking in the time of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER].

Mr. ALDRICH. My impression is—and I think I am absolutely correct—that since the 1st of October banks in the United States have failed with deposits to the extent of $33,000,000. Eight hundred thousand dollars would certainly be a very inadequate sum with which to pay $33,000,000.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] please answer me this question: Supposing the depositors during the recent panic had been protected by such a fund, would they have withdrawn deposits to the amount that they were withdrawn?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I think that $800,000 in a guaranty fund in any part of the United States would have been entirely inadequate for any purpose.

Mr. McCUMBER. If I may correct both Senators upon this proposition, I stated that the annual loss to depositors from 1865 to 1903, inclusive, was about $850,000, I think.

Mr. ALDRICH. That was after liquidation.

Mr. McCUMBER. That was after liquidation; and it would require only one-sixtieth of 1 per cent of the annual deposits in the United States to have made up that amount. I am not assuming, Mr. President, at all that the Government shall guarantee the immediate payment of all the deposits or that it shall guarantee them any further than the fund which for a given year will be available for that year, but I differ very much from the statement made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] when he says that with a guaranty fund of $800,000 there would be exactly the same run upon the banks. The inclination is to trust the bank; the inclination is to trust it under almost any conditions, unless there are serious reasons that frighten depositors; and then, if they believe that there will be raised a fund sufficient ultimately—not immediately, but sufficient ultimately—to take care of their deposits, they will not be rushing to immediately get their money from the bank. That is my opinion, but it seems to differ from that of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. KNOX. I should like to inquire of the Senator from North Dakota what degree of confidence does he imagine would be inspired in the owners of over $4,000,000,000 of deposits by the knowledge that there was $800,000 put up in any one year for their protection?

Mr. McCUMBER. I can answer that very briefly. No one man has got $4,000,000,000 of deposits.

Mr. KNOX. The question does not even suggest that.

Mr. McCUMBER. And a panic is not going to strike all of the people all over the United States at one time. In the recent flurry it did nearly do so; but ordinarily it is not going to affect all the banks, and, under the very worst conditions we have had, there was not one-tenth of 1 per cent of the banks that were compelled to go into liquidation.

Mr. KNOX. Is it not true that the proposed law is intended for all the people of the whole country, and that all the people of this country have over $4,000,000,000 in the national banks, and therefore all the people of the country who are depositors in national banks would be entitled to look to it as their guaranty fund?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator, to make his point applicable, must go on further and say that all of the people will naturally assume that all of the $4,000,000,000 will be a loss, and that all of the people will immediately get after that four billions of deposits, which is an assumption which, it seems to me, is so violent that we can scarcely indulge in it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I then understand the Senator from North Dakota to reply that the guaranty fund he has in contemplation would only be in sufficient proportions to pay the ultimate loss after all the assets of each and every bank had been subjected to the process of liquidation. In that I think he takes issue with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and with every conception I have ever entertained of the adequacy and satisfactory character of any guaranty fund.

If the Senator will indulge me one moment further—I do not care, in his time, to take issue with his conclusion with reference to the soothing effect of a guaranty fund which promises to return a deficiency at an indefinite time in the future—according to my view, and I have given some little attention to this subject, a guaranty fund would only instill confidence in the minds of the people if it provided an adequate sum to promptly pay every depositor of a failed bank as soon as the balance due him could be ascertained; and thereupon the Government would become subrogated as trustee in the interest of this fund to the rights of the depositor.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. Does the Senator from Montana think that the people throughout the country as a rule believe that they could all be paid all of their deposits in one day if they should demand them?

Mr. CARTER. Of course the Senator realizes that the law of average applies to the failure of banks as well as to the condition of human affairs generally.

Mr. FULTON. It is my conviction that the people have confidence in a bank in proportion as they believe it will be ultimately able to pay them their deposits whenever the funds of the bank shall be converted into cash. The depositors know very well that there is no bank that can pay off all of its deposits if they were demanded at once, but if the depositors know that security is behind the bank and that ultimately they will be paid, they will have confidence in that bank. They lose confidence only when they become convinced that a bank is so unsound that, if it were compelled to go into liquidation, they would not be paid in full.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], I desire to take this time to explain something of my conception of what the guaranty fund should be.

To begin with, if the fund contained but $800,000 there would be, as the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] suggests, such a mighty rush to grab this small sum that the ordinary run on a bank would pale into insignificance compared with the run on the fund.

Again, Mr. President, the establishment of a guaranty fund to be administered by the Government should be surrounded, according to my view, with such safeguards, not only in the way of additional examination—and probably this better examination we should have of the national banks on general principles—but the criminal statutes with reference to the administration of the affairs of the banks should be strengthened very materially.

Again, it seems to me that no guaranty should be extended under any condition to a bank engaged in fostering and aiding and abetting the wild speculative schemes in which we have noticed the banking fraternity embarking of late years. The main objection to the guaranty fund rests in this, to wit, that the solvent, conservative bankers of the country would be compelled to pay tribute for the purpose of giving stability to those less prudent, conservative, and able.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Whom does the Senator call the conservative and safe bankers of the country—the bankers in the city of New York?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, there are well-managed banks in all parts of the country. There are undoubtedly in the city of New York as well-conducted national banks as there are anywhere else in the country. There are, perhaps, national banks there chiefly devoting their capital to the work of a stock exchange. There are many other banks there devoting their attention to mercantile business, to the legitimate sphere of commercial activity to which the banking interests should mainly address themselves. No section of the country is free from the disposition to engage in speculative and wild-cat banking when the laws permit it. I should therefore say that before we could make this guaranty fund equitable, just, and generally applicable, it would be necessary to supplement the amendment by a very substantial addition of drastic criminal statute and by an additional inspection of the banks themselves.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr, ALDRICH. I do not like to take the Senator's time unless he is willing.

Mr. CARTER. It is not my time.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not being bothered at all.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask whether the Senator thinks that a fund of $800,000 would have deterred the depositors of the National Bank of Commerce, of Kansas City, Mo., with deposits of over $16,000,000, from starting a run upon that bank? Would the fact that there was somewhere a fund of $800,000 for all the banks of the United States have given confidence or prevented a run on a bank whose deposits were over $16,000,000, a fact which everybody knew?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I do think that the guaranty fund, being adequate, would check the runs and go far toward preventing these periodical panics to which the country has been subjected for over seventy-five years—indeed, since the foundation of the Government itself.

Mr. FULTON. May I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CARTER. I yield, if the Senator from North Dakota will permit.

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to both Senators.

Mr. FULTON. I thank the Senator for yielding. The Senator from Montana contends, as I understand him, that before this proposed guaranty fund can be made effective there must be certain statutes enacted for the protection of the depositors and to insure the proper conduct of the banks. The Senator does not think that such a contention argues against the wisdom of establishing a guaranty fund, does he?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, in order that the guaranty of deposits when made by the establishment of a fund may not become the basis of an abuse by reckless bankers, who would willfully and deliberately fortify themselves behind the public confidence established by the fund and abuse a trust, I think there ought to be a clearer way than now exists opened through the closed door of the failed bank to the penitentiary.

Mr. FULTON. I think we will all agree to that; but I contend that that does not argue against the wisdom of a guaranty fund properly surrounded and protected, as the Senator suggests.

Mr. CARTER. I think when the fund is properly surrounded and protected that it will be a benediction to the financial world.

I thank the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] for the time he has allowed me to occupy.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I believe there is $150,000,000 of gold in the reserve fund which stands as security for all the money now outstanding. There is a great deal more money outstanding than there is gold back of it. If a demand were made and granted that all of our other currency should be converted immediately into gold, there would not be gold enough to meet it, and the Treasury would of course go bankrupt. That is practically the argument that is made in this case.

There is no conceivable condition whereby there would be a run upon all of the banks practically at the same time. It is scarcely conceivable. With the right kind of banking laws there would be no such condition. With a guaranty fund there would be practically no such condition.

I stated that the losses annually from 1865 to 1903 were $850,000. Therefore if there had been levied upon the banks of the country a sufficient amount to have met all of those demands after the winding up of the banks it would have required only about $850,000. I stated further that one-thirtieth of 1 per cent of the annual deposits, as shown October 1, 1907, would have realized $1,439,678.

Confidence has always rested upon whether there is a belief that ultimately you will get out; that ultimately there will be no loss. The bank itself first obtains the confidence of its depositors. Under ordinary conditions of the country the character of the banks, its conservative method of doing business, and its known assets are a sufficient guaranty to induce the depositor to put his money there. He places it there for safety and convenience and for no other purpose in the world. He could just as well keep it home. He is willing to put it in the bank for safe-keeping. He relies under ordinary conditions on no guaranty other than the solvency of the bank. If, in addition to that, he knew there was a guaranty by a fund that was levied annually in a sufficient ratio to raise an adequate amount to meet all of the losses during that year, then I submit he would have confidence enough to leave his money there when he otherwise would not leave it, because of the question of ultimately getting his funds back. I admit if he thought that the bank was going to break he would not care to wait until its affairs could be closed up.

So that the fear that $850,000 is not sufficient to pay all the losses immediately and to meet the demands of all the depositors of the country, it seems to me, is very far-fetched indeed. The question is whether it will give confidence to the average depositor that he not only has the solvency of the bank to rely upon, but in addition he has this fund which will be left year after year to finally take care of all the deposits, and if he believes he will not be in a line of three or four thousand people waiting until his chance arrives to get at the vaults of the bank.

I believe such a provision would be of inestimable value. I believe we can guarantee that just as well as we can guarantee the issue that is made by the banks and for which we have the bonds of the Government itself.

The Senator from Montana says we will need a greater force and that we will have to change our laws. I do not see the necessity of changing a single law relative to bank inspection or bank control. We have laws enough now, we have force enough now, if the inspectors will do their whole duty, to keep every bank solvent.

That is all I desire to say on this question, Mr. President. I have taken considerably more time than I expected.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a few moments. Believing as I do that the recent crisis was due to a panic of bank depositors who feared that the banks were unsafe. I think our legislation should be directed to the protection of bank depositors rather than in the line of emergency currency.

CAPITAL AND RESERVES.

What does the protection of bank depositors involve? It involves adequate capital and sufficient reserves upon the part of the banks. People deposit money in bank for two purposes. One is safety; the other convenience. They think that the money will be more safely kept in the vaults of the bank than in their own pockets or in strong boxes, and then they consult their convenience, for the banks are made the clearing houses of their transactions. Obviously no person would deposit money in a bank if he knew that the only moneys the bank had were the depositors' moneys, and that they were to be loaned out upon time obligations, when the obligation of the bank is to respond at the call of the depositor.

Security is required, and that security should be in every case an average of at least 20 per cent in actual reserves, that proportion of the depositors' money being kept in the bank responsive to the call of the depositors; and the other security should be an ample and adequate capital of the bank itself. The proportion of the bank's capital to its outstanding loans should be the same as that of its reserves to its deposits. We all know that the loans of the banks in the aggregate are about equal to the deposits. So this would mean a bank reserve equal to 20 per cent of the deposits, and a capital equal to 20 per cent of the loans, or, in other words, that the banks should not be permitted to loan their depositors' money where those loans are more than five times the capital of the bank itself. In this way the depositors would have 40 per cent of protection—an average of 20 per cent in bank reserves, an average of 20 per cent in bank capital; and that constitutes safe banking.

Now, have we these precautionary limitations under the national-bank system? So far as concerns the capital we have no limitations. It is in the power of any national bank upon a limited capital of a million dollars to accept deposits of $50,000,000 and to loan out that money in the market upon time obligations. There should be a provision in the national banking law absolutely prohibiting a bank from loaning out more than five times the amount of the bank capital itself, and if it receives deposits in excess of five times the amount of the capital of the bank it should be compelled to keep such excess of deposits in its vaults responsive to the demands of the depositors. Of course, if we wish to be liberal, we might make the proportion of capital to loans 1 to 7 or 10, and even this would be an improvement on the existing status.

STATE BANKS.

Under the State banking laws in many States there is no adequate requirement as to either capital or reserves. Take the case of the Knickerbocker Trust Company, the fruitful cause of all this difficulty, a State institution, organized under the laws of the State of New York, with a banking capital of only $1,000,000 and a reserve of about the same amount, with deposits aggregating $50,000,000, fifty times the amount of its capital, fifty times probably the amount of its reserve. What security had the depositors there? When it became known that that company was in difficulty, when it became known that there was a run upon it, immediately everyone knew, notwithstanding its beautiful and expensive bank building, that it had an inadequate capital, just as it had an inadequate reserve.

We must, therefore, it seems to me, in order to make the national-bank act meet all the requirements of the case, so far as the security of the depositors is concerned, provide that the bank shall not loan its depositors' money except to an amount from five to ten times the amount of the capital of the bank, as the case may be. I myself believe that safe banking requires that they should not be permitted to loan more than five times the bank's capital; but if you should in liberality of spirit permit them to loan ten times you would give the depositors of the country a security now lacking under the law.

CAPITAL OF NATIONAL BANKS.

It is true that in the aggregate the bank capital of all the national banks is adequate. You take all the national banks and all the State banks, and the capital and surplus amount to about $3,000,000,000; the amount of commercial loans made by these banks aggregate $10,000,000,000, and they have deposits to about an equal amount. So in the aggregate the banks of the country have a capital as security for deposits to the extent of one-third of the bank deposits—ample in its requirements.

The difficulty with our system is that one bank may have a very large capital and another bank may have a minimized capital, and the bank with the minimized capital becomes the danger in times of crisis for the bank with large and proportionate capital. It is in the power of any inferior bank, badly secured either in capital or reserves, to involve the entire banking system of the country in a bank panic.

NATIONAL-BANK RESERVES.

So also with reference to the reserves. While our national banks have an average reserve of something less than 20 per cent, we find that the banks in reserve cities can lend 12½ per cent of the 25 per cent reserve required of them to the central reserve cities, and there is no reserve. You can not term that deposit a reserve which is not in the vaults of the bank and actually within its control. To place it in another bank a thousand, fifteen hundred, or three thousand miles away is to turn it into a deposit, and it then loses its character as a reserve and as security to the depositors.

So it is with the reserves in the country banks of 15 per cent, three-fifths of which they can now deposit in the banks of the reserve cities and in the central reserve city banks. They have therefore their actual reserve reduced to 6 per cent, totally inadequate as security to depositors in case of a bank run.

STATE-BANK RESERVES.

As to State banks the condition is still worse. So far as national banks are concerned on an average, they have adequate capital and adequate reserves. So far as the State banks are concerned, while on the average they have perhaps adequate capital, they have not adequate reserves. The national banks have maintained throughout an average reserve of about 18 per cent. The State banks have maintained an average reserve of less than 8 per cent; and if one-half of the banks of the country are national banks and one-half of the banks are State banks, it lies in the power of any State bank inadequately guarded, either as to capital or reserve, to endanger the entire fabric and to involve the entire system of banking, national as well as State.

PERSUASION OR COERCION.

It becomes incumbent upon us as lawmakers, it seems to me, to see that the two banking systems of the country—the State system and the national system—are blended into one harmonious whole, in which the restrictions imposed upon banks and the requirements imposed upon banks as to capital and surplus will be substantially the same. How can this be accomplished? I suggest that it can be accomplished either by persuasion or by coercion. By persuasion by giving the State banks, in case they submit themselves to the supervision, the requirements, and the restrictions of the national banking act, the benefit of that act so far as emergency currency is required, and by that process they might be coaxed into a harmonious system of banking. Or they may be coerced by the national authority, which is supreme in so far as interstate commerce is concerned. All State banks are engaged in interstate commerce. The transaction by which a State railroad ships goods from a consignor in one State to a consignee in another is an interstate-commerce transaction, which subjects that corporation, State corporation though it be, to the control of the United States Government in matters of reports and accounts, in matters of interstate rates, and in matters relating to the public safety. We control such a road as to safety appliances. What difference is there between the transaction of transportation from the consignor in one State to the consignee in another and the transaction of exchange by which the consignee in the latter State ships the money which pays for the goods to the consignor in another State? It seems to me that interstate exchange is just as much a matter of national control under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution as is interstate transportation.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me, he is indicating to us some of the things which are within the power of Congress in the exercise of interstate functions, powers, and authorities, and I should like it very much if the Senator would tell me something that is not within those powers.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It would take me too long to state the things that are beyond the control of Congress.

Mr. BACON. I should suppose from the general trend of the Senator's remarks that he could state it in one word, because, following the same line of reasoning, there must be very few things which would not be within such control. It would not take long to enumerate them.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It would take too long entirely to state——

Mr. BACON. I want to say to the Senator that in the first part of his remarks I was very much in accord with him. I was very much struck with the soundness of his suggestion as to the protection of depositors and the inspiring of confidence in depositors by an adequate reserve and by limiting the authority to loan to a certain percentage, not only of the reserve, but of the capital; and I was greatly disappointed when the Senator destroyed the pleasure which I had in the early part of his remarks by his venturing into the field which he so frequently enters, and which seems absolutely limitless to his comprehension.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am very sorry I subjected the Senator from Georgia to any disappointment, when, as he stated, complete harmony was so nearly within reach. He invites me to state what matters are not within the control of the National Government. I decline to enter upon that field. It would take me too long to state the things that are not under the control of the National Government. It would not take me very long to state what is within the control of the National Government, and that is interstate commerce and foreign commerce.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me for a moment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator permit me just one word further? I will state that I have to take the train very shortly. I am making this speech under urgency, for upon my arrival in New York I may be called to the Pacific coast and will not be here during the rest of the debate.

Mr. BACON. I wish simply to state that the Senator misstates, inadvertently, the question. I did not ask him what were the things not within the power of the General Government, but what were the things under the interstate-commerce clause not within its power.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Oh!

Mr. BACON. I will not ask the Senator to answer it in view of what he has stated. I simply wanted to set myself right on the question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I must decline to enter into that field, because it would take me a long time to enumerate the things not under the commerce clause.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator permit me one question? In case a business house in New York sends a check to a firm in Connecticut, does that constitute interstate commerce?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have not the time to consider that question just now. I have simply contented myself with the statement that interstate exchange between banks is, in my judgment, just as much interstate commerce as interstate transportation is interstate commerce, and if a State railroad corporation accepting goods for shipment from one State to another State is engaged in interstate commerce and is subject to the control of the National Government as to interstate rates and is compelled to make reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission and to put upon its cars safety appliances in the interest of the general public, I must assume that the General Government has a similar power with reference to interstate exchange, and that it can compel the banks to put on the safety appliances that are required for the safe administration of interstate commerce, and I can imagine nothing more necessary than adequate capital and adequate reserves for all the banks in the country.

CHANGE MUST BE GRADUAL.

Mr. President, I have not the time to do more than to outline my views upon this question. But I wish to say further that it will not do to immediately require that banks shall conform to wise requirements as to bank reserves, and the reason is that we have been so lax in the past, exacting from them, State and national, an average of only 10 per cent, that we can not in a moment compel them to make those reserves 20 per cent.

There are only two ways in which such a result could be accomplished. One would be by getting sufficient lawful money from the country or from the world—gold coin from abroad, United States notes at home, the domestic production of gold at home—to suddenly make their reserves, now 10 per cent of their bank deposits, equal to 20 per cent. That would be an almost impossible process to be instantaneously executed. The reserves to-day of all the banks in the country, State and national, constitute about one-third of the total money volume of the country—about $1,000,000,000. Twenty per cent of the commercial deposits now in the commercial banks (for I leave out of consideration the savings banks), assuming that the total deposits of all the banks of the country aggregate to-day $10,000,000,000, would mean that they must have in their vaults $2,000,000,000, and they have in their vaults to-day only $1,000,000,000 and a little over.

Where would they get the extra billion of dollars? The only remaining money is in the hands of the people, in their pockets, and in the United States Treasury. It would be impossible to secure it from them.

So if these suggested laws are to go into effect, it means that the banks must immediately contract their bank loans, and we all know that would mean universal liquidation and bankruptcy. In order to meet the requirements of a 20 per cent reserve these banks, State and national, which to-day have commercial loans outstanding to the extent of $10,000,000,000 and reserves of only one billion, would be compelled to call in these loans and reduce them immediately to $5,000,000,000, in order to reduce their deposits to about the same amount, and no one could measure the injury and the suffering which would be caused by that movement. It must be a gradual process. We must give five or ten years for its accomplishment, and the best method of providing for it would be to fix a day within which the ultimate result would be accomplished, giving the Comptroller of the Currency or the Secretary of the Treasury, by proper rules and regulations or by direct action with reference to the banks individually, authority to gradually bring up the reserve to the maximum required by law.

WORLD'S PRODUCTION OF GOLD INSUFFICIENT.

Either you must do that or you must increase the money volume of the country. There are two ways of doing that. One, of course, would be by absorbing a part of the current production of gold. The world produces four hundred millions of gold annually, and the United States has for years been able to absorb one-fourth of that—$100,000,000. Eighty millions of people out of 1,300,000,000 have been able for the past four or five years to absorb one-fourth of the entire production of gold in the world, leaving the three-fourths for over a billion people in the world. It is impossible for us to claim more than we have absorbed in recent years of the current production of gold.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to suggest to him that we ourselves produce one-fourth of it?

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is true.

Mr. TELLER. And we really consume more than one-fourth of the whole.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; we produce one-fourth, and so we did also produce almost all the gold of the world in the years 1849 and 1850, and yet, due to a defective banking system, that gold slipped away from the country, and we had in its place the shinplaster of the State banks of the country. So the gold will slip away unless we hold it. We have been able to hold it because our whole system of banking has been much wiser than that which prevailed before the civil war.

It is impossible, therefore, for us to get more gold from current production than we have been claiming. We may get this $100,000,000 annually, if the production keeps up, but that will only keep pace with the increase of the business of the country, with the increase in the bank loans necessary to handle the future increase of business in the country, and will not take care of the present deficit of $1,000,000,000 in our bank reserves—State and national.

There is one way in which we may do it, and that is to retire every form of United States notes except one—the simple form of Treasury note or United States note; as the gold certificates and the silver certificates come into the Treasury in the payment of dues, to substitute for them United States Treasury notes, and then turn the gold and silver backing such notes into the general redemption fund. In that way the gold and silver now in the Treasury represented by warehouse receipts, known as gold and silver certificates, will go into this general redemption fund and be applicable to the redemption of all outstanding United States notes. When that is accomplished, we all know that with the best and safest banks of issue 50 per cent of gold is regarded as a sufficient reserve for such bank issues. The Treasury will then be practically a bank of issue. If we get this large amount of gold and of silver into the redemption fund of the Treasury, it will enable the Treasury in times of emergency, or at other times when the business of the country requires it, to make more note issues based upon this redemption fund, which will be steadily increasing, and these may drift into the banks and increase the reserves.

But even then it is a question as to whether we can enlarge these reserves in the banks, requiring at present $2,000,000,000, and at the same time keep pace with the business requirements of the country, if we trust to these United States notes alone.

ENLARGED USE OF SILVER.

There is a way of increasing reserves of the banks, and I mention it with some degree of reluctance now, for the silver cause has been so discredited in the East by the unfair, passionate, and prejudiced attacks made upon it that a man is hardly listened to who suggests that silver can be used as money. But I do not propose to urge the question of bimetallism as such or the question of the free and unlimited coinage of silver. I recognize the fact that by the action of Congress and by the judgment of the country the gold standard has been firmly established in this country.

But that does not involve the absolute disuse of silver. Silver is being used in other countries. It is used in gold-standard Germany; it is used in gold-standard England; and Mr. Goschen, the gold-standard chancellor of the exchequer of England, at a time when this very question as to the inadequacy of the reserves of the banks in England came up, when the production of gold was not so great as now, addressed himself to the question, and urged then that the British Government should authorize the issue of notes based upon the coinage of silver, which would be a limited legal tender, I believe, to the extent of £4, or $20. The argument was that if, as gold came into the bank, they could pay out in the place of gold these silver notes, which were just as good for the pockets of the people, they could withdraw from the pockets of the people the gold that was there and put it in the reserves of the bank, and the reserves being increased, they would have the basis for a future increase of bank loans, upon which the business of the country depended.

This can be done now. In the debate a year ago, in which the Senator from Rhode Island presented his bill, I asked him whether he did not think the United States could with absolute safety and without endangering the gold standard increase the use of subsidiary silver, and he said that, in his judgment, it could.

Recollect that you have $1,000,000,000 of gold, or lawful money rather, full legal-tender money, in the banks, pretty nearly all of it gold, we will say; and you have $500,000,000 of gold, if it is a fact that we have fifteen hundred million dollars of gold in this country, which I very much doubt, in the pockets of the people or in the stores, in the tills, and in their strong boxes. If you can coax that money out of the pockets of the people into the reserves of the banks, it will give a solid basis for your existing volume of bank loans, and it will enable you in the future to gain the basis for additional bank loans that may be required by the business of the country. The effect of this enlarged use of silver would be to raise its value and thus tend to restore the much desired parity of exchange between gold and silver using countries.

So it seems to me that a broad and comprehensive solution of this question depends upon considering the relation of silver to the question, its enlarged use as legal-tender money, to the extent of $20 or $40, and its substitution in the pockets of the people for the gold and legal-tender money that is there now, and the placing of that legal-tender money, gold or notes, in the reserves of the banks, fortifying their present loans and enabling further loans in the future.

CLEARING-HOUSE ASSOCIATIONS.

Mr. President, I believe in the process of evolution. I believe it is the safest process. Our banking system has been the result of evolution, and during this period the clearing-house association has been evolved. It is not, I believe, referred to in terms in the banking act, not in any way authorized by the banking act, and yet it is the growth of the experience of all the banks of the country, the method by which and under which they are combined in harmonious action for the clearing of their exchanges and for mutual support in times of distress. I believe that the clearing-house associations should be legalized under the national banking act; that provision should be made for their incorporation, and that there should be a clearing-house association not only in every great commercial center of the country, but there should be at least one in every State in the Union.

I am not prepared to state now what the range of the operations of such clearing-house associations should be. Their stocks should be held by the banks that are within the range of their influence and are associated with them. Their business, of course, should be as heretofore—the clearing of exchange. To that might be added the rediscount for banks of notes discounted by banks, and to that might be added the holding of the reserves of banks in country districts whose vaults are not strong enough for their protection. Many country banks of limited capital favor the deposit of their reserves in the big banks of the commercial centers, because they will feel that they are safer there; but in making that change they turn them into deposits, and there they are kept subject to loan, and so they get without their reach and without the call of their depositors.

Such clearing-house associations might be the agencies for the safe keeping of the reserves of such banks, under restrictions of law that would compel them to keep them in actual cash as special deposits and not as deposits upon which loans could be based. I can imagine a variety of useful operations in which such clearing houses could be engaged. The whole system would partake somewhat of our form of Government. We would have the national banking system centralized in Washington, and we would have these great central organizations in each State in the Union in touch with the States and in touch with the National Government.

NATIONAL BANKING COMMISSION.

The presidents of these clearing-house associations could meet annually at the capital of the nation. They could be authorized to select from their number, from the different sections of the country, five men who, acting with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency, could be constituted into a banking commission. These men could remain here throughout the year under adequate salary, in close touch with the Treasury Department, in close touch with the entire banking system of the country, and bringing the Treasury Department itself into close connection with every section and every State of the Union.

I could imagine no system that would produce more harmony of action, and that would result in a greater protection to the business interests of the country, to the interests of the depositors, to the interests of the business men of the country, than such a system.

The advantage of such a system would be that we would have a banking commission practically selected by the banks of the country. They would undoubtedly select their best men, their safest men, their soundest men, and we would then have a system under which the Secretary of the Treasury—oftentimes not a banker, oftentimes not familiar with financial affairs—would be in actual contact with the best judgment of the country upon such questions.

Now, Mr. President, as to the character of emergency currency, I believe with my associates on this side of the Chamber that all money should be issued by the Government. It is the creation of the sovereign, and if we will only pursue this system of gradually drawing into the redemption fund the gold and silver now backing the gold and silver certificates of the country, we can easily devise an emergency system of currency which under the direction of this banking commission, in direct contact with every section of the country, would anticipate danger and make remedial action almost unnecessary.

NO NARCOTICS.

I fear, Mr. President, that if we pass an act now which relates only to emergency circulation, it will have the effect spoken of by Secretary Gage in the recent hearing before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House. His fear was, as he expressed it, that it would be a narcotic—that it would put the country to sleep until another crisis should arise. I agree with the Secretary in that contention. The intellect of the entire country is now aflame upon this question. The intellect of the country was never working better upon any question than it is now upon this question.

Let debate proceed. Let consideration of this question by the press and by the periodicals of the country proceed. Let the Finance Committee, with all the light which has been cast upon the subject by these debates and this discussion, retire to its committee room and bring to us a broad and comprehensive measure that will not put the country to sleep, but will convince the world that the country is awake, and that it has reached the true and logical and scientific solution of this great question.

Mr. KEAN. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island if he wants to go on any further to-night?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think not.

Mr. KEAN. I rose to move an executive session.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator from New Jersey withhold the motion for a moment?

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

OCEAN MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment to the ocean mail service subsidy bill introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. It is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Navy, the Postmaster-General, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall hereafter constitute a Commission to be known as the "Foreign Commerce Commission," and that they are hereby authorized to provide for the construction, either in the private shipyards of the country or in the shipyards of the Navy, or both, twenty-seven vessels not exceeding 6,500 tons capacity each and costing in the aggregate not exceeding $27,000,000; that such vessels shall be so constructed as to be useful to the Navy as auxiliary vessels, such as transports, colliers, dispatch boats, cruisers, and scouts, and also useful in times of peace in opening up new routes of commerce between United States ports and the ports of South America, New Zealand, Australia, and the Philippines; that such Commission make to Congress such recommendations as to it seem advisable regarding the manning of such vessels in whole or in part by the Naval Reserve and the leasing of them so manned in times of peace to shipping companies for the purpose of promoting foreign trade and commerce, and for the incorporation of such shipping companies under national law, and for reports on their operations.

I wish to say in explanation of my proposed substitute that I am in entire sympathy with the purpose, namely, to promote the ocean mail service and to promote our commerce with foreign countries, and that this amendment, intended as a substitute for it, involves the same expenditure that the bill does during a period of ten years, about $27,000,000, the only difference between the bills being that the measure of the Senator from New Hampshire provides for the expenditure in ten annual installments of about $30,000,000 in aiding twenty-seven ships to transport the mails and to carry goods from United States ports to certain ports in South America, Australasia, China, Japan, and the Philippines, while this substitute provides that the United States Government shall cause the ships to be constructed as a part of the auxiliary navy, absolutely required now in order to make our Navy efficient and without which our fighting ships would be derelict in the ocean. It provides for the construction of such ships as a part of the auxiliary navy, with the power to a foreign commerce commission, to be composed of the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Postmaster-General, to let out those ships in times of peace to shipping companies, which can conduct this ocean mail service and the service in the interest of interstate and foreign commerce.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 4, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 3, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DISTRIBUTION OF ROOMS IN CAPITOL AND HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the privileged resolution, No. 269, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the following assignment of rooms be, and the same is hereby, made, to wit:

For the use of the police in the House Office Building, the room north of and adjoining room permanently No. 185.

To the Committee on the District of Columbia, rooms in the House Office Building, permanent Nos. 375, 377, and 377a.

To the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, the room in the Capitol formerly occupied by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

To the Committee on Military Affairs, the room heretofore occupied by the Committee on the District of Columbia and the room in the Capitol formerly occupied by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, said rooms to be properly connected.

To the Committee on Ways and Means, the room heretofore occupied by the Committee on Military Affairs.

To the Committee on Printing, the rooms in the Capitol formerly occupied by the Committee on the Territories and the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, said rooms to be properly connected.

To the Committee on Indian Affairs, as additional room, the space heretofore occupied by the Committee on Printing.

To the Journal index clerk, the room in the Capitol formerly occupied by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Resolved further, That the small room at the end of the corridor heretofore occupied by the Committee on the District of Columbia be abolished and the space restored as part of the corridor.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MANN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DONATING NEW FLAG TO OKLAHOMA.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution No. 148.

Whereas the first flag bearing forty-six stars, emblematical of forty-six sovereign States, to-day floats over the National Capitol; and

Whereas the State of Oklahoma is for the first time the proud recipient of equal recognition with the sister States of the Union; and

Whereas the flag has a peculiar value to the State of Oklahoma and her million and a half citizens residing within her borders; and

Whereas the intrinsic value of the new flag is of minor consequence to the Government of the United States and to the sister States: Therefore

Resolved, etc., That the new flag bearing forty-six stars, now floating over the National Capitol, be, and the same is hereby, donated to the Commonwealth of Oklahoma, to be kept and remain in the archives of the Oklahoma Historical Society of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chairs hears none. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Oklahoma that his resolving clause is slightly informal.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have that amended in keeping with the usual form.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolving clause will be amended and the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the resolving clause so as to read:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a title will be added to the resolution.

There was no objection.

EXTENDING TIME OF PAYMENTS ON HOMESTEAD ENTRIES, OKLAHOMA.

Mr. McGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3409) to extend the time of payments on certain homestead entries in Oklahoma, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time within which all payments required by the acts entitled "An act to open to settlement 505,000 acres of land in Kiowa-Comanche and Apache Indian reservations in Oklahoma Territory," approved June 5, 1906, and the act entitled "An act giving preference right to actual settlers on pasture reserve No. 3 to purchase land leased to them for agricultural purposes in Comanche County, Okla.," approved June 28, 1906, be, and the same is hereby, postponed and extended for one year from the date on which such payments are now by law required to be made.

With the following amendments:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "made," insert the following:

"Provided, That as a condition precedent to said extension in each case the settler shall pay to the Secretary of the Interior, to be held in trust by him for the benefit of the Indian entitled thereto, 4 per cent on the amount of such deferred payments, where such settler had no preference right, and 5 per cent on the amount of the deferred payment where such settler was given a preference right: And provided further, That all persons, or their legal assignees, whose applications to purchase any of the pasture land mentioned in the act of June 28, 1906 (and whose applications were rejected because such persons were sublessees), shall have the right to purchase under the provisions of this act the land so originally applied for by them."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING AND BINDING FOR COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department is hereby authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be necessary in the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

TUCUMCARI LAND DISTRICT.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16860) to establish a United States land district to be known as the Tucumcari land district.

Be it enacted, etc., That all that portion of the Territory of New Mexico bounded and described as follows: Commencing at the intersection of the fourth standard parallel north with the boundary line of the Territory of New Mexico and the State of Texas; thence west along said fourth standard parallel north to its intersection with the third guide meridian east of New Mexico; thence south along said third guide meridian east to its intersection with the first standard parallel north; thence east along said first standard parallel north to its intersection with the boundary line of the Territory of New Mexico and the State of Texas; thence north along said boundary line to the place of beginning, be, and is hereby, constituted a new and separate land district, to be called the Tucumcari land district, the land office of which shall be located in the town of Tucumcari, county of Quay, in the Territory of New Mexico.

SEC. 2. That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a register and a receiver of public moneys for said district, and said officers shall reside in the place where said land office is located, and shall have the same powers and shall discharge similar duties and receive the same fees and emoluments as officers discharging like duties in the other land offices of the Territory of New Mexico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman from Alabama explain this bill. In the confusion here I did not hear it read.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, this bill is introduced for the purpose of creating a separate land district in the Territory of New Mexico. It comprises largely for the most part the county of Quay in that Territory. That county has been in what is known as the "Clayton land district" for the time previous to this. In the last year there were some 100,000 people who went into this part of New Mexico to enter land. In the Clayton land district alone the Secretary of the Interior reports that during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1906, there were 3,526 entries of all classes covering 459,597 acres, made in the Clayton land office. There were 11,014 entries, covering 1,559,019 acres, during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1907, and 4,406 entries, covering 595,847 acres, during the first six months of the current fiscal year, thus showing that there were more entries in the Clayton land district last year than in any other district in this country. The Secretary of the Interior informs the Committee on Public Lands that there is a congested condition of affairs in the Clayton office owing to this influx of people, and that it is absolutely necessary that some relief be granted. Now, the relief should be granted where it will do the most good, farthest away from the Clayton office, where these entries are being made. The people of Quay County in order to get to the Clayton office must either ride 100 or 150 miles over the country on horseback or in wagons or go to Dalhart, Tex., and take the train and then come back into New Mexico and get to Clayton in that way.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does this bill abolish either the Clayton land office or the Roswell land office?

Mr. CRAIG. As I understand it it does not abolish either.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It creates a new land office.

Mr. CRAIG. It creates a new land office to assist the Clayton land office.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That would be about midway between Roswell and Clayton.

Mr. CRAIG. It is south of Clayton about 100 miles.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I believe the distance is something like about 150 or 200 miles from Clayton to Roswell, and——

Mr. CRAIG. I do not know the exact distance.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am very familiar with that portion of the Territory, Mr. Speaker, and I think the bill is a very just one. Roswell is situated on the Santa Fe Railroad, and the people from this Tucumcari portion of the country have to go to either Clayton or Roswell. Clayton is on the Fort Worth and Denver Railroad. This land office will be on the Rock Island Railroad and will be of a great advantage to the people of the Tucumcari country, and I hope it will be located at Tucumcari, the point suggested by this bill.

Mr. CRAIG. And I will state further if this land district is located at Tucumcari it will be at a point where two railroads traversing this particular piece of country come through, and will enable the people to reach the land office by railroad, whereas now they can not.

Mr. GOULDEN. I should like to ask whether there was any special reason for this large number of entries of which the gentleman has spoken.

Mr. CRAIG. I could not tell exactly the reason except for the very productive land they have in New Mexico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill to establish a United States land district in the Territory of New Mexico to be known as the Tucumcari land district.

On motion of Mr. CRAIG, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PRINTING AND BINDING FOR COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business during the Sixtieth Congress; also that the committee be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

BRIDGE AT PARKDALE, ASHLEY COUNTY, ARK.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17511) to construct bridge at Parkdale, Ashley County, Ark.

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Ashley, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Arkansas, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a steel drawbridge and approaches thereto across the Bayou Bartholomew at Parkdale, in the State of Arkansas, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS TIDE WATERS AT EDGECOMB, ME.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 16073) to authorize the town of Edgecomb, Lincoln County, Me., to maintain a free bridge across tide waters.

The bill was read at length.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the gentleman from Maine if he will not let this bill go over until to-morrow. I had a communication in regard to it to-day which I should like to look into, and I will see him again.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have no objection.

AGRICULTURAL LANDS WITHIN FOREST RESERVATIONS.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the following bill:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11778) to amend an act approved June 11, 1906, entitled "An act to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves."

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves," approved June 11, 1906, be amended by striking out of section 1 the following words: "except the following counties in the State of California: Inyo, Tulare, Kern, San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, Ventura, Los Angeles, San Bernardino, Orange, Riverside, and San Diego."

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That looks a right important matter to consider by unanimous consent. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman from Mississippi that the Fifty-ninth Congress passed a law allowing homesteads to be taken in forest reservations when the Secretary of Agriculture shall indicate that the lands may safely and properly be used for farming purposes without interfering with forest operations. The counties mentioned in this bill constitute my Congressional district and that of Mr. McLACHLAN, of Los Angeles, and we had them exempted for the reason that that is the arid southwest; the water on the ranges is scarce, and we feared that agricultural entries might be made upon springs and small brooks and interfere with range operations. The Agricultural Department says that under the system adopted such matters will be cared for. They also tell us that there are many small valleys that can properly be farmed and still left in the forest. The supervisor from that district told me a day or two ago that he knew where forty or fifty farms could be located properly; and we therefore wish to have that law put into effect in our Congressional districts.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, if the present Secretary of Agriculture were to live forever, and be Secretary of Agriculture forever, I have such absolute confidence in him and his desire to take care of the general interests that I would be willing to trust his discretion. But it is a very large discretion to be lodged in an executive officer. He will not be Secretary of Agriculture always. There may be a man there who would allow the taking up of these very fountain heads of water courses, and the balance of it. I think, in fact, that the law which exists in regard to the other counties, permitting the discretion upon the part of the Secretary in regard to them, is a mistake; and I feel compelled to object to this matter being considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMITH of California. Will the gentleman withhold his objection until I can make a further explanation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will withhold it for the present.

Mr. SMITH of California. You understand that the law now being amended is applicable to all the rest of the forest reserves in the United States. Only those in existence were excepted from its operation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have just said that, and I think the mistake is in the discretion existing now in other parts of the country. It ought not to exist anywhere.

Mr. SMITH of California. It is discovered, for instance, that it is the desire of the Department to extend one of the forest reserves, in order to take in a certain mountain, a watershed lying adjacent to what they now have. But in taking in that mountain they cross, and seemingly necessarily include, a fertile valley of many thousand acres that is in no sense forest and never will be and that ought to be devoted to agriculture.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They can leave that out when they define the borders of the forest reserve.

Mr. SMITH of California. In order to run the line across to this mountain they cross that valley.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They can leave that out and leave it subject to homestead location.

Mr. SMITH of California. I have exhausted my remedy in trying to get them to do that, but they insist on taking in the valley. I have a letter from Mr. Pinchot within a few days, stating that if this bill passes he will immediately adjust the matter of settlement in this valley so that it may proceed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think I must object.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman a letter from the Department of Agriculture approving this bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Indian appropriation bill, to nonconcur in the Senate amendments thereto, and ask for a conference thereon with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Indian appropriation bill with the Senate amendments, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman will let this be printed so that we may be able to see it. The Indian bill has usually been the vehicle of legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill, with the amendments, is in print.

Mr. MANN. The amendments ought to be numbered. Nobody has been able to see the bill. I endeavored to get it two or three times.

Mr. SHERMAN. Of course there are many amendments. I think there are 102 amendments.

Mr. MANN. Let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. SHERMAN. Many of the amendments are of minor consequence, but a few of them are of great importance. If the gentleman from Illinois prefers, and the House is willing, of course I am entirely willing to let the matter go over.

Mr. MANN. I see on looking at the bill that the amendments are numbered.

The SPEAKER. The bill is already printed and the amendments numbered, but the bill can go over by unanimous consent until to-morrow morning, or until such other time as may suit the gentlemen.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think it is of any great importance whether we go to conference to-day or to-morrow, and if the gentleman from Illinois prefers, I will withdraw the request and renew it to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. We may want a vote on some of these amendments.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will withdraw the request for the present.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the post-office appropriation bill; and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that general debate upon the bill close at 3 o'clock on Thursday next, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] and myself controlling the time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the post-office appropriation bill, and pending that motion he asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill may close on Thursday at 3 o'clock, the time to be equally divided between the majority and the minority, and to be under the control of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON]. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is this request concurred in by the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Undoubtedly, by the gentleman from Tennessee, the ranking member of the minority of the committee, Mr. MOON.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. OVERSTREET was then agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the post-office appropriation bill.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the numerous provisions of this bill have been very carefully considered by the committee, and in its essential features there is but little disagreement. The large amount which it carries—over $220,000,000—seems necessary for the proper administration of the Post-Office Department and the postal service. It is the largest bill ever presented for the consideration of the House. The uncertainty of the volume of business for the next fiscal year necessarily makes uncertain the amount of the appropriation needed to carry on the service. The bill is liberal, yet a deficit is, of course, expected if there should be a diminution of postal revenues. That this Department of the public service is in an unsatisfactory condition will fully appear from the report of the Postal Commission. That no remedy for this condition can be applied in this appropriation bill is due to the rule of the House preventing new legislation in appropriaton bills. It is hoped that by separate enactment before another appropriation bill is made the business methods of the Department may be so changed that a more satisfactory system may be evolved in accordance with the recommendations of the Commission, a large saving effected to the people, and greater facilities obtained and benefits derived from the service.

There are provisions in this bill that are new law, that perhaps ought to be stricken out. There are other provisions which ought to be amended. Among the questions that I ask the attention of the House to is an amendment which I will propose at the proper time. I will ask the Clerk to read from the bill beginning at line 4 and ending with line 14, both inclusive, on page 27 of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of letter carriers, substitutes for carriers on annual leave, clerks in charge of substations, and tolls and ferriage, rural delivery service, $35,373,000: Provided, That not to exceed $12,000 of the amount hereby appropriated may be used for compensation of clerks in charge of substations: Provided further, That in the discretion of the Postmaster-General the pay of any carrier on a water route who furnishes his own power boat and is employed during the summer months may be fixed at an amount not exceeding $900 in any one calendar year.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. After that section, Mr. Chairman, I shall offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask permission to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That a sum not to exceed $500,000 of this appropriation may be expended by the Postmaster-General, in cooperation with the Secretary of Agriculture, in improving the conditions of rural delivery routes to be selected by them, for the purpose of ascertaining the possible increase in the territory which could be served by one carrier, and the possible increase of the number of delivery days each year, the amount required for proper maintenance in excess of local expenditure for rural delivery routes, and the relative saving to the Government in the maintenance of rural delivery routes by reason of such improvements: Provided further, That the State or county or counties which may be selected for improvement of rural delivery routes therein under this provision shall furnish an equal amount of money for the improvement of the rural routes so selected.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is possibly subject to the point of order that it is new law, and on the objection of a single Member of the House may be precluded from consideration under the rule. No such rule obtains in the Senate. That body may, therefore, act on this question in the public interest and force the House to its final consideration when the disagreeing votes of the two Houses are to be adjusted in conference. But the opportunity will be given to the House to act, if it will, as the amendment will be presented. That this amendment should become the law is essential in the public interest. It need not be concealed that the amendment, if not considered here, will be introduced and acted on in the Senate. Nor is it necessary to conceal the fact that it is intended as an experiment to ascertain the facts on which shall rest the beginning of a sysem of good roads throughout the United States. That it is to the supreme benefit of the people to have a complete system of good roads by Federal aid, if the same can be constitutionally obtained, is so clear that it is idle to discuss it. That such a system is needed for the expeditious transportation of overland rural mail must be clear when the almost intolerable condition of rural-route roads in the greater part of the country is known of all men, for expedition can not be had without such improvement. That the United States and the States or counties getting the benefit of the roads should jointly contribute to their improvement seems only to be just. That the United States and the States or counties are capable of gradually making the necessary road improvement I think will not be denied. That the increased wealth of the people in general, by reason of this needed internal improvement, will more than compensate for the expenditure is at least an incidental inducement to the expenditure, although, logically, it may seem not a justification for it when separated from postal necessities. Then, what is in the way of a modest beginning of this essential public work, which will be worth more to the masses of our people in direct and immediate benefits than the rivers and harbors and the Panama Canal combined? [Applause on the Democratic side.] So magnificent will be the result to our people living in the rural sections that it seems criminal to delay the beginning when the States and counties join, as they will join, in the improvement and share with the United States the benefits. Can it be said that Congress is without power? Shall it be said that it is an unwarranted interference in the affairs of the States? If either proposition could be maintained, then we should desist. If they can not be, why not begin the great work? The second proposition falls if the first can be overcome, because it is involved in it.

The United States is a Government of limited and delegated powers. Just such power as is conferred on Congress by the Constitution it may exercise, and such other power as may be fairly implied from the express power granted and necessary to carry it out. It is sovereign within the sphere of its constitutional jurisdiction; it is powerless outside of it. The State rights consist of the rights and powers that belong to a complete sovereign, save only those conferred on the United States in the Constitution. No State of this Union is therefore a complete sovereign, because it has yielded a part of its sovereign power to another political entity—the United States; and the United States is not a complete sovereignty, because there are sovereign rights that belong to the States—rights reserved and not yielded to the United States. The State is only a partial sovereign. The United States is only a partial sovereign. Their sovereign powers are distinct and separate. It takes both to make a complete sovereignty. In this is the strength of the dual system of government. In which government—State or Federal—rests the power to establish post-roads? The United States Constitution, which is the supreme law of the land, in section 8, subsection 7, Article I, gives to Congress the right to establish post-offices and post-roads. This delegation of power makes Congress supreme on this question. The grant of the power carried with it the right to exercise such other powers as are necessary to enforce the same. It follows that the United States could, by purchase or condemnation proceedings, obtain the right of easement or use in any land in any State for post-road purposes (which is a governmental purpose) not already in use by the State for State governmental purposes, just as the State can condemn United States lands for State governmental purposes not in actual use for United States governmental purposes. These questions have long since been settled by State and Federal judicial decisions. The power exists, therefore, in Congress to establish these roads for postal service by express terms of the Constitution. Who shall object to cooperation by the State or the county with the United States in a work in which is joint and mutual benefit? The machinery for the perfection of this work may be Federal or State, as may seem best. These are not new propositions. This is the time for action. There has been enough discussion. If gentlemen complain of the form of the amendment, offer a better suggestion, and let it pass. Let us know now who is for and who is against this system of internal improvement.

It may be that the parcels-post proposition will present itself for consideration under the bill. A parcels-post system confined to rural-delivery routes at a rate compensatory to the Government might prove beneficial, but, in my judgment, this is questionable until the rural routes are so improved as to make the delivery of parcels speedy and satisfactory. The people are demanding improved conditions in all branches of the public service, and where these are practicable, or can be made so, it is the duty of the Representatives to respond to the public demand.

Unfortunately, a great portion of our public men regard the development of Federal power as destructive of the rights of States. This is true if such development be questionable under the Constitution; but if the Constitution confers a power on Congress, the development and exercise of that power to its full limit by the Federal Government neither destroys nor impairs any right of the States, for such right is not reserved, and, being delegated to the United States, does not belong to the State. The more speedy the full and complete development of all Federal power and authority under the Constitution comes, the more accurate will be the lines of demarcation on all questions of jurisdiction between State and Federal governments, and the more readily will the governments, State and Federal, adjust themselves to their constitutional orbits, from which neither may come to encroach upon the other. These governments are not intended to be inimical, but wholly interdependent and cooperative, each maintaining and exercising separately, however, its powers as determined by the Constitution. [Applause.]

When we improve our great waterways, concerning which there is but little difference of opinion, it is for the benefit of the people of the entire Union, but the people of the States where the harbors are, or through which the rivers flow get the most direct benefits. What right has the United States Government to claim jurisdiction over all the navigable waters in the States and remove the obstructions to the transportation of commerce placed therein by nature? The Constitution confers the power. It is a Federal and not a State right exercised in the interest of commerce. The right to establish post-roads in the State is also a Federal constitutional right. Why should it not be exercised in the interest of the expeditious delivery of mail to the people, and incidentally to the benefit of overland commerce? This power is now dormant. No legislative action has imparted vitality to it. It is one of those Federal powers not yet fully exercised. In my judgment, its exercise will be beneficial to the States and to the United States; and surely the exercise by the United States of one of its powers can not be held to impair State rights.

The United States has exclusive jurisdiction, as I said, over the navigable waters in the States—waters navigable in fact, and not merely declared so by statute. It does not own the river bed over which the stream flows; this is the property of the State. It does not own the river banks; these belong to the landowners adjacent. It has no riparian rights. It does not even own the water in the stream, for it may be used by private individuals, unless its use should reduce the quantity of the water or the flow of the stream so as to impair navigation. The United States simply has the right to the use of the stream to maintain navigation. Its jurisdiction for securing and maintaining navigation is complete. It is an express power exercised in pursuance to the Constitution to secure the consummation of a particular purpose, and that purpose is navigation free to all the people of all the States. The power to carry the mails to all the people over any portion of any State in the Union belongs to the United States Government, and it may open up post-roads for this purpose, but in so doing no part of the soil of the State would belong to the United States, but merely an easement or right of way on a chosen road to carry the mails. It would have no special jurisdiction over the roads; the State would reserve its civil and criminal jurisdiction. The United States would have no more right on the road than a citizen would have except for the improvement thereof in cooperation with State or county authorities and for carying mail. The right to protect its mails it now has everywhere. The apprehensions of many on this question are ill-founded. Let us give to our country this initial step to the ultimate consummation of a perfected system of internal improvements which, in connection with our rivers and harbors and ship canal, will so develop and enhance our resources that this Republic shall become more wealthy and more powerful than all the nations of Europe combined. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, no one has more devotion to the doctrine of local self-government nor a firmer belief in maintaining unimpaired every right of a sovereign State than myself. These rights, so vital to the people of a State, so necessary to the maintenance of justice and liberty, must not be encroached upon; but there are other rights equally as sacred and essential; these are the constitutional rights of the Republic. Let no man or party despoil the Republic of its power or question the exercise of its constitutional authority. The tendency to the concentration of power in the National Government, the disposition to widen Federal authority by mere construction, often arises from a naturally selfish disposition to extend their jurisdiction by the administrators of government. The unjust prejudice against United States authority in some quarters, the unjust prejudice against and ignorance of State rights in others, are, from whatever causes, potent agencies for discontent among the masses. Perhaps these are conditions that can by patience and wisdom be removed; but under all these are other and more perilous causes, arising from other sources and from other reasons, undermining republican institutions, that challenge our attention.

Mr. Chairman, if there be one time more than another when we should be candid, it is on a day like this, when the House is in solemn session for general debate in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. We fear not for the present safety of our institutions, but every patriot must feel alarmed at the tendency of the times and the uncertainty, discontent, and unrest of the people. We are accustomed to think and say that the people will bring all things right at last. This is untrue. The masses, under improper and unscrupulous leadership, are too often led into the wrong. They thus are sometimes blinded until "they know not what they do," and almost crucify themselves. The people are willing to do right if they know the right. They have not the time to devote to the study of public questions. They elect men to public office, and particularly to Congress, to study State and national problems and direct aright the affairs of the Government. It is not expected that all shall think alike and act alike. It is from the fierce conflict of ideas that the truth must come, justice be sustained, and liberty preserved. But upon one question there can be tolerated no difference of opinion: No American shall lose faith in the Republic and the final liberty, through its example, of all mankind.

In discussing the state of the Union shall we hesitate to recite the causes that operate to its disadvantage? The unreasonable diversity of party doctrine under the same Constitution; the false and provincial education of the people; the superficial view taken by the masses of the true theory of our institutions, and too often the ignorance of public men on the question; the adoption of temporary expedients in legislation in an emergency in place of following sound principles; a general disregard of constitutional limitations; party partisanship; sectional and racial prejudice; unchecked corporate greed and power; discrimination in taxation, State and Federal; local laws that restrict the liberty of the citizen; excusing public plunder; government by commission; the abrogation of the rights of the people's representatives to bureaus and departments; Executive usurpation; judicial legislation; State and Federal espionage on citizens; the multiplication of State, county, municipal, and national debts for labor to pay; the granting of valuable franchises, without compensation, to corporations; the exemption of corporate interests and wealth from taxation; the unequal distribution of wealth; wealth accumulated by the operation of tariff laws and protection for a few while labor has been without its just reward; specific monopolies; national banks exercising the functions of government; patience with anarchy; trusts in restraint of trade; the expenditure of our national substance in the subjugation of a foreign people; peculation in office; sinecures for favorites; extravagance in administration, and the establishment of colonies in violation of the spirit of American liberty are causes that conspire to destroy the confidence of the people and ruin the Republic, for such untoward conditions encourage dishonesty in the enactment and enforcement of public laws. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Who has created these unholy conditions, and how were they created? Ask the party in power. False policies evolved from false theories of government, the dominion of wealth and power, the contempt of the rights of the individual citizen, inequality in law and oppression in its enforcement—these afford an unerring answer. Think not that these things can continue. You can not live always in safety over the crater of the volcano.

The spirit of liberty, wounded, may depart. We must call back this Government to law, to order, to equality, and to justice; equality of rights and equality of opportunity for men in all conditions of life. We must open the ways of progress that this people may move forward to the peaceful possession of that inheritance secured by the blood of the Revolutionary fathers, under the blessing of God, for us and for ours.

May I ask, sir, again what has been the cause of these untoward conditions; who has brought them on; what shall be the end?

Mr. Chairman, we never find it pleasant to present the merits of our own party, nor the demerits of the other. We should be ever ready and willing to admit, when we charge the commission of wrong against the rights of our country and countrymen on the Republican party, that often just charges may be made against the Democratic party not to its credit. But who has been in power for the last decade—unrestricted power—in every branch of the Federal Government? That party which holds the scepter of power at this moment—the Republican party; and, sir, I believe that no greater fortune can come to the country, nor to the Republican party itself, than that it should meet defeat at the hands of the people at the coming election. The country would be relieved of the misfortunes now attending, and the Republican party, in vacation, could re-republicanize its doctrines and be reintroduced to the people. Has the Republican party of the United States been true to the interests of the people? I concede here and everywhere else the patriotism of the rank and file of the party and the interest and good purpose, generally, of the majority of the representatives of the party; but I shall ever insist that its doctrines are false and its policies not in pursuance of the best interests and welfare of our country. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen, these are the conditions. Can the Republican party remedy them? Some they may; some they can not.

Why yield the power of this House? Why yield the power of Congress to mere administrative officers? Why not hold it within your own hands, delegated representatives of the people? Why do you surrender the only citadel of the people? Do you know that your Government, in form republican, in fact is but a limited monarchy? It is the greatest Government and the greatest Constitution the world ever saw. Yet of the 160,000 or more of Federal officials, Members of Congress alone are elected directly at the ballot box by the people. Why, then, give away your power as representatives of the people to the mere menials of government? You can not do so and stand for the people. You are responsible for these conditions and the results. You established the protective tariff. You are responsible for the conditions that flow from that tariff and the trusts that it shelters. The people are demanding revision in tariff laws; yet the pitiful spectacle is presented that you are helpless to give the country one iota of relief, although in supreme power. For when once you have discarded the theory of protection for protection's sake; when once you have reduced the tariff to a revenue basis, or when you have formulated and presented for consideration in this House a reform tariff bill in which so much of protection is removed as supports monopoly and trusts, that minute the Republican party repudiates its false doctrines and falls a victim to the vengeance of the monopolies and the trusts that it created. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Can you expect this great party to commit political suicide? Ah, well it is that you say you are not prepared to reform the tariff until after the Presidential election in the fall. If you would now present a reform measure to the country from the Committee on Ways and Means there is not a village or hamlet within the confines of this Republic that would not go Democratic in the next election. [Applause.] You can not do it. You have not the ability. I do not mean that you have not the intelligence, but you are so confronted by conditions you created and have been so long mercilessly dominated by the power of wealth, you have been so long the instrument of the enemies of the common people that you dare not act in their behalf. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I regard the Republican party as one of the greatest parties that ever rose to power in this or any other Government, and the skill of its leaders equals that of any political organization that has ever existed in our country. But for more than forty years, Republicans, you have presented to the people false principles and false theories; you have plundered their Treasury whenever you saw fit; you have overturned the rights of States; you have stood with your feet on the necks of the common citizens; you have appealed to none for power save wealth and monopoly, and yet you have successfully run the gamut. You have deceived the people of the United States, not once or twice, but all the time. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If I had to characterize you by one sentence, I would say that the political organization known as the Republican party is a superb opportunist, if not the most sublime and stupendous faker in all the history of the world. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, another question that presents another view of the versatility of our distinguished friends is the question of finance. According to the doctrines that our fathers taught, for many years the people of all parties stood for the policy of bimetallism. We believed it was right; we believe it yet; but in an hour of emergency the Republican party, although pledged through every day of its existence to the doctrine, changed its front at the behest of its masters and said the theory of bimetallism was wrong; that there must be a gold dollar behind every dollar of money issued by the United States to protect this country in all hours from panic and distress in business. Vainly did we fight; the glittering gold you offered appealed too strongly to the unpatriotic. You carried the country upon the representation, sirs, that behind every dollar issued by the National Government was or would be placed a gold dollar. What a splendid standard that was—a gold standard! Deeply should we regret that such views should take hold of the majority of our countrymen, but, like every other Democrat, I cheerfully submit to the will of the majority.

We are ready, in accordance with the will of the people of the United States, to make, if we can, a true gold standard. Can it be done? About one billion seven hundred and fifty millions of money of all kinds has been issued by the United States. Of that perhaps one-third is gold. The reserve required in your Treasury is only $150,000,000. Assume that you can control the circulation of the gold—which you can not do—and hold it for redemption of the Treasury notes, the greenbacks, and the silver. You have not a gold dollar behind the silver and paper money, but 33 cents in gold, for only one-third of all our money is gold. Your theory of redemption is practically impossible. You have given us, then, not the 50-cent dollar that you said in the campaign the Democratic party would give, but, as a matter of fact, you have given to the United States a 33-cent dollar. What is that dollar worth? It is worth its face, as a silver dollar would have been worth its face, as any paper dollar is worth its face; not because of the intrinsic value of the metal in the dollar as a commodity, but because of the fact that the function of money has been imparted to it and the people of the United States have guaranteed its payment. You did not stop the panic by the alleged gold standard, as you deceived the people into believing could be done. You have not given the gold standard in its perfection, as you promised. You have beheld in an hour of peace and alleged prosperity one of the greatest panics of the world. The very thing you said you could prevent by the gold standard has come under your gold standard. The very thing you said would be prevented by the Republican party and the enforcement of its policies has come to plague you again. Ah, gentlemen, you have never given the true cause of these troubles to the people of the United States. I tell you that the trouble lies with the power that is behind the throne and against the interests of the people. Do not attempt to deceive us with elastic currency bills and asset currency—miserable frauds and subterfuges.

Have you enough money? If you have, then what caused the panic? Is the Government controlling the finances of the country? Is it exercising the functions of a sovereignty when it delegates the power to issue money on any terms to private institutions? So long as you put it in the power of corporations to control, contract, and expand the currency at will, by manipulations, doubling the purchasing power of the dollar or reducing this power at will, you may expect panics, for it is one of the modern business methods by which the money powers or trusts obtain ultimately unlawful and almost boundless accretions in the absorption of commodities and lands at low prices and by extortion in interest rates.

When money is again under control of Government and relegated to its proper functions as a medium of exchange between values, and interest fixed at a low and reasonable rate so as to encourage industrial and commercial pursuits, panics will seldom occur. When money can not profit hoarded, it must come into business channels to obtain accretions, just as labor is forced to the ditch to obtain its living. But it was not my purpose to discuss, but to only incidentally refer to the money question.

Mr. Chairman, I have not sought to unjustly indict the Republican party or unfairly animadvert on its administration. The world knows well the story of its treason to popular government. It is of little consequence to our country, in effect, whether it be the Republican party or the Democratic party or some other party that has contributed most to these conditions. They must be remedied, sir, or the day and hour will come when they can not be remedied peaceably in the interest of the masses of the people.

Mr. Chairman, it is the verdict of history that of all the nations that have lived and flourished and passed away not one has exemplified for the benefit of posterity more than one great thought typical of the essence of its existence. The years and the deeds of a nation are as one moment and one act. They tell but one story and point but one moral, and each nation is so represented in the great historical galleries of time as to leave but one impression to succeeding generations. Look upon that great gallery and tell me what is typical of the mighty Assyrian Empire. Wipe away from her fading portrait the dust of ages, and you behold not a great martial people; you see not her hundreds of thousands of horsemen in clanking armor moving over the fields of carnage, but a lone shepherd playing his lute upon her lofty hills as he looks down on his flocks and herds in the beautiful valleys below. Her pastoral life was her chief glory. Chaldea! What of thy greatness? A lone astronomer is reading the story of the stars by the light of their struggling beams. This is thy contribution to the science of the ages. You behold yonder a great invading force—5,000,000 barbarians. They come. They cross the Hellespont. They go. They flee in broken ranks, in shattered columns, and wild retreat. From that hour Grecian valor has inspired the heroes of all time, and though her civilization perish, glory will ever rekindle at the urn of her Spartan heroes.

But we pass to another scene profound in interest. A great sea opens. A multitude passes over in safety; a pursuing army follows; the waves of the mighty deep clasp in eternal embrace again. The power of Egypt has perished, but a race is restored to the rights of men again, whose influence and whose magnificent achievements have filled the world for centuries since that eventful day.

But let us turn away from this gallery of the ancients. What shall be the contribution of modern nations to this galaxy when He who holds their destiny in the hollow of His hand shall decree that they shall be no more? Neither prophet nor seer may yet tell their fate, nor the impress they shall make upon mankind; but as for us, my countrymen, let us so live in obedience to just laws that truth shall ever triumph and freedom be ours to the end, and when at last we shall be called to answer in the great beyond, heaven forbid that the limner of history shall represent us to posterity by the eagle of the Republic rending with his talons the Declaration of Independence, while his beak is buried in the hearts of the liberties of a defenseless people; but rather by that more glorious and inspiring scene—the Goddess of Liberty still standing proudly erect, waving with one hand o'er her devoted head the banner of the Republic and pressing with the other to her sacred bosom the Constitution of the Union. [Prolonged applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BUTLER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore,

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 450. An act for the relief of the State of North Carolina;

S. 4797. An act for the care and preservation of The Hermitage;

S. 1669. An act granting an honorable discharge to Benjamin Warner;

S. 4791. An act providing for the determination and payment of claims of certain Indian traders and others against the Menominee tribe of Indians in Wisconsin and against individual members of said tribe;

S. 5085. An act authorizing the construction of a light-house tender for the light-house inspector of the twelfth light-house district;

S. 123. An act to provide for the erection of a public building at Lewiston, county of Nez Perce, State of Idaho;

S. R. 37. Joint resolution disapproving certain laws enacted by the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico;

S. 520. An act for the purchase or construction of a launch for the customs service at and in the vicinity of Los Angeles, Cal.;

S. 4112. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the reorganization of the consular service of the United States," approved April 5, 1906;

S. 2244. An act to provide for the erection of a public building at Missoula, Mont.;

S. 3405. An act to amend an act to authorize the Baltimore and Washington Transit Company, of Maryland, to enter the District of Columbia, approved June 8, 1896;

S. 5363. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Franklin, La.;

S. 1543. An act to authorize the entry of arid and semiarid public lands;

S. 649. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Rock Springs, in the State of Wyoming;

S. 906. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Rochester, in the State of New Hampshire;

S. 2938. An act to provide for the erection of a public building at Lander, Wyo.;

S. 3160. An act providing for the erection of a public building in the city of Peru, Ind.;

S. 5434. An act to provide for finishing the crypt of the chapel, United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., as a permanent resting place for the body of John Paul Jones.

S. 4535. An act to amend section 714 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the resignation of judges of the courts of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 36.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be made an examination and survey of an inland waterway from Mobile Bay to Perdido Bay, in the State of Alabama, and from said Perdido Bay to Escambia Bay, in the State of Florida, for the purpose of estimating the probable cost of the construction of a canal 300 feet wide by 9 feet deep, or of such width and depth as will be sufficient to permit of the navigation of such vessels as ordinarily navigate said bays, and for other purposes.

Senate concurrent resolution 42.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That for the purpose of ascertaining the practicability and cost of improving navigation on Coosa and Alabama rivers by means of storage reservoirs at, near, or above the sites selected for Locks and Dams Nos. 12, 14, and 15 by cooperation with the Alabama Power Company, or any other corporation duly organized under the laws of the State of Alabama, in the development of water power for industrial purposes, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to cause a survey to be made of that portion of Coosa River above and below the sites selected for Locks and Dams Nos. 12, 14, and 15, and to submit to Congress as early as practicable a report giving the results of said survey, including plans and estimates of the whole cost of the work and the proportion thereof which should be borne by the United States; and that the cost of said survey shall be paid from funds heretofore appropriated for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate concurrent resolution of the following title:

S. C. Res. 5. Authorizing the invitation of governments of other countries to send representatives to the International Congress on Tuberculosis.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 4777. An act restricting in certain cases the right of appeal to the Supreme Court in habeas corpus proceedings.

H. R. 17524. An act to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Dothan, Ala.;

H. R. 17422. An act to authorize the counties of Henry and Rock Island, in the State of Illinois, to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in said State; and

H. R. 17220. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Fayette Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River, Pennsylvania, from a point in the borough of Brownsville, Fayette County, to a point in the borough of West Brownsville, Washington County," approved April 23, 1906.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I yield sixty minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GOEBEL].

Mr. GOEBEL. Mr. Chairman, on December 3 last, Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington introduced in the House a bill to amend the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports and to promote commerce."

That bill was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and by the chairman of that committee referred to a subcommittee of which I have the honor to be the chairman. This subcommittee after a careful hearing, by a majority vote, decided to recommend to the general committee with certain amendments a favorable consideration of the bill. The general committee as yet has taken no action on this report and recommendation. Taking the bill as amended by the subcommittee it will be identical with the bill introduced by Senator GALLINGER, amended and recommended for passage by the Committee on Commerce. As we are now discussing postal affairs, I shall avail myself of the opportunity afforded me by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to discuss the bill to which I have made reference, in the hope that I may give some information and more light to the membership of this House to the end that at a later day you may approach the consideration of this bill with such information, and to enable you to come to a just conclusion. The bill when amended will read as follows:

That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to pay for ocean mail service under the act of March 3, 1891, in vessels of the second class on routes to South America, to the Philippines, to Japan, to China, and to Australasia, 4,000 miles or more in length, outward voyage, at a rate per mile not exceeding the rate applicable to vessels of the first class as provided in said act.

This bill, if passed, amends section 5 of the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce," in the following particulars:

First. It will raise the compensation to ships of the second class from $2 per mile to $4 per mile.

Second. It will require ships of the second class to make a distance of not less than 4,000 miles, outward voyage.

Third. It will establish a direct mail service from the United States to South America, to the Philippines, to Japan, to China, and to Australasia.

It makes no other changes or modifications of the original act of March 3, 1891. That act will stand in every other particular and be in force, and the amendment as proposed is governed in all respects by the provisions of the original act, so far as the same may be applicable. As the original act will have to be considered in connection with the proposed amendment, I shall quote the act in full:

An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports and to promote commerce.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and empowered to enter into contracts for a term not less than five nor more than ten years in duration, with American citizens, for the carrying of mails on American steamships, between ports of the United States and such ports in foreign countries, the Dominion of Canada excepted, as in his judgment will best subserve and promote the postal and commercial interests of the United States, the mail service on such lines to be equitably distributed among the Atlantic, Mexican Gulf, and Pacific ports Said contracts shall be made with the lowest responsible bidder for the performance of said service on each route, and the Postmaster-General shall have the right to reject all bids not in his opinion reasonable for the attaining of the purposes named.

SEC. 2. That before making any contract for carrying ocean mails in accordance with this act the Postmaster-General shall give public notice by advertising once a week, for three months, in such daily papers as he shall select in each of the cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, St. Louis, Charleston, Norfolk, Savannah, Galveston, and Mobile, and when the proposed service is to be on the Pacific Ocean, then in San Francisco, Tacoma, and Portland. Such notice shall describe the route, the time when such contract will be made, the duration of same, the size of the steamers to be used, the number of trips a year, the times of sailing, and the time when the service shall commence, which shall not be more than three years after the contract shall be let. The details of the mode of advertising and letting such contracts shall be conducted in the manner prescribed in chapter 8 of title 46 of the Revised Statutes for the letting of inland mail contracts so far as the same shall be applicable to the ocean mail service.

SEC. 3. That the vessels employed in the mail service under the provisions of this act shall be American-built steamships, owned and officered by American citizens, in conformity with the existing laws, or so owned and officered and registered according to law, and upon each departure from the United States the following proportion of the crew shall be citizens of the United States, to wit: During the first two years of such contract for carrying the mails, one-fourth thereof; during the next three succeeding years, one-third thereof; and during the remaining time of the continuance of such contract at least one-half thereof; and shall be constructed after the latest and most approved types, with all the modern improvements and appliances for ocean steamers. They shall be divided into four classes. The first class shall be iron or steel screw steamships, capable of maintaining a speed of 20 knots an hour at sea in ordinary weather, and of a gross registered tonnage of not less than 8,000 tons. No vessel except of said first class shall be accepted for said mail service under the provisions of this act between the United States and Great Britain. The second class shall be iron or steel steamships, capable of maintaining a speed of 16 knots an hour at sea in ordinary weather, and of a gross registered tonnage of not less than 5,000 tons. The third class shall be iron or steel steamships, capable of maintaining a speed of 14 knots an hour at sea in ordinary weather, and of a gross registered tonnage of not less than 2,500 tons. The fourth class shall be iron or steel or wooden steamships, capable of maintaining a speed of 12 knots an hour at sea in ordinary weather, and of a gross registered tonnage of not less than 1,500 tons. It shall be stipulated in the contract or contracts to be entered into for the said mail service that the said vessels may carry passengers with their baggage in addition to said mails and may do all ordinary business done by steamships.

SEC. 4. That all steamships of the first, second, and third classes employed as above and hereafter built shall be constructed with particular reference to prompt and economical conversion into auxiliary naval cruisers, and according to plans and specifications to be agreed upon by and between the owners and the Secretary of the Navy, and they shall be of sufficient strength and stability to carry and sustain the working and operation of at least four effective rifled cannon of a caliber of not less than 6 inches, and shall be of the highest rating known to maritime commerce. And all vessels of said three classes heretofore built and so employed shall, before they are accepted for the mail service herein provided for, be thoroughly inspected by a competent naval officer or constructor detailed for that service by the Secretary of the Navy; and such officer shall report, in writing to the Secretary of the Navy, who shall transmit said report to the Postmaster-General; and no such vessel not approved by the Secretary of the Navy as suitable for the service required shall be employed by the Postmaster-General as provided for in this act.

SEC. 5. That the rate of compensation to be paid for such ocean mail service of the said first-class ships shall not exceed the sum of $4 a mile, and for the second-class ships $2 a mile, by the shortest practicable route, for each outward voyage; for the third-class ships shall not exceed $1 a mile and for the fourth-class ships two-thirds of a dollar a mile for the actual number of miles required by the Post-Office Department to be traveled on each outward-bound voyage: Provided, That in the case of failure from any cause to perform the regular voyages stipulated for in said contracts or any of them, a pro rata deduction should be made from compensation on account of such omitted voyage or voyages; and that suitable fines and penalties may be imposed for delays or irregularities in the due performance of service according to the contract, to be determined by the Postmaster-General: Provided further, That no steamship so employed and so paid for carrying the United States mails shall receive any other bounty or subsidy from the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 6. That upon each of said vessels the United States shall be entitled to have transported, free of charge, a mail messenger, whose duty it shall be to receive, sort, take in charge, and deliver the mails to and from the United States, and who shall be provided with suitable room for the accommodation of himself and mails.

SEC. 7. That officers of the United States Navy may volunteer for service on said mail vessels, and when accepted by the contractor or contractors may be assigned to such duty by the Secretary of the Navy whenever in his opinion such assignment can be made without detriment to the service, and while in said employment they shall receive furlough pay from the Government, and such other compensation from contractor or contractors as may be agreed upon by the parties: Provided, That they shall only be required to perform such duties as appertain to the merchant service.

SEC. 8. That said vessels shall take, as cadets or apprentices, one American-born boy under 21 years for each 1,000 tons gross register, and one for each majority fraction thereof, who shall be educated in the duties of seamanship, rank as petty officers, and receive such pay for their services as may be reasonable.

SEC. 9. That such steamers may be taken and used by the United States as transports or cruisers, upon payment to the owners of the fair actual value of the same at the time of the taking; and if there shall be a disagreement as to the fair actual value of the same at the time of the taking between the United States and the owners, then the same shall be determined by two impartial appraisers, one to be appointed by each of said parties, they at the same time selecting a third, who shall act in said appraisement in case the two shall fail to agree.

In substance the original act divides ocean mail steamships into four classes. The first class shall be iron or steel screw steamships, capable of maintaining a speed of 20 knots an hour at sea in ordinary weather, and to have a tonnage of not less than 8,000 tons. The second class shall be iron or steel steamships maintaining a speed of 16 knots an hour at sea in ordinary weather, and to have a tonnage of not less than 5,000 tons. The third class shall be of the same kind and to maintain a speed of 14 knots an hour at sea in ordinary weather, and to have a tonnage of not less 2,500 tons. The fourth class shall be iron, steel, or wooden vessels, of a speed of 12 knots an hour at sea in ordinary weather and a tonnage of not less than 1,500 tons. The original act also provides that steamships of the first, second, and third classes are to be constructed with particular reference to prompt and economical conversion into auxiliary naval cruisers, according to plans and specifications provided by and under the supervision of the Secretary of the Navy. The compensation, respectively, is $4, $2, and $1.66⅔ per mile outward voyage, and there is to be no other or further compensation. It permits such vessels to carry passengers and to compete for steamship business.

The amendment here proposed will in no way affect steamships of the first class, since they require a speed of 20 knots an hour, and are under the original act confined between the United States and Great Britain, a distance of less than 4,000 miles. And as it can in no way affect ships of the third and fourth class, we may also dismiss them without further comments.

I may say, before discussing the merits of this proposition, that the amendment meets with the approval of the Postmaster-General. The subject-matter has also been considered by the President of the United States, and in his message to Congress at the opening of the present session he said:

The time has come, in my judgment, to set to work seriously to make our ocean mail service correspond more closely with our recent commercial and political development. A beginning was made by the ocean mail act of March 3, 1891, but even at that time the act was known to be inadequate in various particulars. Since that time events have moved rapidly in our history. We have acquired Hawaii, the Philippines, and lesser islands of the Pacific. We are steadily prosecuting the great work of uniting at the Isthmus the waters of the Atlantic and the Pacific. To a greater extent than seemed probable even a dozen years ago we may look to an American future on the sea worthy of the traditions of our past. As the first step in that direction, and the step most feasible at the present time, I recommend the extension of the ocean mail act of 1891. That act has stood for some years free from successful criticism of its principle and purpose. It was based on theories of the obligations of a great maritime nation, undisputed in our own land and followed by other nations since the beginning of steam navigation. Briefly those theories are, that it is the duty of a first-class power, so far as practicable, to carry its ocean mail under its own flag; that the fast ocean steamships and their crews required for such mail service are valuable auxiliaries to the steam sea power of the nation. Furthermore, the construction of such steamships insures the maintenance in an efficient condition of the shipyards in which our battle ships must be built.

The expenditure of public money for the performance of such necessary functions of government is certainly warranted; nor is it necessary to dwell upon the incidental benefits to our foreign commerce, to the shipbuilding industry, and to the shipowning and navigation which will accompany the discharge of these urgent public duties, though they, too, should have weight.

We now pay, under the act of 1891, $4 a statute mile outward to 20-knot American mail steamships built according to naval plans available as cruisers and manned by Americans. Steamships of that speed are confined exclusively to trans-Atlantic trade with New York. To steamships of 16 knots or over, only $2 a mile can be paid, and it is steamships of this speed and type which are needed to meet the requirements of mail service to South America, Asia (including the Philippines), and Australia. I strongly recommend, therefore, a simple amendment to the ocean mail act of 1891, which shall authorize the Postmaster-General, in his discretion, to enter into contracts for the transportation of mails to the Republics of South America, to Asia, to the Philippines, and Australia at a rate not to exceed $4 a mile for steamships of 16 knots speed or upward, subject to the restrictions and obligations of the act of 1891.

Mr. Chairman, it is sought in this way to extend the ocean mail act of 1891. The original act has been in force for seventeen years. Since that time this nation has made wonderful progress. We have acquired Hawaii, Porto Rico, the Philippines, and other islands of the Pacific. The conditions existing in 1891 for the enactment of the law apply with equal force to-day and with much stronger reasons for an extension of the act. It is essential that we have adequate foreign mail service to meet present conditions, and as we have become a world power, just pride compels us to carry the ocean mail by American ships and under the American flag whenever possible.

In this respect our country is in a most unfortunate condition at this time, depending wholly upon the reluctant, irregular and inefficient service of foreign steamships to carry our mails directly to the principal countries of South America. Our people have the right to demand from us the quickest and most regular dispatch of their foreign mails, and it is a sad commentary that in order to do this we must make use of the fast steamship lines which are subverted in some form by some government, and thereby contribute our portion to a foreign subvention. The British Government to-day, in addition to an admiralty subvention of $750,000 annually, pays to the Cunard line $340,000 for the transportation of the mails. I may say that nearly all maritime nations of Europe and Japan have for their own interests made liberal subventions to maintain great ocean-mail lines direct from their own ports to different ports of the world. Let me read to you what the Postmaster-General said last month in a communication addressed to Senator FRYE, chairman of the Committee on Commerce; which committee had at the time under consideration the identical bill:

> Because of the irregular sailing and the general unsatisfactory service of foreign steamships this Department was compelled on May 6, 1907, to instruct the postmaster at New York to dispatch the mails for Rio de Janeiro by way of Europe in all cases except once a month, when communication could be made at New York with the only two steamers of the foreign fleet having a nominal speed of 14 knots an hour plying between this country and South America. This arrangement compels the use of European ports, as well as European steamers, in the conveyance of the United States mails to some of the most important countries of South America, and brings us face to face with the humiliating conditions of which the Postmaster-General warned Congress in his report for 1905, a condition, as he said, which "might seriously embarrass the Government in the exchange of important official and diplomatic correspondence."
> Since last March the fifteen American steamships which had been engaged in trade across the Pacific Ocean have been reduced to eight. Not one new steamship is building for that trade, or indeed for any other branch of our foreign commerce. The complete disappearance of the American merchant flag from the Pacific Ocean is imminent unless resolute measures are promptly taken to prevent it. In the meantime, the governments of Great Britain and her autonomous colonies in Australasia are considering a proposition, by liberal grants from imperial and colonial exchequers combined, to establish by British ships on the Pacific Ocean, in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, the fastest mail service practicable between England and Australasia. The Japanese Government at the same time, through new and generous mail contracts, is enabling its steamship companies to construct swift new ships which will supplement the navy of Japan in the Pacific with a formidable fleet of auxiliary cruisers.

Mr. Chairman, this is indeed a warning, and the time has come when Congress should take some action. The proposition involves only an ocean mail service. Action on the part of Congress in matters of this kind is not new in the history of our Government.

The act of March 3, 1845 (which was the first act), provided for the transmission of mails between the United States and foreign countries in American ships. It had also for its purpose the encouraging of Americans to build and run steamships. The Postmaster-General was empowered to make contracts with steamship companies for either a fixed subsidy or the postage rates, as follows:

> For points not less than 2,000 miles distant, 24 cents per half ounce; 48 cents per ounce, and 15 cents for every half ounce.
> For the postal service to Mexico and the West Indies, 10 cents per half ounce, 20 cents per ounce, and 5 cents for every additional half ounce. United States inland postage was added to the above sums. Unfortunately, however, it did not induce Americans to establish mail steamship lines, and more liberal terms were offered.

The act of March 3, 1847, authorized the Secretary of the Navy to accept the offer made by E. K. Collins & Co. to carry the mails from New York to Liverpool and also the offer made by Mr. Sloo to provide five steamships for carrying mails between New York, New Orleans, and Chagres. The latter service was to cost the Government not more than $290,000. Provision was also made for carrying the mails across the Isthmus of Panama and up the coast of California and Oregon. All of these subsidized ships were subject to purchase or control by the United States Government whenever necessary.

On February 2, 1847, the Post-Office Department concluded a contract for five years under the law of March 3, 1845, with the Ocean Steam Navigation Company for the conveyance of the mails between New York and Bremen and Havre. The contract provided payment on the basis of $100,000 for six round trips a year to Bremen and $75,000 for six trips a year to Havre, which gives mileage rates of $2.23 and $2 respectively, and it was also provided that when the service should be doubled the pay was to be doubled. There was also a stipulation that the steamers engaged should be at least 1,400 tons and faster than the Cunard steamers. The service to Bremen began January 21, 1847, but up to 1851 the vessels had no regular schedule of sailing and payments were made for each voyage separately. Sailings were irregular and so slow that few mails were sent by them. In 1851 the full service, to wit, twelve trips to Bremen and twelve trips to Havre were begun. The Thirty-second Congress extended the contract until 1857. The Post-Office Department also contracted for bimonthly mail service between Charleston and Habana for a payment of $45,000 per annum. In approving this contract Congress added $5,000 for making Savannah a port of call. This service began in 1848 and continued for ten years.

In 1848 the Secretary of the Navy made three mail contracts, all of which were to run for ten years. The first was concluded by a bimonthly service between New York and Chagres, via Habana and New Orleans, to be carried by five new steamers of 1,500 tons each. The subsidy was fixed at $290,000 a year for traversing a distance of about 158,000 miles, or at the rate of $1.83⅓ a mile. The second provided for mail service to be conducted by three new steamers between Astoria and Panama, calling at San Francisco, Monterey, and San Diego. The subsidy was at first $199,000. Later the route was modified, the sailing made bimonthly, and the subsidy increased to $384,250 for sailing about 201,600 miles, or at the rate of $1.90 per mile. The third contract was for a bimonthly service during eight months of the year and a monthly service during the four winter months between New York and Liverpool. It was agreed that five new first-class steamers of at least 2,000 tons burden be constructed. In consideration of this service $385,000 was to be paid for traversing about 124,000 miles, being a mileage rate of $3.11 per mile.

The service between New York and Chagres was begun in 1848 and continued with regularity until the expiration of the contract. The service between Astoria and Panama was not at first satisfactory, partly because of the failure of the company to provide sufficient and suitable vessels and partly because of the impossibility of securing crews on the California coast during the gold excitement.

Through delays in building the necessary ships, the contract known as the "Collins contract" did not go into effect until June 1, 1850. The original terms of this contract granted a subsidy of $19,250 per voyage for twenty voyages a year. At this time the Cunard Line was receiving £145,000 per annum for a weekly service, forty-four trips per year, over the same route, or about $15,000 per voyage. The ships of the Collins Line were in every way superior to the Cunard vessels, and it was the boast of the Americans that they would beat the English in steam navigation as they had already beaten them in fast sailing. But the English had the advantage of twelve years' experience, a larger subsidy for a more frequent service, and all the prestige which accrues to a long-established line. The establishment of the Collins Line was nevertheless productive of some substantial benefits to our country, and as the subsidy was responsible for the starting of the line, it may be credited with bringing about these benefits.

Before 1850 Mr. Cunard had virtually a monopoly of the fast freight business and charged all the traffic would bear. In a very short time after the Collins line started freights fell from £7 10s. per ton to £4 per ton, and commerce and passenger traffic were increasing rapidly. The Collins people, however, being hampered by the severe conditions of the mail contract, made it almost impossible for them to secure any large part of this growing freight business without great outlay for slower cargo boats, for the quick sailing and with short stays in ports made it impossible for the mail steamers to secure or carry much cargo. It is needless for me to say that the formation of a rival American line was bitterly resented by Mr. Cunard, and he induced Parliament to raise his subsidy of £145,000 and payment for extra service which he put on to New York from Liverpool direct, in the hope of killing off American competition before it actually began. It also appears that in 1851, a year and a half after the Collins line started, Mr. Cunard obtained $834,000 a year as a subsidy for forty-four trips, or about $19,000 per voyage.

In 1852 our Government increased the subsidy to the Collins line by allowing $33,000 per voyage for twenty-six trips a year, or at a rate of more than $5 per mile. And it was then a life and death struggle between the American and the English line, each of them backed by its respective government, and it was evident that both could not survive. While the American boats gave a superior speed and equipment, which greatly increased the passenger traffic, the English boats, however, did most of the freighting, which is the profitable side of most transportation business. It was then maintained by Mr. Collins that his company could not compete with the Cunard people unless the subsidy was again increased. In a statement before a committee of Congress he declared that to save a day or a day and a half in the run between New York and Liverpool cost the company nearly a million of dollars annually. It will be seen that to hold a speed record was rather a costly form of enjoyment.

Again, the economical conditions at the time rendered it impossible that the American line should compete with the English successfully in steam navigation. The final result was that the Collins Line was compelled to suspend operations. It might be said, however, that the actual failure was due to a disaster wholly beyond human foresight or control in the loss of the Arctic and of the Pacific, two of their best vessels.

In 1856 Congress reduced the subsidy to the original sum of $385,000 a year for twenty trips. Two years after, all contracts for carrying foreign mails were abrogated.

The approximate cost of this subsidy experiment was as follows:

Bremen Line, 1847–1852	$2,000,000
Havre Line, 1852–1853	750,000
Collins Line, 1850–1858	4,500,000
New York to Aspinwall, 1848–1858	2,900,000
Astoria and San Francisco to Panama, 1848–1858	3,750,000
Charleston to Habana, 1848–1858	500,000
Making a total of	14,400,000

From 1858 to 1866 this Government gave no subsidy for ocean mail service. American vessels carrying mails received the sea postage plus the United States inland postage for carrying United States mails. Foreign vessels received the sea postage only.

In 1864 a bill was introduced authorizing the payment by the United States of $150,000 per annum for a monthly steamship service between Rio de Janeiro and a United States port north of the Potomac River, on condition that Brazil pay $100,000 for the service. This bill became a law in August, 1869, and subsequently a contract was made with the United States and Brazil Mail Steamship Company for a monthly service between New York and Rio de Janeiro. The line continued for ten years, costing the two Governments $2,500,000, of which the United States paid $1,500,000. Afterwards the subsidy was withdrawn and the company suspended operations.

On February 16, 1865, Congress enacted a law authorizing a subsidy of $500,000 a year for a monthly service to Japan and China, via Hawaii, and a contract was entered into with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for the service to the Orient. In the session of 1866 and 1867 Congress released the company from the obligation of stopping at Hawaii on the way to China and Japan, and during the same session voted a subsidy of $75,000 for a distinct service to Hawaii, which was to be taken over by the California, Oregon, and Mexico line.

In 1872 the Pacific Mail Company offered to run another monthly service to China and Japan for an additional $500,000 a year. With some difficulty a bill authorizing such a contract was passed by Congress on June 1, 1872, but in 1874, for good and sufficient reasons not necessary here to relate, the new contract was abrogated by the Government. In 1873 the service to the Sandwich Islands was given up by the California, Oregon and Mexico Company. It had lasted six years and had cost the Government $425,000. The first contract with the Pacific Mail Company for the Japan and China service expired in 1877. It had received from the Government during the ten years of its contract $4,583,333.33. On July 27, 1868, the President approved an act giving to the Commercial Navigation Company, of New York, the monopoly for fifteen years of carrying all European mails weekly or semiweekly to Queenstown, Southampton, and Bremen. The vessels, seven in number, were to be built of iron in the United States. The company was to receive the inland and sea postage until they should amount to $400,000, after which it was to receive sea postage only until up to a limit of $600,000. But the Postmaster-General refused to make the contract, on the ground that it was against all reason to reduce the mails from four a week to two.

Congress took no further action until the enactment of the law in 1891, which is now in force.

Having to some extent presented the primary reason for the extension of the present law, it is believed that the stipulation of $2 per statute mile is wholly inadequate to maintain an American postal service over the longer and more costly routes to the chief ports of South America and the Orient, and this has been fully demonstrated by the inability of the Post-Office Department to establish under the present law and under the second class an American line of American ships to these ports. There is obvious reason for this failure. In the first place, it costs more to construct an American ship. Then, again, the restrictions which the law of 1891 provides, and of which I do not complain, have added very materially to the maintenance of American ships manned with American officers and with American crews. It has been ascertained that the profits of an American ship with a tonnage of approximately 3,500 tons, as compared with a German ship of the same tonnage on the same route, made a difference of $15,315 per annum in favor of the German ship, and also that the profits of an American ship with a tonnage of 2,500 tons, as compared with a British ship of the same tonnage on the same route, made a difference of $18,289.68 per annum in favor of the British ship. It will be readily seen that unless we increase this subsidy we can not expect to obtain American ships in this service.

But aside from the fact that we pay more for material and higher wages in the construction of our ships and to our sailors, we are up against the subsidies of foreign governments, which are far in excess of our subsidies. This takes out of consideration the element of intelligence, skill, industry, and thrift which the American people possess and makes the want of governmental action the cause of this failure.

Now, it may be asked what will be the cost of this service. My answer is that it would depend largely upon the bids which the Postmaster-General may receive. He may decline to pay $4 per mile if by competition he can get a cheaper service. However, making an estimate for the maximum amount which could be paid and at the rate of $4.60 per nautical mile for a fortnightly service to Rio de Janeiro, Buenos Ayres, and Manila, over two routes across the Pacific, one via Hawaii, one direct, and a service once in three weeks from the Pacific coast to Australasia, equal to twenty-six voyages in a year, as contemplated by this amendment, would be as follows:

	Nautical miles.	Amount.
Atlantic or Gulf coast to Rio de Janeiro	5,000	$598,000
Atlantic or Gulf coast to Buenos Ayres	6,000	717,000
Pacific coast via Hawaii to Japan, China, and the Philippines	7,800	932,880
Pacific coast direct to Japan, China, and the Philippines	6,500	777,400
Pacific coast via Hawaii to Australasia	7,300	604,440
Total		3,630,320

From this expenditure must be substracted the present expenditure for carrying our ocean mail in foreign ships to South America and in noncontract ships on the Pacific Ocean, amounting to $188,511.67, so far as ascertained.

If this bill should pass this session of Congress, then, during the fiscal year of 1909, about $1,031,000 can be made available for immediate extension of the mail service between the Pacific coast, Hawaii, Samoa, Australasia, and between the Pacific coast, Hawaii, China, Japan, and the Philippine Islands. For these purposes the Australia line would require, in round figures, $600,000, and the line to the Philippines $431,000. When in full operation, which is not possible before January 1, 1910, owing to the time required for the construction of new ships for this purpose, there will have been constructed at least twenty new, large, and costly ocean mail steamships, at a cost upward of $32,000,000, and there will be in operation on the routes proposed by this legislation at least twenty-seven ships, and under the act of 1891, including the amendment, forty-nine ships.

Mr. Chairman, it is a remarkable fact that notwithstanding our faulty ocean mail service the Government of the United States has made out of it a large profit, and I was agreeably surprised to learn that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, the net profits over the cost of carrying the mails at sea amounted to $3,637,226.81, exclusive of the receipts from Canada and Mexico.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman tell the committee how that balance is arrived at, and what, if any, of the cost of transporting the mails to the ships is figured in?

Mr. GOEBEL. It is not figured in at all.

Mr. SHERLEY. In other words, the gentleman has a balance there that is simply arrived at by taking the postage paid for carriage both on land and sea, and then subtracted the expense of the sea carriage only.

Mr. GOEBEL. That is the gentleman's conclusion.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is not that the fact?

Mr. GOEBEL. It is not the fact.

Mr. SHERLEY. What is the fact? Let the committee have the fact.

Mr. GOEBEL. I will at the proper time give the gentleman the facts.

And it would appear that there is a fixed increasing result, as is shown from the following figures:

Year.	Receipts.	Cost.	Surplus.
1907	$6,579,043.48	$2,941,816.67	$3,637,226.81
1906	6,008,807.53	2,965,624.21	3,043,183.32
1905	4,711,215.03	2,670,798.43	2,040,416.60
1904	5,095,389.18	2,516,053.06	2,579,336.12
1903	4,991,974.54	2,383,588.80	2,608,385.74
1902	3,737,318.57	2,245,625.55	1,491,692.02
1901	3,005,323.61	2,062,537.16	942,786.45
1900	3,467,139.26	2,014,537.93	1,452,601.30

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman permit another interruption? Can the gentleman tell the committee how much more it would have been if the trans-Atlantic mails had been carried at competitive contract price instead of the subsidy price contained under the act of 1891?

Mr. GOEBEL. I can not, because I have not gone into that subject-matter.

It would also appear that the weight of letters and postal cards sent out of the United States by sea increased from 974,000 pounds in 1900 to 1,815,000 pounds in 1906, or 86 per cent. The weight of other mail articles, newspapers, books, samples, etc., increased from 7,351,000 pounds in 1900 to 12,306,000 pounds in 1907, or 67 per cent. Comparing these figures with Great Britain it would appear that the weight of letters and postal cards sent out of the United Kingdom increased from 1,618,000 pounds in 1900 to 3,166,000 in 1906, or over 95 per cent. The weight of other mail articles increased from 15,745,000 pounds in 1900 to 25,324,000 in 1906, or 61 per cent. Ocean transportation of foreign mails in England differs from that of the United States in that nearly half of the volume of British foreign mails is sent only across the 23 miles of sea which hardly keep Dover on a clear day out of sight of Calais, while American mails for Europe cross 3,000 miles of salt water.

As the ocean mail service of the United States is a branch of the Post-Office Department, and it having during the last fiscal year turned into the Treasury a profit of $3,637,226, it would seem from a governmental standpoint to be wise that this amount be used for improving and extending that service; and it also appears that this profit would be sufficient to carry out the extension contemplated by this bill, with a strong probability that when in full operation there would be a large profit. But in no event will the Government be called upon to contribute any additional sums.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman permit another inquiry?

Mr. GOEBEL. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Assuming the gentleman's premises to be true, that we should expend the profits we get from ocean carrying mails, ought not we to accurately find out what that profit is, and charge up to the carrying of the mail all the expenses?

Mr. GOEBEL. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman's figures, from his own statement, do not include as an expense or debit item anything other than the cost of the mail transportation on the ocean, and do not take into consideration the cost of maintaining the postal service and the transportation of the mails from the mailing point to the ocean.

Mr. GOEBEL. I wish I had time to answer the gentleman's question fully and as to how these figures are arrived at; but I have not time now. However, before we come to consider this bill, or when we do, I shall gladly give to the gentleman the figures, and tell him how we arrive at the profits.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not of course mean to embarrass the gentleman, and I will not interrupt again.

Mr. GOEBEL. Mr. Chairman, if this be true, then in the general acceptance of the term this would not be a "subsidy," since the money earned furnished the means to defray the expenditure incurred by the service.

I come now to the consideration of what is known as the "naval feature" in the original act. This was strongly urged by the President of the United States and by the several Departments of the Government as one of the reasons for the enactment of this bill. I was somewhat concerned as to the additional expense which might accure to the shipowner in order to comply with this feature. Upon a careful investigation, however, I find that the additional expense in that regard is but a trifle and would not materially enter into the bidding for a contract to carry the mails. In other words, it would not as a distinct element be taken into consideration by the contractor in making a bid for carrying the mails.

Since, therefore, there would be no additional cost to the Government and compliance with the naval feature of the bill by the shipowner could only be of additional benefit to the Government, and that, too, irrespective as to what view we may take, were it a separate proposition and it were sought to increase our naval forces. As to increasing our Navy I have decided views, not in accord with the views of the Administration, but that is entirely immaterial to this discussion. While the President urges as one of the reasons the benefits which might accrue from the "naval feature" of the original act, I do not urge this measure upon that ground or make it the sole reason, but rather that a compliance can do no possible harm and may be of much benefit.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have endeavored to present in a humble way my reasons for the extension of our ocean mail service, and have endeavored to give the facts upon which I pin my faith. I have endeavored to treat the proposition from a governmental standpoint, having in view the duty and obligations which the Post-Office Department of this great Government owes to itself, bearing particularly upon its functions and for which it was created. And you will agree with me that one of its functions, at least, is to secure to our citizens the quickest and most regular dispatch of foreign mails, and you will also agree with me that in the performance of this plain duty our Government ought not to be compelled to resort to foreign agencies, and thereby put ourselves under the protection of foreign flags. I have also endeavored to show that this proposition does not involve a "subsidy" in the ordinary sense of that term, from which there may be some political reproach.

I think I know the sentiment of this House on the general proposition of subsidies. To some degree I share it. If I have failed, however, to convince you, my colleagues, that this is not a "subsidy" then I shall attribute it to inability on my part to make myself fully understood, and not to the weakness of the cause for which I plead. And what I shall say bearing on the ship industry of this country and our foreign commerce, I beg of you not to consider it in connection with a "subsidy" proposition.

I have said that if you pass this bill, upward of $32,000,000 will be expended in the construction of new ships. Think of it! American money, paid to American laborers. Do you object? Is the extension of the ocean mail service to be defeated forsooth because it will rehabilitate and revive the shipbuilding industry of our country? Are you willing to deprive the American people of additional benefits that will flow as a "result," by defeating a measure offered for a better mail service and which otherwise would come by passing this bill? Why, sir, there was a time when American ships carried 91 per cent of our sea-borne commerce to the world. To-day the position of the United States as an ocean carrying power is insignificant in comparison with other leading nations, and it is sad to relate that very few American steamships are seen in the world's seaports outside the Caribbean and the Gulf of Mexico. Last year we carried but 10.6 per cent of the combined exports and imports in American ships. Our vessels registered for foreign trade only 871,146 gross tons. Do you know that one foreign shipping corporation operating a fleet equaled in tonnage the entire amount of tonnage registered under the American flag? Are you willing that this shall continue? By passing this measure you will put on the routes proposed twenty new ships, which will make a total of forty-nine ships of the second class sailing to South America and across the Pacific Ocean. They will be American ships, built by Americans, manned by Americans, carrying America's foreign mails and freight, and over these vessels will float the American flag symbolical of the hope and pride and strength of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I am going to deliver a few remarks in connection with the postal service. When I first came to this body, eleven years ago, I was, fortunately for myself, placed on the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, one of the greatest committees, in my opinion, in the House of Representatives. I became associated there from the very beginning with seventeen of the very best men on both sides of this House. There are only three members now on that committee who were members of it when I was assigned to membership thereon. There are only three others in the House who were members of the committee when I became a member. It has changed very much in personnel. It has not changed, however, in ability, strength, force, and character. I had the pleasure of serving under two chairmen of that committee during ten years, one a jewel in the rough, a man who sometimes, it was thought, expressed his opinions a little too frankly and a little too boldly, but a man who was recognized by every Member of the House at that time as one of the strongest and most courageous men in any legislative body in the world. A gentleman once said of him here that "the bark was rough, but the heart was sound." We all regretted the change when he, having retired from Congress, was succeeded by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET]. The truth is, we all thought we knew more about the postal service than he could possibly ever learn. [Laughter.]

But it soon came to us older members of the committee that we had lost nothing by the change and that the gentleman who now presides in such a distinguished and able manner over this great committee is the equal of perhaps any man who ever served on it. My friends and myself on that committee have had many contests over many questions. I freely and candidly admit that oftener I was mistaken and the gentlemen with whom I had the contests were right. There were a great many questions on which they guessed better than I did. [Laughter.] I confess that I am leaving the committee with great regret. Of course everybody knows I was forced to go on that great committee which was literally kicked upstairs the other day. [Laughter.] The Fifty-fourth Congress appropriated $40,000 for experiments with free rural delivery. The Fifty-fifth Congress proposed $50,000 a year for rural free delivery. I am not now going to trench on the preserves of any gentlemen. Many men believe themselves the fathers of the rural free-delivery service. I am not a candidate for the fatherhood of any service. It is true, as stated in a speech by my colleague [Mr. HARDWICK] some years ago, that Mr. Watson of Georgia obtained the first appropriation for this service. This happened one afternoon when, like almost every day this session, our friends on the other side of the aisle were merrily killing time with perfect harmony of tune and unity of action. Several of us were making claims as to the value of our services to our country. The gentleman from Georgia, my colleague [Mr. HARDWICK], offered some remarks about myself, which I hope I may quote with becoming modesty:

"We have all, Mr. Chairman, arrived at the point where we fully recognize and universally concede the great benefits that have come to the people of this country from rural free delivery. Consequently, Mr. Chairman, a number of gentlemen have sprung up who are not quite so frank as was my colleague from Georgia [Mr. GRIGGS], who addressed the committee before me this afternoon and who claimed more than he did, namely, that he is the stepfather of this great system."
